Joel Ehrendreich was my consular general to Okinawa and did a fantastic job. He is now here before us today to be, hopefully, our next U.S. Ambassador to Palau. So it is my great honor to introduce him and thank you for giving me the opportunity to do so.

Throughout Joel's impressive 20-year career he has held significant positions in Tokyo, New Delhi, Singapore, Manila, and Sydney, and he has been the foreign policy adviser to someone whom we both admire greatly, General Neller, who was commandant of the Marine Corps and I had the great pleasure to work with in a prior life.

All of this experience, I believe, has imbued Joel with a deep understanding of the regional dynamics of the Indo-Pacific and I feel certain that Joel is going to do a tremendous job if he is confirmed.

As I mentioned, I had the pleasure of working with Joel when I served as U.S. Ambassador to Japan and he served as consular general to Okinawa. In working together Joel and I handled a number of highly sensitive diplomatic issues related to our military presence in Okinawa related to the strategic positioning of Okinawa and, frankly, relative to the CCP's pressure on Okinawa.

In each case Joel demonstrated himself, as he has throughout his career, to be adept both at protecting and advancing America's national security interests abroad.

In fact, Joel was the first person to suggest that my family and I attend the Hiroshima Peace Memorial Ceremony. It is a very important statement that we made as America and I appreciate Joel's sensitivity to that issue and him bringing it to my attention.

Most recently as the director of the State Department's Office of Japanese Affairs within the Bureau of East Asia and Pacific Affairs Joel is involved in negotiating—in negotiations that are aimed at strengthening and modernizing the alliance as Japan's government pursues new national security strategies and an increased investment in defense.

During the course of his career Joel has received numerous prestigious awards including the Rivkin Award for constructive dissent. Joel has also demonstrated a special knack for baseball diplomacy. I have seen this in action.

Notably, he organized the first ever Embassy Diet baseball game, forming a team with U.S. generals in Okinawa. He established a Little League team in India and even served as an umpire for the Little League Asia Pacific qualifying tournament in Manila during 2013 and 2014.

I know that Joel loves the Milwaukee Brewers and Joel was quite pleased to inform me that the Brewers' AAA team is our very own Nashville Sounds in Nashville, Tennessee, my home state.

Joel's passion for baseball is also evident in his sons' names, Cooper and Calvin, who are respectively named for Cooperstown and Cal Ripken with each of their middle names paying tribute to the legendary Jackie Robinson.

I hope today that the committee will come to know Joel as I do, as someone who brings solid and relevant experience, as someone with a track record of achieving results for our country and as someone—someone who will lead on the field if he is confirmed to serve as America's ambassador to Palau.

Palau's location in the Western Pacific Ocean holds significant strategic importance given the CCP's aggressive moves in the region. It is situated at the crossroads of major maritime routes. Palau serves as a critical gateway between Asia and the Americas.

I know Joel will diligently work to deepen U.S.-Palau defense and economic cooperation under the Compact of Free Association, especially at this critical time for U.S. national security in the Indo-Pacific, and from my personal experience I believe Joel will make an outstanding ambassador.

So I urge you all in joining me to support his confirmation today. Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Senator Hagerty. Welcome, Mr. Ehrendreich.

And now I am going to introduce some of our other nominees who are here today until our other colleagues arrive.

And, Cynthia Kierscht, congratulations on being nominated as Ambassador to the Republic of Djibouti. Ms. Kierscht is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service. She serves as ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania, and Ambassador Kierscht was previously deputy assistant secretary in the State Department's Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs and the director of the bureau's Office of Canadian Affairs.

She has served across Africa in embassies from Rabat to Cairo and the newly established U.S. interest section in Tripoli. Her career has also taken her to Bogota in Colombia where she held positions—such positions as deputy management counselor, cultural affairs officer, and coordinator for the Summit of the Americas.

Welcome, Ambassador Kierscht, and we look forward to your testimony once all the introductions are complete.

Next, let me introduce Mark Libby. Mark Libby has been nominated to be our American Ambassador to Azerbaijan. He is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service.

He serves as a State Department faculty advisor at the National War College in Washington. Previously, he was deputy chief of mission and charges d'affaires at the U.S. mission to the European Union in Brussels.

He has also served as a political counselor at our embassies in Warsaw, Nassau, Nicosia, and Baghdad. Here in Washington he has served as a watch stander and later deputy director for crisis management in the State Department Operations Center. I had an opportunity to visit it briefly just last week.

He has also served as director of the Office—the deputy director in the Office of Central European Affairs, director of the Office of Southern European Affairs, director of orientation at the Foreign Service Institute, as well as spending time on the State Department secretariat staff. Welcome, Mr. Libby.

Now, since we do not have our other members here yet they are going to be free to say a few words when they arrive but I am going to go ahead and introduce the other members who are here.

Let me begin with you, Nisha Desai Biswal, who was nominated—has been nominated by the President to serve as deputy CEO of the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation.

She has over 30 years of foreign policy and international development experience, having served in roles across the executive branch, Congress, and the private sector.

She currently serves as the senior vice president for international strategy and global initiatives at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce where she oversees the U.S.-India Business Council and U.S.-Bangladesh Business Council.

She served—previously served as assistant secretary for South Asia and Central Asian Affairs at the State Department from 2013 to 2017, and during her tenure as assistant secretary she initiated the C5+1 Dialogue with Central Asia and the U.S.-Bangladesh Partnership Dialogue. Welcome, Ms. Biswal.

Next, we have Mr. Edgard Kagan, who is nominated to serve as our Ambassador to Malaysia. He is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service class of minister-counselor. He currently serves as special assistant to the President and senior director for East Asia and Oceania at the National Security Council.

His career has taken him to U.S. embassies in New Delhi and Kuala Lumpur where he served as deputy chief of mission. He has also served overseas in Australia, China, Israel, Hungary, and Cote d'Ivoire.

Prior to his deputy chief of mission roles he served as deputy assistant secretary for Australia, New Zealand, and the Pacific in the State Department's Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, and as counsel general at the U.S. Consulate General in Mumbai, India.

He was also deputy director of the Washington office of the U.S. mission to the United Nations and director of Korean affairs and acting deputy assistant secretary for Japan and Korea in the Bureau of East Asia and Pacific Affairs.

So welcome to all of you. I think I have—everyone has been introduced now. So why do I not turn it over to all of you for your testimony, beginning with Ambassador Kierscht?

STATEMENT OF HON. CYNTHIA KIERSCHT, OF MINNESOTA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF DJIBOUTI

Ms. KIERSCHT. Chairman Van Hollen, Ranking Member Romney, distinguished Members of the Committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Biden's nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Djibouti.

I am grateful to the President and the Secretary of State for the confidence they have placed in me with this nomination.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with this committee and with the Congress more broadly to advance American interests in Djibouti.

Mr. Chairman, I would first like to express my gratitude for the love and support of my family, friends, and colleagues throughout my career.

In particular, I would like to recognize my mother, Dr. Marcia Kierscht, here with me today, who has been an excellent role model, best friend, and who has visited me at every post, and my late grandmother, Cynthia Selland, who was a North Dakota public school teacher for 45 years, taught geography, from whom I no doubt got much inspiration for this journey.

I am also grateful for the love and support of my brother, Matthew, and his family, Brenda and Kennedy, and to the great team at U.S. Embassy Nouakchott who are streaming this live at the Embassy. My deepest thanks for your support.

It has been my honor and privilege for more than 32 years of public service to represent the American people, protect American citizens, and promote American interests overseas as a career member of the Foreign Service.

If confirmed, I will proudly lead our interagency team in Djibouti on behalf of the United States, leveraging my experience in North Africa and the Sahel in Egypt, Libya, Tunisia, Algeria, Morocco, and most recently as U.S. Ambassador to Mauritania.

Djibouti holds significant strategic importance for the United States. Its location at the mouth of the Red Sea makes it the trade and humanitarian gateway for the Horn of Africa.

Djibouti has been a key partner in U.S. efforts to improve security and stability in the region, including hosting Camp Lemonnier, the U.S. military's only enduring presence on the African continent.

Our military presence in Djibouti is particularly critical to ensuring the safety of our missions in Africa as recently illustrated by the successful evacuation of U.S. Embassy staff from Sudan.

Djibouti has been a strong partner to the United States in upholding the rules-based international order at the United Nations and in other multilateral fora and, as host of the Intergovernmental Authority for Development, Djibouti plays a leading role in the region.

Djibouti is also a key location for the United States to work with strategic partners in Africa and the Western Indian Ocean to counter efforts by other nations, such as the People's Republic of China, to undermine the rules-based order.

If confirmed, I will work hand in hand with the full spectrum of the U.S. government to protect American national security interests in Djibouti.

Over the past several years Djibouti has faced economic headwinds from the pandemic, the disruption to global shipping, the conflict in northern Ethiopia, and the resulting reduction in trade through Djibouti's ports and the historic drought affecting millions in the region.

The Djiboutian people have shown remarkable resilience in the face of these multiple crises, and in spite of these challenges the economy is showing potential, driven by the Djiboutian government's strategy to diversify and engage private sector-led growth.

If confirmed, I am committed to working with the U.S. private sector and government colleagues to support Djibouti's sustainable development and provide U.S. alternatives to investment by our strategic competitors.

Mr. Chairman, protecting U.S. national security and advancing our interests in the region requires a secure, prosperous, and democratic Djibouti.

If confirmed, I am committed to working with the U.S. agencies and likeminded allies to promote the ideals of good governance, including in advance of its 2026 presidential elections.

The United States has enjoyed a strong relationship with the republic of Djibouti for decades and I see potential for even stronger ties as we work together towards a more secure, prosperous, and democratic future for all.

If confirmed, I will work with the Embassy team to build on their efforts to partner with the Djiboutians to advance regional peace and security, support sustainable economic development, strengthen democratic institutions and promote good governance, while ensuring critical access and influence for our broader regional security efforts.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and Members of the Committee, thank you for considering my nomination. I welcome your questions.

Djibouti holds significant strategic importance for the United States. Its location at the mouth of the Red Sea, through which 12 percent of all global trade passes, makes it the trade and humanitarian gateway for the Horn of Africa. Djibouti has been a key partner in U.S. efforts to improve security and stability in the region, including hosting Camp Lemonnier, the U.S. military's only enduring presence on the African continent. The Djiboutian people have shown remarkable resilience in the face of multiple crises, and despite these challenges, the economy continues to show potential, driven by the Djiboutian Government's strategy to diversify and engage private sector-led growth. Djibouti is already a key international telecommunications hub as a landing point for numerous undersea cables, hosts the best port infrastructure in the region, and has significant and untapped renewable energy potential. If confirmed, I am committed to working with the U.S. private sector and government colleagues to support Djibouti's sustainable development and provide U.S. alternatives to investment by our strategic competitors.

Protecting U.S. national security and advancing our interests in the region requires a secure, prosperous, and democratic Djibouti. If confirmed, I am committed to working with the U.S. agencies and like-minded allies to promote the ideals of good governance and political freedom in Djibouti, including in advance of its 2026 presidential elections. Djibouti is also a major transit point for migrants. If confirmed, I will work with Djiboutian officials to seek ways to assist and protect vulnerable migrants, especially to combat trafficking in persons.

The United States has enjoyed a strong relationship with the Republic of Djibouti for decades and I see potential for even stronger ties, as we work together towards a more secure, prosperous, and democratic future for all. If confirmed, I will work with the Embassy country team to build on their efforts to partner with the Djiboutians to advance regional peace and security, support sustainable economic development, strengthen democratic institutions, and promote good governance, while ensuring critical access and influence for our broader regional security efforts.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and Members of the committee, thank you for considering my nomination. I welcome your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you for your statement.

Mr. Ehrendreich?

STATEMENT OF JOEL EHRENDREICH, OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF PALAU

Mr. EHRENDREICH. Chairman Van Hollen, Ranking Member Romney, Members of the Committee, good afternoon. I am honored to appear before you today and grateful for the confidence shown by the President and Secretary Blinken in nominating me to be Ambassador to the Republic of Palau.

I want to give a special thank you to Senator Hagerty, someone who I greatly admired as ambassador and whose mentorship I am grateful for. You honored me, Senator, Ambassador, with that introduction.

I would also like to take a moment to thank my loved ones who are here today, my sons Cooper and Calvin, both of whom I am so proud of and who have brought me joy every day of their lives, and happy birthday, Calvin; my daughter-in-law Nada, who has been a wonderful addition to the family, and our newest wonderful addition, our grandson, Zayn; and, of course, Rachel, my wife of 33 years, my love, my soul mate, the person who makes me a better person.

I also want to thank my brother, Josh, my in-laws, Jackie and Scott Alter, my mother-in-law, Janice McClelland. I am truly blessed to have so many wonderful people in my life.

And here I am also compelled to try to right a wrong in my official nomination bio. It mentioned where I was born—Omaha, Nebraska—but it left out where I grew up and the place that I still consider home to this day, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. So a shout out to the town I love and to all of my friends there.

And if I could add just one special request from my fellow Whitefish Bay High School alum, Milwaukee Brewers manager Craig Counsell, if you could sprinkle just a little extra of that magic on the Brewers this season I would love it just one time before I die to know what it feels like to cheer for the World Series champion.

[Laughter.]

Senator VAN HOLLEN. All right.

Mr. EHRENDREICH. Senators, a couple weeks ago when we concluded the 2023 Compact Review Agreement with Palau, Palau's President Surangel Whipps said on his Facebook page, "God bless Palau, God bless the United States of America, God bless us all."

I share President Whipps' enthusiasm for our partnership and potential for our future. I believe the United States and Palau have a real convergence of interests at this time, and if confirmed, I am eager to continue to advance our special relationship.

To do so, I would first turn to our National Security Strategy and Indo-Pacific strategy. These documents describe in no uncertain terms that the United States faces unprecedented challenges from the People's Republic of China.

We have seen that while the PRC's provocative actions span the globe, they are most acute in the Indo-Pacific. The strategies highlight the importance of enhancing our relationships with allies and partners to include a specific focus on deepening ties with Pacific Island countries.

Regarding the 2023 Compact Review Agreement, I urge Congress to quickly take up the relevant implementing legislation, appropriate funds, and allow for the entry into force of the agreement.

If confirmed, I would work to ensure both sides live up to the obligations made in the new agreement, which will enhance our relationship for the next 20 years and beyond.

I would also point to our Embassy's integrated country strategy, which cites the need to address Palau's top priority, the existential threat from rising sea levels and increasing natural disasters.

The people of Palau are counting on their partner, the United States, and the international community to unite with them in confronting this challenge.

If confirmed, I would continue to work closely with the government of Palau and others to support disaster preparedness and response.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, Members of the Committee, thank you again for your consideration and the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to your questions and comments.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Ehrendreich. And while you have something in your prayers can you put a plug in for the Orioles, too?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. All right. Mr. Libby?

STATEMENT OF MARK W. LIBBY, OF MASSACHUSETTS, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF AZERBAIJAN

Mr. LIBBY. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Romney, distinguished Members of the Committee, I appreciate the confidence President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed in me by nominating me to be the next U.S. Ambassador to Azerbaijan and it is a great privilege to appear before you today.

If I am confirmed I pledge to work closely with this committee and with all members of Congress to advance U.S. interests in and with Azerbaijan.

I first would like to introduce my wife, Dinousha, who joins me as we celebrate our 26th wedding anniversary this summer. Polish by birth, a naturalized U.S. citizen, Dinousha is an American by choice.

She inspires me with her patriotism through decades of behind the scenes public service, training U.S. diplomats in some of the world's most strategically important foreign languages.

She is a wonderful mother to our wonderful son, Andrew, who is also here today together with his partner, Sophie Prager.

Missing today are my father, Pete, who died 12 years ago, my sister Diane, brother Steven and mom, Marjorie. Their love has sustained me throughout my life.

I would also like to acknowledge the teams at Georgetown University Hospital here in Washington and the Dana Farber Cancer Institute in Boston. They have cured me of disease repeatedly since I was 20 years old and I literally owe them my life. Thanks to them I am able to be here today and I have been able to serve my country for so many years.

All U.S. diplomats have a core duty to protect American citizens and if I am confirmed that will be my top priority. In my three decades of public service I have seen the persistence of and sacrifices made by U.S. Foreign Service, civil service, military, and other interagency partners and by our locally engaged staff.

As you pointed out, Mr. Chairman, these dedicated colleagues often face danger and hardship to safeguard their fellow Americans and to pursue U.S. national interests.

If I am confirmed it will be the honor of a lifetime to lead the team at Embassy Baku in pursuit of those same goals. If confirmed I will also support U.S. efforts to facilitate a just and sustainable peace agreement between Azerbaijan and Armenia.

This tragic conflict has produced a bitter legacy of pain and mistrust. I know many members of this committee have concerns about Azerbaijan. I share and understand them.

Solving issues of territorial integrity, sovereignty, and the rights and securities of everyone in the region, including those residing in Nagorno-Karabakh, is vital to any durable and dignified peace.

There is no military solution to this conflict and the U.S. must continue to condemn violence or threats of violence. But with the help of the United States and of our European partners the parties are closer than ever to reaching an agreement and if I am confirmed I commit to help to get them there through active and persistent engagement in Baku.

But signing a peace deal is only the first step. If I am confirmed I will lead Embassy Baku's interagency team to support the implementation of an eventual settlement. Successful implementation of a peace agreement would pave the way for deeper ties between the U.S. and Azerbaijan that will stabilize the region and thwart hostile competitors who seek to expand their malign influence by capitalizing on conflict.

A peace deal would allow us to take to the next level much of what already works well in our relationship with Azerbaijan. Cooperation in counterterrorism, border security, energy security, and maritime security serves the U.S. national interest in security.

If confirmed, I will redouble our efforts in these areas. I will seek to foster further economic development and create more numerous and diverse opportunities for U.S. companies to compete and generate jobs at home.

Democracy and human rights are core to U.S. foreign policy not just because they reflect our values but because they have proven to be the best foundation for peace and prosperity.

If confirmed, I pledge to engage in a respectful but very frank dialogue with a wide range of Azerbaijani leaders and citizens and to advocate persistently for those values, rights, and freedoms in Azerbaijan and in the wider region.

If confirmed, I will work in full and open consultation with this committee, which has shown such leadership advancing our values and interests in this complex region.

I commit to cooperation with you to advance our goals of a stable, democratic, peaceful, and prosperous Azerbaijan that is a strategic partner to the United States.

Thank you for your time and I look forward to your questions.

It also would pave the way for deeper ties between the United States and Azerbaijan that will stabilize the region and thwart hostile competitors seeking to expand their malign influence by capitalizing on the conflict.

A peace deal would allow us to take to the next level much of what already works well in our relationship with Azerbaijan. Cooperation with Azerbaijan in counterterrorism and border, energy, and maritime security is noteworthy and serves the U.S. national interest. If confirmed, I will redouble our efforts in these areas.

Energy is of particular importance. Cooperation with Azerbaijan has brought more energy to market, helping our European partners diversify sources and routes away from Russia and stabilizing global supply. If confirmed, I will seek to foster further economic development and create even more numerous and diverse opportunities for U.S. companies to compete and generate jobs at home.

Democracy and human rights are core to U.S. foreign policy - not just because they reflect our values, but because they are the best foundation for peace and prosperity. I commit to cooperation with you to advance our goal of a stable, democratic, peaceful, and prosperous Azerbaijan that is a strategic partner to the United States.

Thank you for considering my nomination, and I look forward to your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Libby. I see we have been joined by Senator Warner and Senator Kaine, who is a member of the committee.

Senator Warner is here to say a few words on behalf of Ms. Desai Biswal and, Senator, we have gone through the bios of all of our nominees and so we understand their credentials.

But we would love to have some personal testimony as why you think this nominee is important to the country.

STATEMENT OF HON. MARK R. WARNER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA

Senator WARNER. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I apologize. Senator Kaine and I were away on another issue that you care very dearly about as well and we were standing up for your interests.

And I would not, though, have been if I had realized, I have to tell you that—Senator Romney on this subcommittee was actually ranking member—I would have never been late. That matter would have been put aside.

So we have got a very distinguished group of nominees here. Nisha I have known literally for years. I have known her when she worked in the Obama administration and had the expertise to deal with all of the issues around South Asia, her prior time at AID and American Red Cross.

She brings a distinguished governmental career but she also brings enormous activities. Probably where I got to know her the most was when she went over on the business side and worked for USIBC.

Matter of fact, Senator Cornyn and I, we were still the co-chairs of the India Caucus, the largest single country caucus in the Senate, 42 members, bipartisan.

Nisha did a great, great job at USIBC and so I can recommend her without reservation and particularly because I think the position she is nominated for as being—helping our friend, Scott Nathan, over at DFC.

DFC, I think, is one of the real assets we have, particularly as we compete against China on issues like Belt and Road and others.

We cannot simply do it with military and other supports. We have to have a strong active international finance organization that can go toe to toe with—against Belt and Road and against other initiatives.

We all know our country on a per capita basis does much, much smaller than most other first world nations and Nisha will bring that combination of both business side, AID side. She started her career at the American Red Cross. She served in the administration.

No one is better situated for this position. I just met with the senior leadership of DFC last week as we look at some of this technology competition. There are a host of deals and areas that they are trying to pursue that Nisha would add value day one.

So I hope—not only do I recommend her but I hope the committee will act with great speed in moving her through and I know she will have—I have talked to a number of folks who have dealt with her as well in the past—broad bipartisan support.

With that I will defer to my colleague, Senator Kaine, who is here for somebody else but he was going to put a—you are going to put a good word in for Nisha as well, are you not, Tim?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Senator Warner.
Senator Kaine.

STATEMENT OF HON. TIM KAINE,
U.S. SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA

Senator KAINE. Well, I guess I better put in a good word for Nisha. No, we have worked together very well and I am strongly supportive. Echo what Senator Warner said.

I was asked to say a few words about another proud Virginian, Edgard Kagan, who is nominated to be the Ambassador to Malaysia, and, Mr. Chair, mindful of the notion that you have already gone through the bio, just really quickly, I mean, this is a tremendously talented public servant who has already served once in Malaysia as DCM, as well as DCM in India.

He currently is the senior director for East Asia and Oceania at the National Security Council at the White House and he is the kind of person that makes me feel like a complete underachiever in life because he is a recipient of a presidential meritorious award, speaks French, Mandarin Chinese, Hungarian, Spanish—not the easiest languages to master.

But he has—the challenges of trying to deal with China in the region are very, very significant and Malaysia can be very critical in helping us deal with those challenges and that is what he has been doing already. So he is eminently qualified for the post and I am glad to say a word on his behalf.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Thank you, Senator Kaine. I do want the record to show what deference this Maryland senator showed to my colleagues from the other side of the Potomac River.

With that, Mr. Kagan?

STATEMENT OF EDGARD D. KAGAN, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO MALAYSIA

Mr. KAGAN. Certainly.

Chairman Van Hollen, Ranking Member Romney, distinguished Members of the Committee, thank you so much for the opportunity to appear before you today.

It is an honor to do so as President Biden's nominee for the position of United States Ambassador to Malaysia, and I am grateful to the President and to Secretary Blinken for their confidence.

I am also grateful to State Department colleagues past and present who have given me a lifelong education in diplomacy and public service.

I have spent 32 years in the Foreign Service, 14 of which were representing the United States in the Indo-Pacific. But across the six administrations in which I have served I have seen the critical role of cooperation and alignment with Congress.

If confirmed, I commit to working with you and the Congress as a whole to advance U.S. strategic interests in Malaysia, ASEAN, and the Indo-Pacific.

I am so happy to be accompanied today by my family. My mother, Peggy Kagan is here, joined by my sister, Dr. Isabelle Kagan, both visiting from Lexington, Kentucky. Also here are my wife, Cynthia Gire, and my children, Marshall, Anne-Sophie, and Daniel.

They have shared the challenges, pleasures, and opportunities of living in six cities in five countries on three continents. For our children that has meant attending nine schools. I am far luckier than I deserve and could not be here today without their love, support, and forbearance.

Sadly, my father, Jacques Kagan, passed away last year. He would have been so proud to have seen this day.

I became familiar with Malaysia when I served there as deputy chief of mission from 2014 to 2017. If confirmed, I would look forward to building on our strong relationship in several key areas.

First, we are one of Malaysia's largest foreign investors and our bilateral trade last year supported an estimated 58,000 U.S. jobs. If confirmed, I would prioritize further strengthening our economic ties.

Second, the United States and Malaysia work together to combat terrorism and transnational crime and to promote maritime security. I will continue to support these shared priorities, if confirmed.

Third, standing for our values is at the heart of America's global role. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen the rule of law, transparency, good governance, and respect for human rights in Malaysia.

I am particularly concerned about human trafficking, including forced labor and migrant labor—migrant worker rights. I will work with Malaysia on these issues, if confirmed.

None of this, however, can be accomplished without the amazing U.S. Embassy team in Kuala Lumpur. I will make their safety and that of U.S. citizens my highest priority, if confirmed.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, Members of the Committee, the U.S.-Malaysia partnership is strong. I believe it can grow even stronger. If confirmed, working closely with Congress, I will do all I can to strengthen this relationship.

Thank you, and I welcome your questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Kagan follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF EDGARD D. KAGAN

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished Members of the Committee, Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. It is an honor to do so as President Biden's nominee for the position of United States Ambassador to Malaysia. I'm grateful to the President and to Secretary Blinken for their confidence.

I'm also grateful to State Department colleagues, past and present, who have given me a lifelong education in diplomacy and public service. I have spent 32 years in the Foreign Service, 14 of which were representing the United States in the Indo-Pacific. Each post, from New Delhi to Canberra; Beijing to Kuala Lumpur, held its own lessons. But across the six Administrations in which I have served, I have seen the critical role of cooperation and alignment with Congress. If confirmed, I commit to working with you to advance U.S. strategic interests in Malaysia, ASEAN, and the broader Indo-Pacific region.

I am grateful to be accompanied today by my family. My mother, Peggy Kagan, is here, joined by my sister, Isabelle Kagan, both visiting from Lexington, Kentucky. Also here are my wife Cynthia Gire, and children Marshall, Anne-Sophie and Daniel. They have shared the challenges, pleasures, and opportunities of living together in six cities in five countries on three continents. For our children, that meant attending nine schools. I am far luckier than I deserve and could not be here today without their love, support, and forbearance. I particularly want to highlight Anne-Sophie, who is graduating from high school this week. I am so proud of you and so grateful you are here today.

I became familiar with Malaysia, its vibrant multicultural society, dynamic economy, beautiful landscapes, and exceptional people—while serving there as Deputy Chief of Mission from 2014 to 2017. Since its independence in 1957, Malaysia and the United States have forged an enduring partnership based on shared interests and mutual respect. We see the breadth and depth of our relationship in the Comprehensive Partnership between our countries. We see it, too, in our extensive trade and investment relationship, broad security cooperation, and people-to-people ties. If confirmed, I would look forward to building on this foundation in several key areas.

First, we are one of Malaysia's largest foreign investors, and our $79.4 billion of bilateral trade in goods and services last year supported an estimated 58,000 U.S. jobs. Critical to supply chains, especially in semiconductors, Malaysia accounts for 24 percent of U.S. semiconductor trade. Last year, in my capacity as National Security Council Senior Director for East Asia and Oceania, I was proud to work to bring Malaysia on as a founding partner of the Indo-Pacific Economic Framework. If confirmed, I will prioritize further strengthening our economic ties and promoting inclusive and sustainable growth, including in new industries.

Second, our security and law enforcement cooperation with Malaysia has grown. We work together to combat terrorism and transnational crimes, and to promote maritime security. We have also increased our cooperation on cybersecurity. Our countries hold regular military exercises to improve our ability to work together and build capacity. I will continue to support these shared priority areas, if confirmed.

Third, standing up for our values is at the heart of America's global role. If confirmed, I will work to further strengthen the rule of law, transparency, good governance, democracy, and respect for human rights in Malaysia. I am particularly concerned about human trafficking, including forced labor, and migrant worker rights. Following Malaysia's downgrade to Tier 3 in the 2021 Trafficking in Persons Report, we have encouraged Malaysia to significantly increase its efforts to protect victims and hold traffickers and complicit officials accountable. If confirmed, I will work with Malaysia to improve investigations and prosecutions of trafficking allegations, including forced labor, and to increase victim identification and support. I will also work with the Malaysian Government, UNHCR, and civil society to support the nearly 186,000 refugees and asylum-seekers in Malaysia.

None of this, however, can be accomplished without the amazing U.S. Embassy team in Kuala Lumpur. I will make their safety and that of U.S. citizens my highest priority if confirmed.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, Members of this Committee—the U.S.-Malaysia partnership is strong; I believe that it holds potential to grow still stronger. Mounting challenges in the region demand no less. If confirmed, in partnership with Congress, I will do all I can to realize it. Thank you, and I welcome your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. Kagan.
Ms. Biswal?

STATEMENT OF HON. NISHA DESAI BISWAL, OF VIRGINIA, NOMINATED TO BE DEPUTY CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER OF THE UNITED STATES INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT FI-NANCE CORPORATION

Ms. BISWAL. Chairman Van Hollen, Ranking Member Romney, Members of the Committee, thank you so much for this opportunity to appear before you today as the nominee for Deputy CEO of the United States International Development Finance Corporation.

I am deeply honored and humbled by the nomination and grateful for the trust placed in me by the President for this important role.

I particularly want to thank Senator Warner for his friendship and support. Having grown up in Virginia, I consider it my home state and we are blessed to have exceptional leadership in Senator Warner and Senator Kaine.

I am here today with my husband, Subrat—he is my rock and my North Star—our two daughters, Safya and Kaya, who are the light of my life, and my father, Kanu. It is their unflagging belief in me and that of my mother and my in-laws and my extended family that makes all things possible and I am ever grateful for their love.

Our extended family and friends are watching online, and I also want to thank my colleagues at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, both in the room and online, from whom I have learned so much.

I am grateful for the opportunity to return to public service, if confirmed. I learned the importance of service at a very early age from my grandparents, who took part in India's fight for independence and who served time in British jails.

My grandparents saw public service as the highest of callings, an investment in country and community, and they instilled those values in me.

In Congress, at USAID, in the State Department, and most recently with the Chamber of Commerce, my own career in public service has allowed me to work at the nexus of foreign policy, development, and economic interests.

DFC represents the amalgamation of all those experiences and an opportunity to apply the lessons I have learned.

Mr. Chairman, I first want to commend this body and your colleagues in the House for passing the BUILD Act. In establishing DFC Congress sought to create a best-in-class development finance agency that will both advance U.S. strategic interests and create positive development impact in the countries in which it operates.

We have seen how the lack of access to adequate financing has led many developing nations to lean too heavily on state capital from authoritarian nations, often at unsustainable and predatory rates that yield poor development outcomes and undermine their sovereignty.

The BUILD Act has enabled the United States to offer a more compelling finance alternative, one that is consistent with our values and catalyzes private investment.

If confirmed, I will work with our outstanding CEO, Scott Nathan, and the DFC staff to advance three key pillars: enhancing our strategic focus, advancing impact-driven investments, and focusing on collaboration and partnership.

And, Mr. Chairman, if confirmed as Deputy CEO of DFC, I am committed to working collaboratively with Congress and other key stakeholders to fulfill the mission of DFC.

I am ready to serve the American people in this critical role and I thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Hon. Nisha Desai Biswal follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF NISHA DESAI BISWAL

Chairman Van Hollen, Ranking Member Romney, and Members of the Committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as the nominee for Deputy CEO of the United States International Development Finance Corporation (DFC). I am deeply honored and humbled by the nomination and grateful for the trust placed in me by the President for this important role.

I am here with my husband Subrat and our two daughters Safya and Kaya. It is their unflagging belief in me that makes all things possible, and I am ever grateful for their love. Our extended family and friends are watching on-line and I want to thank them for their love and support that carried us through some challenging times.

I am grateful for the opportunity to return to public service, if confirmed. I learned the importance of sacrifice and service at a very early age as I listened to my grandparents talk of their activism in support of India's independence and the time spent in British jails for participating in civil disobedience. They saw public service as the highest of callings an investment in country and community.

For me, it has been a privilege to have spent most of my career working alongside talented and dedicated colleagues in both parties.

In Congress, at USAID, in the State Department and most recently with the Chamber of Commerce, my own career in public service has allowed me to work at the nexus of our foreign policy, development, and economic interests. DFC represents the amalgamation of all those experiences and an opportunity to apply the lessons learned.

I believe that DFC plays a crucial role in catalyzing private sector investments, fostering new and existing partnerships, and driving positive change in emerging markets. If confirmed, I will bring my passion, experience, and leadership skills to bear on the challenges and opportunities that lie ahead.

But let me start by commending this body and your colleagues in the House for passing the BUILD Act. In establishing DFC, Congress sought to create a best-in-class development finance agency that will both advance US strategic interests and create a positive development impact in the countries in which it operates.

We have seen that lack of access to adequate financing has led many developing nations to lean too heavily on state capital from our strategic competitors, often at unsustainable and predatory rates that yield poor development outcomes and undermine their sovereignty. The BUILD Act has enabled the United States to offer a more compelling financing alternative, one that is consistent with our values, and catalyzes private investment.

DFC has a dual mandate to focus on making positive development impact in the poorest countries of the world, and, at the same time, advance the strategic interests of the United States. DFC mobilizes private capital to build infrastructure that connects local producers to markets, to enable companies to expand their production and hire new staff, and to deliver essential services like telecommunications, energy, water, and sanitation.

If confirmed, I will work with CEO Scott Nathan and DFC staff to advance three key pillars: strategic focus, impact-driven investments, and collaboration.

I recognize that DFC is a critical tool in advancing our national security interests, and as such, must maintain a strategic focus aligned with U.S. foreign policy priorities. By focusing on key sectors and regions where our investments can have the greatest impact, we can maximize our contribution to sustainable development, economic growth, and poverty alleviation. I intend to work with DFC staff and with our interagency colleagues to ensure that our investment decisions align with U.S. strategic interests and development goals.

Second, DFC must prioritize investments that create tangible, measurable, and sustainable outcomes for local communities. By promoting transparency, accountability, and responsible business practices, we can ensure that our investments deliver not only financial returns but also positive development impacts.

Lastly, I strongly believe in the power of collaboration. If confirmed, I will actively engage with international organizations, governments, civil society, and the private sector to forge strategic alliances, leverage resources, and amplify the impact of our investments. And drawing upon my experience at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, I will engage new private sector partners, building upon DFC's existing partnerships and adding new avenues for cooperation, both domestically and internationally.

I am deeply passionate about international development, private sector engagement, and sustainable economic growth. If confirmed as Deputy CEO of DFC, I am committed to working collaboratively with Congress and other stakeholders to fulfill the mission of DFC.

I am ready to serve the American people in this critical role. Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to your questions.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Ms. Biswal, and thank all of you for your testimony here and now we will start a period of questioning.

And, Mr. Kagan, if I could start with you. Malaysia is home to the largest rare earths processing facility outside of the PRC and recent reports show that Malaysia is also home to deposits of strategic and criminal—excuse me, critical minerals, including tin.

As we look to our ongoing efforts to both friendshore and develop more stable supply chains of critical minerals and rare earth minerals what role can you play if you are confirmed as our ambassador to Malaysia?

Mr. KAGAN. Thank you very much for your question, Mr. Chairman.

I think the question of rare earths and, more broadly, critical minerals is one that is a very high priority to this country and I think that you have seen that the administration has done a considerable amount of work on this.

I think that the importance of working on these arrangements with countries where we have good relationships and trying to develop new sources so that we can have reliable supply chains and diversified supply chains is absolutely critical and I think that we have real potential to do that in countries like Malaysia.

So, if confirmed, I would want to work closely with the American private sector, with different parts of the U.S. government, and with the Malaysian government to ensure that we are able to continue expanding the areas of cooperation in this, support development of resources, and above all make sure that we do this in partnership with Malaysia in ways that are sustainable and that promote our values.

Thank you, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. No, I appreciate that. I was recently on a trip with Senator Merkley and we stopped in Indonesia, where this is also, as you know, a very important issue.

Ms. Biswal, let me turn to you. The DFC, as you described well, is a critical agency to our efforts to invest overseas in a way that also strengthens our supply chains, serves American interests and those of our partners overseas.

Scott Nathan and, I think, you would make a great team. Let me—let me ask you about an issue that is a little bit of inside baseball but very important, which is the issue of how we currently—we, the Congress, and our budget agencies score the DFC. I am sure you are familiar with this issue.

We are having a debate here in Congress right now. Senator Coons has introduced a bill—I am a co-sponsor—to try to make sure that we get all the—all the punch that we can out of the DFC. Could you—could you talk a little bit about that issue and the importance of resolving it?

Ms. BISWAL. Sure. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I believe you are referring to, in particular, the scoring with respect to equity financing at DFC. Congress and the BUILD Act provided DFC with authority to do equity investment in order to ensure that we could—that DFC could invest in countries where perhaps debt financing was not as much of an option, and I believe that in so doing created an opportunity for DFC to create more compelling investments in perhaps sometimes riskier regions.

However, the lack of scoring or the inability to score DFC's equity financing in ways that allow it to advance that I think has held up how much equity financing DFC is able to do.

Congress can look at the scoring issue in a number of different ways. For example, the President's budget, I believe, has requested a revolving fund of $2 billion to be able to put towards equity financing—$2 billion in mandatory spending—or changing the scoring to be consistent with how, for example, other development finance institutions score equity would enable DFC to be more forward leaning in this area.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. I appreciate that, and I hope that this committee and our colleagues will get this done as quickly as possible because I think it hinders DFC from being able to maximize its resources.

There is a vote on now so I am going to turn it over to Senator Ricketts for questioning. I am going to turn the gavel over to Senator Kaine or Senator Menendez, whoever wants to have it—Senator Kaine.

Senator RICKETTS. Great. Thank you very much.

First of all, to all of our folks here I want to say thank you for your service to our country and especially our career Foreign Service people.

I know that you all have sacrificed to be able to serve our great nation. It involves a lot. You have put your families through a lot. I just want to say thank you very much. As a governor who went on a lot of trade missions I very much appreciate all the help I got when I was at the Embassy. So just have nothing but the highest respect for you.

What I would like to talk about is Djibouti. In 2017 Djibouti became the first country to host a People's Republic of China military base outside, obviously, the People's Republic itself; and earlier this year it was announced that Djibouti had reached an agreement with the People's Republic of China for a billion dollars to have a spaceport in that country, and this is obviously a part of the PRC's larger effort to commercialize space but also to extend its Belt and Road Initiative.

And, of course, there is two concerning things about this. One, Djibouti is already heavily in debt to the People's Republic of China to the tune of about a billion dollars—it represents about 43 percent of its GDP—and puts them at risk to be a part of what we have seen consistently around the world from the People's Republic of China, this debt trap.

But perhaps more concerningly, at least for the United States—I am going to read to you from the DNI's 2023 threat assessment—it said that China is steadily progressing towards its goal of becoming a world-class space leader with the intent to match or surpass the United States by the year 2045.

It continues—counter space operations will be integral to potential PLA military campaigns and China has counter space weapons capabilities intended to target the U.S. and our allies.

One of the fears with this spaceport outside of the People's Republic of China is they will use that to sidestep or outright reject international space rules with regard to how we do this and, of course, this matter is incredibly important to all of us. From using ATMs to harvesting our food we all rely on satellite technology.

In my home state of Nebraska, for example, we rely heavily on satellite technology to run our harvesting machines, the tractors and so forth. In fact, one farmer told one of my staff members that if it was not for satellite technology he was worried that his equipment would be useless.

So, Ambassador Kierscht, let us talk about do you believe that the space launch facility will this push Djibouti more into this debt trap that the PRC has?

Ms. KIERSCHT. Thank you for that—raising that important issue, Senator.

You are absolutely correct that there was a base established—their first military base was established in 2017 and there has been a deal on the table for this $1 billion spaceport that you reference.

As Secretary Blinken has said, China represents the most consequential geopolitical challenge of our time, and as diplomats we are going to be facing this around the globe.

In terms of the spaceport, it is clear that Africans, including the Djiboutians, have an aspiration to develop further in the space field as well as the advanced technology field.

As recognized during the Africa Leaders Summit this past December the U.S. recognized that interest and held the first U.S. Africa space forum to meet together to discuss these very issues that you are raising and, if confirmed, I would certainly work closely with the Djiboutians to make sure that we identify ways for them to act responsibly in this field here on Earth so that we can make sure that our space is free and remains that way.

Senator RICKETTS. What can we do to incentivize Djibouti from staying away from these risky debt deals? What can the United States—what more can we do?

Ms. KIERSCHT. Well, I think one of the best ways we can incentivize them away from delving into these areas is to engage our own private sector and that is something, if confirmed, I would be very much interested in doing and I am happy to be sitting here with my co-panelist who may be placed at the DFC because I think that is one of the good tools that we are able to use to leverage our U.S. businesses overseas.

We have other U.S. government agency tools also that we can be using, including the EXIM and USTDA. But, really, I think we need to look at engaging our private sector to give them opportunities to compete.

Senator RICKETTS. Why do you think the PRC selected Djibouti for the spaceport facility?

Ms. KIERSCHT. Well, it is an interesting question. I think if you actually look at some of the specifics of it, it does not actually give the Chinese much of an advantage in terms of where it is and compared to what they have within their own country.

It is—as you identified, the Djiboutians are heavily debt reliant on China. They—and this is something that we will keep a very close eye on.

Senator RICKETTS. What can we do to encourage Djibouti to ratify space law treaty so that this cannot be used as a loophole by the People's Republic of China?

Ms. KIERSCHT. Well, that is something, if confirmed, I would be talking to them on a regular basis about. That is something that we would have to have regular conversations about.

Senator RICKETTS. Great. Thank you, Ambassador. I appreciate it. Mr. Chairman?

Senator KAINE [presiding]. Chairman Menendez?

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and to Senator Van Hollen for presiding over these nominations. It is an important task that we ask all of our members on both sides of the aisle to engage in. So I appreciate your willingness to do it.

Let me congratulate all the nominees before us today. We want to thank you and your families for your commitment to service to our country because it really truly is a family affair and so we appreciate your willingness to serve the nation.

These are critical posts that we need to carry out U.S. foreign policy abroad and I hope we will be able to work through your nominations both at the committee and on the floor in a reasonable time so we can get you to the post.

Let me go to just a couple of questions.

Mr. Libby, one of the most challenging issues on the ongoing peace talks between Armenia and Azerbaijan is the rights and security for the people of Nagorno-Karabakh. I have deep concerns that without robust international guarantees the people of Nagorno-Karabakh will be extremely vulnerable.

What do you see as the different possible outcomes for the people of Nagorno-Karabakh and do you share my concerns about their physical safety as well as their protection for their cultural rights?

Mr. LIBBY. Mr. Chairman, thanks for the question.

I do share your concerns about the future of that region, including the people in Nagorno-Karabakh. That is why I think Secretary Blinken has really put his shoulder to the wheel to try and come up with and facilitate a settlement.

And the good news is that for the moment at least all of the parties seem to be engaging and engaging seriously. It is not going to be easy but a settlement that we want to reach and we want to help them reach is one that addresses issues of sovereignty, rights and security for all the people in the region, and territorial integrity.

With regard to the situation of Nagorno-Karabakh I do not necessarily want to prejudice what that looks like. That is a matter for the parties to decide. But a situation in which their rights and securities have not been considered or not factored in and taken care of in some fashion strikes me as something that would not be durable.

The CHAIRMAN. It is for the parties to decide but we, clearly, have a role in trying to advocate the process forward. I am deeply concerned by the ongoing blockade of Nagorno-Karabakh, which severely limits the basic goods and aid entering the region.

Azerbaijan's more than 180-day blockade has threatened famine for the local Armenian population, causing rationing resulting in pharmacies running out of medicine. Will you publicly condemn the blockade today and unequivocally urge Aliyev to open the Lachin corridor to normal traffic?

Mr. LIBBY. Sir, the U.S. position on this has been it really consists of sort of three elements. The U.S. has criticized any unilateral action that hurts trusts, raises risks, or damages people's safety and security.

The way to approach this is really three elements. First, over the short term, that is to monitor the situation and continue our calls and pressure for the restoration of civilian and commercial traffic into and out of the territory.

In the medium term we are looking at questions of assistance. We do not have access to the territory at the moment but my understanding is that the U.S. government has already put forward $21 million of food assistance, medicine, medivac, and family reunification assistance. That is a medium term solution or a medium term tool to address it.

But the long-term really is going to be in the context of a settlement and agreement between all the parties that stipulates how the rights and securities of everyone in the region are—

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let me just say—let me just say we can monitor it while people die. That is not satisfactory to me.

Mr. LIBBY. If people are dying that is a big problem and we need to—

The CHAIRMAN. Well, people are dying.

Mr. LIBBY. Yeah. This is why—

The CHAIRMAN. So I urge you to engage with the department in a more forceful forthright response because having a corridor closed to humanitarian assistance—even our humanitarian assistance is having difficulty getting in. That is because of Aliyev.

And so you are going to be nominated—you are nominated—you are going to be going, if confirmed, to a challenging post. But the fact that it is challenging does not mean that the United States should not be speaking out for the basic human rights principles that we observe globally.

And I hope you will be a vigorous force in that regard. I am going to send you some follow-up questions I would like to see your answers to.

Mr. LIBBY. For sure, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Biswal, in the President's fiscal year '24 budget request there is a proposal for $2 billion to create a new revolving fund for equity investments at the DFC.

While I agree that the DFC's ability to deploy equity is an effective yet underutilized tool for us to compete with China around the world many of my colleagues have expressed concerns with pursuing this revolving fund through mandatory spending and outside the normal discretionary appropriations process.

Now, I recognize you are not at the DFC yet but how important is this mandatory spending proposal to the DFC's strategic plans?

Ms. BISWAL. Mr. Chairman, thank you for that question.

I think there are many different ways in which Congress may choose to address the issue of equity financing at DFC, whether it is through a change to the scoring, whether it is through creating the revolving fund as is in the President's budget request, or the total amount of exposure allowed to DFC to be able to lean in more to equity financing.

I, if confirmed, would be willing to work with Congress to determine the most appropriate measure that Congress would feel comfortable with in order to enable DFC.

The CHAIRMAN. What happens, whether it is the mandatory funding that I understand the administration is seeking or some other process that you suggest, if we are not able to get DFC's equity tools off the ground?

Ms. BISWAL. Mr. Chairman, I believe DFC will continue to advance financing to the best of its abilities with the tools that it does possess.

I believe if we find a way around the equity challenges, it will allow DFC to lean in much more, particularly in more high-risk environments, which are unable to take on additional debt financing, which I think is commensurate with the intent of DFC that the BUILD Act had.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I do not want to overstay my welcome here. I am going to follow up. I know—can I?

Senator KAINE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, okay. All right. Because my dear and distinguished colleague often comes to these hearings and does not get to ask this question in a timely fashion. So I do not want to impinge upon him. Can I have another minute?

Thank you. Development finance is an important tool to realize U.S. foreign policy objectives and they can be especially effective in countering the malign influence of China and other adverse nations.

Most developing countries would prefer to work with the U.S. and our private sector partners as opposed to the PRC's predatory development financial institutions.

The DFC's strategic foreign policy objectives and focus on advancing development are mutually reinforcing and part of your role, if confirmed, to evaluate and articulate how the DFC is selecting deals that achieve both outcomes.

So this is why we are getting into how we are going to fund the DFC because in part that will speak to what we are going to be able to do. How will you work within DFC's balanced development and strategic outcomes to its investments?

Ms. BISWAL. Mr. Chairman, I believe the dual mandate that Congress imbued DFC with to both advance our strategic goals and objectives and to ensure development impact are very important and mutually reinforcing.

If confirmed, I would work, drawing upon my own experience working both within the State Department and at USAID, to help identify ways in which we can advance development impact in ways that are aligned with our very important strategic goals and objectives, particularly as we seek to provide a more compelling alternative to the capital provided by some of our strategic competitors, which does not often advance the interests of the countries which it is financing, unlike our program.

The CHAIRMAN. A final question for the moment. How do you believe DFC's proposed reorganization will achieve that dual mandate?

Ms. BISWAL. Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I would work with DFC to help align the organization around the mandates that have been conferred upon it by Congress.

As we have seen DFC transition from OPIC to the Development Finance Corporation increase in both its budget and its staff, I believe there is an effort underway to look at what kind of realignment internally will help it better achieve its mission and mandate and, if confirmed, I look forward to working to further that process.

The CHAIRMAN. We need DFC to be—play a bigger role if we are going to compete with China.

I have questions for both you, Mr. Libby, as well as the other nominees. As I always say at our hearings when I preside over them, I would urge you to answer them expeditiously when you get them, and fully because if not what will happen is a member will come back and say you really did not give me an answer.

So up front I want you to know that when you get questions you should answer it fully and expeditiously because then we can consider you at a business meeting.

Thank you, and thank you, Senator Romney, for your courtesy.

Senator KAINE. Senator Romney?

Senator ROMNEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I want to pursue the discussion which Chairman Menendez began with regards to the DFC.

I have watched, if you will, through business lens, economic lens, as China has carried out what many would consider a brilliant strategy of investing in critical minerals and materials that are essential for the technologies of today and tomorrow, and their Belt and Road has not been randomly carried out providing opportunities for development but instead has been focused on securing those resources such as buying mines, then putting in place rail lines that take the materials from that mine to the—to a port, then buying the port to make sure that they can have access to take those materials to China.

It is a—it is a series of actions which would probably be illegal for a corporation to take under U.S. law but they are not subject to U.S. law.

And we look to DFC to counter this, although with a fraction of the resources that China has already employed, and also historically with less focus on our strategic objectives and more on simply development and helping lift people out of poverty, a noble goal in and of itself.

But I wonder if you could expand on the extent to which you believe it is an important role for DFC to pursue America's economic interests and strategic interests in securing for us many of the minerals and resources that are necessary to be competitive.

Ms. BISWAL. Thank you, Senator.

I do believe that not only is it critically important for the United States but it is important for the global community that there not be monopolistic reliance on any single actor for critical minerals, critical and essential supply chains, and I think, if confirmed, I would want to work with DFC to continue to support the diversification of important supply chains to invest in projects that build capacity on critical minerals and build the ability of nations to carry out trade in those minerals in multiple different directions.

I believe that DFC is already doing some important work in that respect, not only in Africa, but also a nickel mine in Brazil that DFC is working with in parts of Asia, et cetera, and, if confirmed, Senator, I would want to continue to lean into that direction as well.

Senator ROMNEY. I would hope that as you consider various alternatives—and I am sure the list of projects that you might invest in is enormously long—that in carrying out those evaluations and the selection of various projects that in each write-up there is an element that deals with the strategic either military or economic or political interests of the United States of America. Do you agree with that?

Ms. BISWAL. I do, Senator, and I do think that as we are advancing those strategic objectives, they are very much aligned with the development impact of the projects that we are financing, and I would want to showcase that as well.

Senator ROMNEY. Mr. Kagan, with regards to Malaysia—thank you for those responses. With regards to Malaysia what is their feeling right now? I know we in this country take great pride in the fact that we have lots of friends and our foes around the world do not have a lot of friends.

But I would submit that one of the reasons we have so many friends is because we have been the superpower—the sole superpower—and when there become alternatives and, in fact, in a region where we might not even be the strongest that friendship ends up being strained.

What is your sense now of the Malaysian people as well as its government in terms of their sentiment with regards to the U.S. and with regards to the PRC?

Mr. KAGAN. Thank you very much for that question, Senator.

I think you have put your finger on what is our broader challenge across the region and I think, certainly, in Malaysia and that is that there is a great reservoir of goodwill towards the United States. At least when I served there from 2014 to 2017 I was constantly struck at the web of connections and web of ties that we have between our peoples and how powerful they are.

And the U.S. has been a very important investor and a very important trading partner in Malaysia and I think the quality of U.S. investment in Malaysia has had a particular impact, in particular the amount of training, the amount of investment that American companies have made in developing their staff and you see that in the number of companies that have been started by people who used to work at U.S. companies.

But at the same time there is no question that they are looking to see what we can do now and I think that they—my experience has been that they are eager to do more with the United States but at the same time that they are looking to other opportunities in the region and they are open to the significant inflows of investment and trade with China.

That creates a challenge for us. I think that we can meet that challenge by being engaged and, if confirmed, I would want to help lead that from the position of U.S. Ambassador to Malaysia.

But, look, we are going to be—we are going to be working very hard at this for a long time to come. I think that we are going to need to be flexible, we are going to need to be engaged, and we are going to need to work with our allies and partners to strengthen our hand as we try and meet these challenges. Thank you, sir.

Senator ROMNEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. [Presiding.] Thank you, Senator Romney. And Senator Kaine, thank you for (1 02 41 spelling?) me in the chair for a little while.

Senator KAINE. Absolutely. Thank you, Senator Van Hollen, and to all of the nominees, congratulations. You are well suited for your positions.

Mr. Libby, let me start with you. I just want to follow up a little bit on Senator Menendez with respect to Nagorno-Karabakh and the Lachin corridor being closed.

You talked about the peace process, the path forward as having a short-, medium-, and long-term component, which we completely get.

My worry, though, is the closure of the corridor should definitely be on the short-term, not for resolution of the long-term issues because it strands 120,000 ethnic Armenians without access to medical care, gasoline, food.

The U.S. has been pretty full throated in condemning the closure. Administrator Power with USAID, other U.S. officials, UNICEF, U.N. agencies have called for it to be open and I just would want your commitment that you will continue that clear U.S. message that however it takes to get us to a medium- and long-term solution the closure of this Lachin corridor by the Azerbaijani activists, likely with the backing of the Azerbaijan government, is a clear and present challenge to those citizens and we should be doing all we can to expeditiously seek its reopening.

Do you agree with me on that?

Mr. LIBBY. Yes, Senator, I do, and thank you for that question.

That has a been a strong point by the administration, as you noted, by Administrator Power, and I share that sense of urgency. We have got to solve that problem and get traffic flowing again. I absolutely agree with that, sir.

Senator KAINE. Thank you very much.

Mr. Kagan, I want to ask you a question dealing with an issue that is important in Malaysia but also very important in Virginia and it deals with the Chinese treatment of Uyghurs.

The Malaysian Prime Minister Ibrahim has refrained from publicly criticizing China on the Uyghur genocide. But Malaysia has been a rare Muslim majority country that has been granting safe passage to Uyghurs and refusing to extradite them back to China.

Virginia is home of one of the largest Uyghur-American communities in the U.S. and many of those families have family members in the Uyghur area of China who are being persecuted.

We have been working with a number of Virginia families because their relatives have been unjustly imprisoned by the Chinese Communist Party simply for being Uyghur.

The—those—the CCP’s widely documented genocide against Uyghurs and other ethnic and religious minority groups in Xinjiang remains a clear affront to human rights. You have been in Kuala Lumpur in the past. You know well Malaysia does appear more willing than most Muslim countries to offer support to Uyghurs escaping persecution from the CCP.

What do you attribute that to and what more can we do to support the Malaysian government in those humanitarian efforts?

Mr. KAGAN. Thank you very much for your question, Senator, and I want to start off by just saying I was remiss in not thanking you earlier for your very kind introduction, which I appreciate very much.

I think that there is a couple of things that you have put your fingers on. I think one is that Malaysia has a long history of tolerance and support for victims of political violence and for refugees.

I am going back to the large numbers of Vietnamese boat people who were harbored in Malaysia and many of whom then came on to the United States from there.

I think that there is also no question that Malaysians are very sensitive to the dynamics of oppression of Muslims around the world and I think that they are aware of the genocide and the repression and human rights abuses against Uyghurs.

So I think that this is an area where, if confirmed, I would want to do a couple of things. One is work with the Malaysian government. But I think that in this it is also very important to work with Malaysian civil society to promote greater awareness and understanding of what is happening, and I think that we are lucky that in Malaysia there is a partner that is not turning a blind eye to the terrible things are happening in Xinjiang.

Thank you, Senator.

Senator KAINE. I think you are right. We are lucky to have a partner that recognizes that there is an awful lot of backsliding in the world against protection of those who are persecuted for human rights reasons and there is also, if not backsliding often a coldly business calculation that we could stand up for values but it might cost us in other ways and so people are not willing to stand up for values. Governments are not willing to stand up.

And so since Malaysia has a history of doing this that needs to not only be encouraged but even spot lit so that nations around the world understand the value that they are providing.

The last thing I will just say, Ms. Biswal, the OIG issued a report in fiscal year 2023 with sort of four top management challenges for your agency, and they are not really management challenges in the sense of big problems—I think morale was pretty high—but a new agency getting off the ground that is grappling with making the structure really work.

And I just would like your commitment. I think that OIG report was a solid one and I would just like your commitment that you would take that very seriously in working with this new agency to help it be all it can be.

Ms. BISWAL. Yes, Senator, you absolutely have that commitment and I, if confirmed, intend to focus quite a bit on the management aspects of the job.

Senator Kaine. Great. Thank you so much. Thanks to all the witnesses. I yield back.

Senator Van Hollen. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

Senator Romney?

Senator Romney. Mr. Libby, I am interested in your perspective of the people of Azerbaijan and how in the region there is a reaction to Russia's invasion in Ukraine, whether that has changed public opinion, whether that has changed political sentiment there, perspective of the government, and what you see in terms of that dynamic.

Mr. Libby. Thanks, Senator. That is one of the things that makes this region so fascinating and so critically important.

Azerbaijan is, to my knowledge, the only country that borders both Russia and Iran and so it sits right smack in the middle of a strategic region and its role in the former Soviet space is, obviously, very important.

Azerbaijan has had an interesting balancing act to play but they have been quite helpful with regard to supporting Ukraine, fuel, food assistance, and even after this dam was destroyed last week sending in new packages of aid. They voted for the U.N. General Assembly resolution condemning the invasion and reaffirming Ukraine's territorial integrity.

This is an interesting and fairly forward leaning place for a country in the former Soviet space. If I am confirmed I think part of my job is going to be to try and get Azerbaijan further down that track.

Obviously, there is ties of kinship and ties of trade and so forth. But Azerbaijan has its own potential role as a conduit, as an energy source, and as a counterbalance to Russian influence in the region and that is one of the reasons that makes it so important.

Senator Romney. Thank you, Mr. Libby.

Mr. Ehrendreich, help me understand what it means to be engaged in a free association with the United States for Palau. What does that mean to us, what does that mean to them, and are they broadly satisfied with that relationship at this point or is there some sentiment of concern?

Mr. Ehrendreich. Thank you, Senator Romney, for the question.

The Secretary—I would refer to what Secretary Blinken said a couple weeks ago when he was in Port Moresby. The Compact of Free Association that we have with all three FAS states is the bedrock of our engagement in the Pacific, and I think in the Palau context that could not be more true.

Like I said in my opening statement, when we signed the agreement—the review agreement just a few weeks ago, President Whips said, “God bless Palau, God bless the United States of America, God bless us all.”

This is the—not only is it the framework for our relations for the next 20 years and beyond, it is also a powerful symbol of the strength of the relationship for the United States—people of the United States and Palau and for any adversaries in the region who want to question how strong our relations are.

Senator Romney. Thank you.

Ambassador Kierscht, my understanding is that Djibouti has recently agreed to allow China to build a enormous facility in the port to accommodate an aircraft carrier or substantial military resources that China might have. Clearly, the PRC is making a play to have greater and greater influence in Djibouti.

What should we be doing? And I know there is only so much an ambassador can do and you want to have relationships with the people there and you want to interact with them.

But do we need to making far more private sector investments? Do we need to have more of an industrial policy where we are investing in projects in that country ourselves to be more competitive?

What actions do we need to take to make sure that this key player at the gateway to the Red Sea remains a friendly nation?

Ms. KIERSCHT. Thank you, Senator Romney, for raising that very critical question.

I would like to identify several things that in my current role as ambassador to Mauritania we are working on because I think we do need to look at ways that we can push back against China.

For example, in Mauritania we have just launched a new project to help the Mauritians combat illegal, unregulated, and unreported fishing done by the PRC in their offshore waters, which robs Mauritania, really, of one of their prime natural resources.

If confirmed, I would seek to do similar—pursue similar avenues. But I think the U.S. has a really good story to tell about what we bring to the table, our transparency, our values, working with civil society, listening and learning from our partners in Djibouti.

In particular, we are working together with them to achieve their, as stated, economic development goals, which seek to develop their human capital and create jobs.

We have—through our USAID colleagues there right now we are working on several large programs in order to do just that. We are helping them do job creation as well as youth employment through workforce development programs, energy, education, and health programming.

We are also providing them with very robust security assistance in addition to our base. They have the only bilateral FMF allocation on the continent of Africa and we provide them with other state and DOD security assistance as well.

But, again, as you noted, we should probably also lean into engaging our private sector, using the tools that we have such as the development finance corporation, EXIM, USTDA, to really bring our private sector into that market as well. And, if confirmed, I would seek to leverage all of those tools.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

Senator Duckworth?

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to start by thanking all of our nominees for your lifelong dedication to public service and for making yourself available today. I am going to start with Ms. Biswal.

I have long argued that in order to meet the strategic challenge of the People's Republic of China we need to address the needs of our partners and allies around the world.

As the development financing arm of the United States the DFC plays a critical role in this effort. Nowhere is this more true than in Southeast Asia and, in particular, mainland Southeast Asia where the Belt and Road Initiative has financed billions of dollars for railroads, ports, and industrial projects.

On my regular visits to the region I repeatedly hear about a desire for more U.S. engagement and for alternatives to PRC's financing for major infrastructure projects.

How do you assess the initial success of the DFC and engaging in this area and what are your priorities in ensuring that the United States is competitive with the PRC in the infrastructure space in Southeast Asia?

Ms. BISWAL. Senator Duckworth, thank you so much for that question.

I agree wholeheartedly with you that this region is extraordinarily important and a priority for DFC. I believe to date DFC has projects nearly $6 billion in financing in the Indo-Pacific region.

If confirmed, I would look to see how we can further scale up our programs, our project financing, particularly with respect to Southeast Asia and the nations of mainland Southeast Asia.

I do believe that there are many opportunities with a robust private sector to be able to address core priorities, including in energy security, in telecommunications, in building private enterprise, and I look forward to working with you, if confirmed, in understanding your priorities on these in this region as well.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. Well, following—the Blue Dot network—the Blue Dot network is a joint project with the United States, Japan, and Australia that supports investment in high-quality infrastructure projects around the world.

I think that is a great example for our regional—how our regional partners can increase our regional infrastructure area. It does not have to be all United States. I think our partners are important as well.

Is there more that the DFC can do to leverage our ability to convene allies to advance our goals globally and in the Indo-Pacific specifically? And I am looking to Japan and South Korea, for example.

Ms. BISWAL. Senator, I know that DFC has already created trilateral frameworks and agreements to work with Japan and Australia. They have a Quad framework through which they are working with Australia, Japan, and India in the region, and I know that there is a desire to be able to do additional programming with, for example, Taiwan.

And, if confirmed, I would look to see how we can further enhance our partnership and collaboration, including with South Korea, with multilateral institutions as well and leverage the investments of partners and allies to advance financing in the region.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. Thank you.

I want to return to Malaysia a little bit. I know we have talked a little bit already but, Mr. Kagan, as you well know economic and trade issues and climate change are major concerns for many of our Indo-Pacific partners.

According to the 2023 ASEAN survey carried out by Singapore's ISEAS–Yusof Ishak Institute Malaysian respondents cited the economy and climate change as their top two concerns.

Moreover, 60 percent expressed concerns about the growing economic influence of the PRC. But at the same time when those same respondents were asked whether the administration's premier economic initiative of the Indo-Pacific Economic Forum, the IPEF, would be beneficial to Malaysia 60 percent of respondents answered either unsure or no.

Mr. Kagan, how do you assess current U.S. efforts to engage Southeast Asia and Malaysia, in particular, in the economic realm? What economic initiatives would you prioritize, if confirmed?

Mr. KAGAN. Thank you very much, Senator Duckworth, and I think it is an excellent question and it is one that is a major challenge for the administration but one that we have put considerable effort into trying to address.

I mean, one element—and we see this here with Nisha—is DFC. DFC is a very, very important tool and one that I think we can use more in the region as we expand the capacities that it has.

I think another one, obviously, is Indo-Pacific Economic Framework—the IPEF—which you referred to. I totally take the point that many—that a significant percentage of folks in Malaysia were either unaware of it or did not think it would be positive.

I think part of that is because it is very new and I think that the effort that we are trying to do with IPEF is to address challenges that traditional trade approaches have not always addressed, the kinds of challenges that we saw come to the fore during the pandemic where we realized over dependence on supply chains that run through one area have their own problems completely separate from whatever political issues are involved.

And so I think that IPEF is trying to address in four key areas things which we think really are important to the region and, clearly, it is not yet well known and often I think the jury is out in Malaysia in terms of the impact.

On the other hand, Malaysia was one of the partners that did sign on to pillar two, the supply chain pillar which was brought to conclusion in Detroit several weeks ago, and I think that is a sign that Malaysia recognizes there are different opportunities.

So, if confirmed, I would want to keep using the tools that we have that has strengthened DFC, IPEF engagement by other U.S. government agencies, EXIM, USAID, though they do not do things directly in Malaysia but I think their efforts in the region are of value to the region and to ASEAN, of which Malaysia is a member.

And I think we would want, if confirmed, to keep pushing forward in those areas to—so that the region better understands the value of economic engagement with the United States and understands that we are seeking an affirmative agenda on economic engagement that tries to address the region and their concerns in ways that are valuable for them.

Senator DUCKWORTH. I think your mentioning of ASEAN is really important because so many of the powerful players within ASEAN have signed on to IPEF and I think that is a good way forward.

Thank you. I yield back, Mr. Chairman. I am over time.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Thank you, Senator Duckworth.

As I went over to vote my team kept me posted on different questions that had been asked. So let me just say to you, Mr. Libby, I associate myself with the questions of Senator Menendez.

So I was going to ask you about the Lachin corridor and how you can help resolve that pretty desperate situation as part of the broader effort you said with respect to Armenia and Azerbaijan.

Senator Romney and others touched on the Djibouti issue. Obviously, we have an important presence there but so does the PRC and, obviously, trying to reconcile those in a way that serves our interest is a priority.

I do have one last question for Mr. Ehrendreich and before I ask it—Senator Romney has to leave. I do want to—I do want to thank your wife, Rachel, who you introduced, who was in Consular Affairs, as you know, but just so others know and who was pivotal in helping an 89-year-old constituent of mine from Maryland get out of Sudan during the violence. So let me thank you for your efforts there.

So here is the question regarding Palau and I just—I should say that I just I gathered with a couple of my colleagues, some from this committee and others, at a meeting that was convened by the ambassadors of Australia and New Zealand together with Senator Schatz and others, convened with a lot of the Pacific Island country ambassadors, and some had representatives that serve in the United States and the United Nations.

And it was a great turnout and we had a great meeting, and I think that the Biden administration is doing a good job in signaling the United States wants to engage much, much more with the Pacific Island countries.

And you are going to, of course, play an important role in that effort if confirmed as the ambassador to Palau. My colleagues have covered the issue of the Compact.

But one of the issues that comes up constantly with some of the Pacific Island countries has to do with encroachment on their EEZs and their fishing rights and the fact that many in the region, including the PRC, do not respect their sovereignty, whereas the United States stands for a free and open Pacific Ocean and respect for sovereignty.

Could you comment a little bit on what we can do to help Palau in particular defend their fisheries against incursions from others? These are countries that do not have a lot of resources, and to what extent is that part of our effort under the compact?

Mr. EHRENDREICH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the question.

Let me first say, I am very proud of my wife. She has been a wonderful consular officer for about 15 years now and not only has she helped your constituents, I know she has helped hundreds if not thousands of people get out of Sudan and Ethiopia and Afghanistan and other places. Very, very proud of her.

In terms of Palau and PRC incursions and all, Palau is no stranger to PRC's aggressive and coercive activities in addition to the illegal incursions into their Exclusive Economic Zones, as you mentioned, and the IUU fishing.

Palau has been the victim of economic coercion with China turning off all tourism, I think, to Palau, and Chinese economic activities in Palau have brought allegations of cybercrime, drug, and human trafficking and corruption and money laundering.

What we can do to help Palau in terms of the EEZ and IUU issues is, one, to help Palau build its own capacity and we have Coast Guard programs in place both to help with maritime domain awareness and the shiprider program in place.

USAID has active programs to help with IUU fishing more on the coastal fisheries management side. We also need to work with partners in the region—Japan, Republic of Korea, Australia. They are all interested in contributing to this—to solving this issue.

And then there is also the international effort, the Port States Measures Agreement, where the United States is trying to help countries like Palau become members and become active, and that is an international effort to end IUU fishing.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

I thank all of you for your testimony today. The record will be open until the close of business tomorrow, June 14th.

And this hearing is now adjourned. Thank you all.

[Whereupon, at 3:29 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. CYNTHIA KIERSCHT BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In your view, what are the top three priorities for the U.S. bilateral relationship with Djibouti that you will advance or maintain as U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed?

Answer. Djibouti is a key strategic partner in accomplishing shared foreign policy and security goals in the region. The United States is committed to maintaining this long-term strategic partnership to counter regional instability and terrorism and thereby assure our enhanced security here at home. As such, our top priorities in Djibouti are maintaining strong support for the U.S. military presence, strengthening Djibouti's own capacity to contribute to regional security, supporting private sector-led economic growth, and reinforcing good governance. If confirmed, I will work with the Embassy country team and U.S. Government partners to pursue these priorities by strengthening civil society and government institutions, leveraging our development tools to support education, health, workforce development, and working to attract private sector investment.

Question. As you know, the U.S.' only enduring military installation in Africa is Camp Lemonnier in Djibouti. China also opened its first overseas base in Djibouti in 2017. As U.S. Ambassador to Djibouti, if confirmed, how will you balance the pursuit of U.S. bilateral interests in Djibouti with the U.S.' regional security interests and great power competition with China?

Answer. The United States is focused on building an enduring strategic partnership with Djibouti. Our African partners can help advance our global foreign policy priorities, including our priority to build lasting peace and security in the region. At the same time, we recognize the serious challenges the PRC presents in Africa. We will continue to counter the PRC's problematic efforts to build up its security infrastructure to project military power from Africa. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Djibouti and leveraging all available USG tools to counter efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests.

Question. What is your view of the role of a U.S. Ambassador in supporting democratic institutions and democratic governance?

Answer. Supporting democratic institutions and democratic governance is at the core of U.S. foreign policy and will be among my highest priorities. If confirmed, I will engage local interlocutors from all elements of society to advance these goals. I have prioritized these issues throughout my career, including in my current position as U.S. Ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania, and will continue to do so in Djibouti if I am confirmed.

Question. In your view, how can the United States better support the democratic aspirations of the people of Djibouti?

Answer. Advancement of democracy and human rights in Djibouti is a key component of our bilateral relationship. Our Embassy and high-level U.S. Government officials regularly promote democracy and good governance with Djiboutian officials, including discussions about electoral reforms advocated by the multilateral organizations like the African Union, and maintain dialogue with the opposition and Djibouti's nascent civil society to ensure that we remain in contact with all elements of Djiboutian society.

To promote better governance, our Embassy works to increase civil society participation in public service delivery. We also support programs to combat gender-based violence, protect victims of human trafficking, promote women's empowerment, and promote press freedom by building the capacity of Djiboutian journalists. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize this important work.

Question. How would you practice commercial diplomacy on behalf of U.S. investments in Djibouti?

Answer. In Djibouti, we are promoting a vision for private sector-led economic development based on democratic governance, respect for human rights, and transparency. Our focus is on strengthening local capacity, creating jobs, and working with our partners and allies on economic development that is beneficial, sustainable, and inclusive over the long term. The Embassy Deal Team has engaged in advocacy on behalf of several U.S. investments and I commit to continuing to prioritize this work.

If confirmed, I would focus on working with interagency colleagues to explore how we can better support U.S. private sector engagement in Djibouti as an alternative to PRC investment. This could include exploring how to better leverage such USG agencies as DFC, EXIM, and USTDA, which support U.S. businesses overseas.

Question. What is your assessment of Djibouti's greatest barriers to increased two-way trade and investment with the United States?

Answer. Expanding our economic partnership with Djibouti is a key priority for both the U.S. and Djiboutian Governments. Djibouti receives trade benefits under the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), though bilateral trade and investment are relatively low due to the size of the Djiboutian economy and its limited manufacturing base. If confirmed I would work with the Djiboutian Government to ensure it interfaces effectively with the U.S. Government and private sector, U.S. agencies including DFC, EXIM, USTDA, and Prosper Africa, and the U.S. private sector to identify ways to grow trade and investment, particularly in sectors like the digital space, energy, and agriculture.

Question. What is your understanding of the tools at your disposal—including through Prosper Africa - as U.S. Ambassador to Djibouti, if confirmed, to support addressing barriers to trade and investment in the enabling environment, including the need for economic and political reforms?

Answer. The U.S. Government has a number of tools available to improve bilateral trade and investment, including Prosper Africa, DFC, EXIM, and USTDA, as well as AGOA. If confirmed, I will work with the host government and the country team to identify the most significant barriers to trade and investment in the enabling environment and the best tools to remedy them, including economic and political reforms. I would also underscore the importance of economic and political transparency in attracting private sector investment and work with private sector partners to advocate for needed reforms.

Question. How will you work with Prosper Africa leadership to ensure that Djibouti can benefit from Prosper Africa resources, tools and expertise?

Answer. Embassy Djibouti, as part of the Prosper Africa initiative, has an Embassy Deal Team that is very active in promoting U.S. economic opportunities in Djibouti. The Deal Team is engaged with the Prosper Africa Secretariat in Washington and Prosper Africa representatives in Johannesburg to share trade and investment leads and to solicit assistance from Prosper Africa, something I will continue if confirmed. We will continue advocacy work on behalf of U.S. companies investing in Djibouti, examples of which include Creative Energy Systems, a U.S. company which is building a waste to energy plant, and DJIBAH, a seafood processing plant. If confirmed, I commit to continue pursuing these and other opportunities.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador to Djibouti, if confirmed, how will you engage with President Guelleh on his role as the leader of this regional institution at a time of multiple acute crises with significant regional spillover effects, namely in Sudan, Ethiopia, Somalia and South Sudan.

Answer. Djibouti is a key strategic partner in accomplishing shared foreign policy and security goals in the region. As the host of the IGAD Secretariat and now as the chair of the organization, Djibouti will continue to play a central role in IGAD's efforts to support peace and security in the region. IGAD has played a significant role in supporting regional peace processes, including as an observer to the AU-led cessation of hostilities talks for Ethiopia. IGAD has also proactively offered support for peace efforts in Sudan and does essential work in the countering violent extremism space through its Center for Excellence in Countering and Preventing Violence Extremism.

If confirmed, I would engage President Guelleh and the IGAD Secretariat to understand their strategic vision and priorities to identify areas for further cooperation in support of U.S. objectives in the region.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador to Djibouti, if confirmed, how will you coordinate with U.S. Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Hammer and other U.S. diplomats engaged on the multiple crises in the Horn of Africa?

Answer. I look forward to working closely with the Special Envoy and other stakeholders to promote peace and security in the region if I am confirmed. Djibouti is an essential partner on these issues as the host, and currently chair, of IGAD and has played an important role in past conflict resolution efforts in the region. I would welcome the Special Envoy to continue engaging regularly in Djibouti and to collaborate to identify new ways to advance U.S. peace and security goals.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Djibouti operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. If confirmed, I will vigorously engage the Government of Djibouti to meet minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking. In particular, I will highlight the recommendations in the 2023 TIP Report, including the need to increase efforts to investigate and prosecute trafficking crimes, improve victim identification and protection, and increase awareness of human trafficking among officials and the public. I will also work closely with the State Department's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons and other sources on programmatic opportunities to assist in promoting proactive action on this key issue.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to portraying the reality of the trafficking situation in Djibouti in the annual country report as accurately as possible?

Answer. Yes, I commit to coordinating closely with the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons to ensure accurate and objective reporting on trafficking in the annual TIP Report.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Djibouti's constitution mandates equality for people of all faiths and Djibouti's diverse population openly and freely practices a wide range of religions. If confirmed, I would welcome collaboration with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom and look for ways to leverage the expertise of IRF to capitalize on Djibouti's freedom of religion as a springboard for broader conversations. In my current role as U.S. Ambassador to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania, I have hosted two visits from the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes, I commit to engaging personally with civil society, including religious and human rights groups, to advance religious freedom and other human rights concerns. This has been a standard practice of mine throughout my career.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Djibouti increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. I would encourage the Embassy team to engage with all faith communities in Djibouti to understand their perspectives and concerns and coordinate with the host government and civil society leaders to promote and protect freedom of religion or belief, including to foster collaboration across faith communities. If confirmed, I would also commit to reporting accurate information for the annual International Religious Freedom report.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure my Embassy staff meets with a wide range of civil society leaders on a regular basis to remain informed of the latest human rights issues, any changes to the overall situation, and to inform our policy and programmatic ideas on how to best improve the human rights situation in Djibouti. We will also seek appropriate programmatic opportunities to support civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to personally engaging with civil society on a regular basis about issues related to human rights, including religious freedom, and other issues of concern. This has been a standard practice of mine throughout my career.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. The Bureau of African Affairs works closely with IO and USUN on shared priorities and on all campaigns and hiring initiatives involving qualified American candidates for the U.N. system. If confirmed, I will continue to elevate these efforts in multilateral fora and with our African partners.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with USUN and IO to appropriately promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies, and to advance the candidacies of Americans by engaging with the Djiboutian Government, as appropriate. Djibouti often supports U.S. candidates for important multilateral posts and I would advocate for our initiatives and candidates with the government and earn its continued support by communicating how we can advance our shared goals together within the U.N. system.

Question. How do you intend to work with senior leadership at the State Department to address acute staffing challenges at Mission Djibouti?

Answer. Ensuring our embassies are appropriately staffed is vital to fulfilling our mission to advance the interests of the American people. Limited infrastructure, health care challenges, and the post's remoteness are inherent impediments to recruitment. If confirmed, I will work with the management team at post and colleagues in Washington to identify and capitalize on opportunities to improve the community and recruit well qualified personnel to fill staffing gaps.

Question. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Djibouti?

Answer. I understand morale at post to be good. I acknowledge and appreciate the sacrifices the team makes every day as part of their service in Djibouti. If confirmed, I commit to listening to my team and doing all I can to support and improve morale.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Djibouti?

Answer. If confirmed, I will do all I can to improve morale by empowering the diverse talent within the Embassy team, providing strategic direction, rewarding them appropriately, heeding work-life balance, and supporting them by improving access to training and resources to enable their success.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Djibouti?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the diverse team at Embassy Djibouti. I will lead the country team to build on prior successes and chart a path forward to strengthen our partnership with Djibouti based on our shared foreign policy priorities and on the principles articulated in the U.S. Strategy for Sub-Saharan Africa and the AU's Agenda 2063.

Question. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. My management style is to be as transparent and collaborative as possible. I believe it is my job to ensure employees who work for me have the right resources and training and are empowered to do their job. I stand ready to provide appropriate coaching and consulting along the way. I also strive to ensure work-life balance, reward employees for excellent work, and set a positive tone and example for the Embassy.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or in private?

Answer. No, it is never appropriate or acceptable to berate subordinates under any circumstances.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with the deputy chief of mission?

Answer. The deputy chief of mission is an essential partner and important advisor in successfully managing an Embassy. If confirmed, I would look to my DCM to provide honest counsel on issues ranging from policy to personnel issues, to lead and mentor the country team (especially first- and second-tour officers), to proactively identify and solve all but the most challenging management issues, and to promptly engage me on any concerns that require my intervention.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. I intend to entrust my DCM with serving as the first line of executive leadership at the mission, including supervising and mentoring our diverse inter-agency team, developing the talent of our first- and second-tour officers, and proactively leading our management platform to meet the needs of the mission.

Question. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeed in their roles?

Answer. Yes, I think providing accurate, constructive, and timely feedback is at the core of effective mentorship and leadership. I equally believe it important to acknowledge and reward good performance.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes, I believe providing clear, accurate, direct, and timely feedback to employees is essential to maintaining good morale, building skills and cultivating talent within the Department. I would also commit to rewarding high achievers as a positive acknowledgement of their performance.

Question. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our Embassy walls enough to fully accomplish their missions?

Answer. Engaging with the local population and key contacts and decisionmakers is at the core of diplomacy. As a leader I take seriously the need to balance this imperative with taking appropriate safety precautions to protect the lives and health of our employees.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Embassy regional security officer and other security professionals to develop and regularly assess Embassy security guidelines to ensure our diplomats are able to do their work while remaining safe. While Djibouti is not a high threat, high risk post, Diplomatic Security approved 94 percent of movement requests in high threat high risk posts to engage local governments and populations so I'm confident our teams will have the ability to continue engaging our local partners.

TO HON. CYNTHIA KIERSCHT BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Djibouti ties.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests?

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system."

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party would constructively work with the United States in good faith?

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in Africa.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the country in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Djibouti and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region.

If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address China's efforts to expand its influence in Djibouti and the region.

Question. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between the China and Djibouti?

Answer. The PRC-Djibouti relationship is a pragmatic one centered on the PRC's financial support for infrastructure development, trade, security assistance, and the PLA base. The sustainability of Djibouti's debt to the PRC is of particular concern. Across the continent, we have seen that many PRC-backed loans are not transparent and invested in projects designed to extract resources and short-term profits for PRC benefit. According to the World Bank and IMF, Djibouti is currently in debt distress and the PRC or PRC-related entities hold the majority of that external debt.

Question. China is developing port facilities, infrastructure, railway, airports, and a pipeline for Djibouti. If confirmed, how would you counter CCP influence in Djibouti?

Answer. U.S. policy is not to ask our partners to choose between the United States and the PRC, but rather to offer alternatives. In Djibouti, we are promoting a vision for economic development based on democratic governance, market principles, respect for human rights, and transparency. In response to Djibouti's stated economic development goals, we are focusing on strengthening local capacity, creating jobs, and working with our partners and allies on economic development that is beneficial, sustainable, and inclusive over the long term.

Question. What is the significance of the CCP pier which can accommodate larger ships, such as aircraft carriers or submarines?

Answer. The PLA military base established in Djibouti in 2017 enhances the PRC's capability to project power outside the PRC's borders and immediate periphery to advance its foreign policy and secure its interests. In the case of Djibouti, this means extending its influence in the western Indian Ocean and Red Sea region, although at the current time the base primarily provides logistical functions, like fueling and provisioning. The PRC's rapid and opaque military buildup in Africa, including ambitions to establish more bases, is a major concern.

Question. Are there opportunities for the Development Finance Corporation in Djibouti to compete with the CCP?

Answer. The Development Finance Corporation (DFC) is one of several tools available to the U.S. Government to provide debt financing, equity investments, and technical assistance to African countries, such as Djibouti, and provide them alternatives to PRC investment and loans. In Djibouti, there are several pending infrastructure and development projects that may be candidates for DFC support.

Question. Besides security assistance and hosting military forces, how is Djibouti making choices about its preferred strategic partner?

Answer. Our Embassy in Djibouti is focused on ensuring that the United States remains a key partner to Djibouti. It helps guide U.S. investment centered around Djiboutians, thereby offering a different development model than PRC's investment and lending. The Embassy invests millions of dollars of assistance in programs that build economic opportunity, give Djiboutian youth job skills, support women's economic empowerment, and save lives.

Trafficking in Persons

In the State Department's 2022 Trafficking in Persons Report, Palau was listed as Tier 2 Watch List for some minor improvements but overall still does not meet the minimum standards to eliminate trafficking.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Palau operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. The Embassy has worked closely with the Ministry of Justice and other stakeholders to encourage and increase the Government's anti-trafficking efforts. The 2023 TIP Report will be released on June 15, just two days from now, and that report will show the results of our close cooperation during the reporting period.

In his State of the Republic Address in April 2023, President Whippis cited encouraging steps his government made to address recommendations from the 2022 TIP Report, including a national action plan, interagency task force, and amendments to anti-trafficking laws.

If confirmed, I would look forward to working with the Government of Palau as partners in our effort to end modern day slavery. I will continue working in close partnership with the Ministry of Justice and other stakeholders to further improve Palau's anti-trafficking efforts, consistent with the prioritized recommendations in future TIP Reports. For example, if the 2023 TIP Report recommends training officials on victim identification, then I would work with the Ministry of Justice and other stakeholders to encourage and monitor the implementation of such training.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to portraying the reality of the trafficking situation in Palau for the annual country reports as accurately as possible?

Answer. Yes, an accurate TIP Report is imperative to identifying the drivers of trafficking and prescribing actionable recommendations that will lead to the structural change necessary to end human trafficking. If confirmed, I commit to portraying the reality of the trafficking situation in Palau in the annual country narrative and to working with Congress, the Government of Palau, and the interagency to encourage the Government to increase trafficking investigations and prosecutions and to proactively identify and protect victims.

Religious Freedom

In the State Department's 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Palau was noted as having general societal respect for religious freedom with no noted events in 2022.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. I appreciate the longstanding Congressional support on freedom of religion. As Secretary Blinken has stated, the United States maintains its unwavering support to promote respect for and protect freedom of religion or belief for all. Freedom of religion is an ideal which the United States and Palau share, and Palau has demonstrated societal and government respect for religious freedom. If confirmed, I will work together with the Ambassador At Large to explore additional ways to promote religious freedom and interfaith dialogue.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Palau increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. Embassy Koror, with the assistance of U.S. military chaplains, has conducted a broad range of engagements with the Palauan Government and with a variety of religious groups. If confirmed, I will continue to support these important engagements, which promote religious freedom and interfaith cooperation. I will encourage the Government of Palau to become party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to strengthen its support of freedom of religion or belief.

Human Rights

In the State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report, Palau was noted as having significant government corruption.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. As our Human Rights Report describes, corruption among officials in Palau was reported as a problem, although it's worth noting that the Government took steps to investigate and prosecute officials allegedly engaged in human rights abuses or corruption. We also welcomed Palau's participation in the last Summit for Democracy, where Palau endorsed the Declaration of the Summit for Democracy, thereby making political commitments to counter corruption and to protect human rights and media freedom.

The United States places great importance on civil society and, if confirmed, I will continue our strong advocacy in support of civil society in Palau's anti-corruption efforts and the promotion of human rights.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will personally engage with civil society on human rights and anti-corruption efforts. I firmly believe that the promotion of human rights and the reduction of corruption are in the interests of the people of Palau. If confirmed, in addition to engaging civil society, human rights advocates, and other non-governmental organizations on human rights issues, I look forward to meeting regularly with Palauan Government officials to affirm U.S. support for human rights and countering corruption. I will also use public diplomacy to highlight U.S. Government actions around the world, and I will describe the stark contrast of our commitment to countering corruption vis-a-vis the actions of authoritarian regimes in the region who use corruption as a tactic to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries.

International Organizations

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. The Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs works closely with IO and USUN on shared priorities and on all campaigns and hiring initiatives involving qualified American candidates for the U.N. system. If confirmed, I will continue to elevate these efforts in multilateral fora and with our partners in the region and in my engagements with U.S. citizens.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. I have immediate experience over the past year working with USUN and IO—as well as the Government of Japan as a partner—to successfully advance several American candidates. If confirmed, I will continue to work with USUN and IO colleagues to advance the United States' affirmative agenda for the U.N. and strengthen partnerships with traditional and non-traditional partners, including in U.N. specialized agencies. U.S. re-engagement at the U.N. system is critical to re-asserting U.S. leadership, including by working with our partners and allies to promote initiatives that advance shared priorities on technical matters.

 SUBMITTED TO JOEL EHRENDREICH BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today.

Question. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Yes. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Palau ties.

The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party would constructively work with the United States in good faith?

Answer. Yes, as the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as rising sea levels and increased frequency of natural disasters, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in the region.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the country in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Palau and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address China's efforts to expand its influence in Palau and the region.

The Biden Administration signed a Compact of Free Association with Palau in late May, and it now awaits Congressional approval. As we have seen, the CCP aims to disrupt the international rules-based order and has made inroads in the Indo-Pacific to challenge the U.S. position. This has been while this administration has been prioritizing advancing extreme social policy. Signing the compact is an important first step to our allies and partners in the region, as well as those considering partnerships with the CCP. However, in order for the U.S. to maintain its dominant position and security presence in the region, the U.S. needs to focus on tangible national security objectives and the advancing American interests:

Question. If confirmed, what are your priorities regarding countering the CCP in Palau and the larger region?

Answer. My priorities stem from our National Security Strategy, Indo-Pacific Strategy, and Pacific Partnership Strategy, which describe in no uncertain terms that the United States faces unprecedented challenges from the People's Republic of China. The strategies highlight the importance of enhancing our relationships with allies and partners, to include a specific focus on deepening ties with Pacific Island Countries.

If confirmed, I would work with interagency partners including the Department of Defense, USAID, Department of Interior, and others on furthering our activities related to the Compact of Free Association. More generally, I would also work with interagency partners, such as Coast Guard and FBI, on other areas of cooperation, such as building Palau's capacity in maritime domain awareness and maritime law enforcement capabilities. I would also work with our close partners in the country—Japan, Australia, and Taiwan have representatives—to promote our shared interest in a free and open Indo-Pacific region.

Question. Do you have concerns regarding the current compact not going far enough in some areas regarding our partnership to counter CCP influence?

Answer. I see the Compact and its current related agreements as the blueprint for our relationship, and they have robust defense, security and economic provisions which serve as not just powerful symbols, but also strong tools for dealing with CCP's attempts to gain influence. The Compact also may be regarded by other Pacific Island Countries as a public indicator of U.S. commitment to the region.

As I said during my hearing, I believe the strength of our partnership was confirmed by President Whipp's at the signing of the 2023 Compact Review Agreement by saying "God bless Palau! God bless the United States of America! God bless us all!"

I would add that our partnership with Palau ties together with our regional diplomacy. Our launch of the Partners of the Blue Pacific, our role as dialogue partner in the Pacific Islands Forum (PIF), our leaders-level engagements with Pacific Island Countries, our enhanced diplomatic engagement in the region to include new embassies and our first-ever special envoy to the PIF, and other initiatives all enhance our position in the region and our ability to counter our adversaries.

Question. If confirmed, what would you do to keep China out of Palau?

Answer. Under the Compact of Free Association, we maintain responsibility and authority for all defense and security matters in or relating to Palau, and access to Palau by any third parties' militaries is foreclosed, subject to the terms of the Compact. DoD has access to facilities in Palau and regularly conducts training and exercises in Palau's territory. DoD also maintains active communication with the Government of Palau on defense and security-related matters. The United States also has established defense sites in Palau, including the Tactical Multi-Mission Over-the-Horizon Radar site (TACMOR).

If confirmed, I will look for opportunities to partner with Palau and align with our allies and partners to expand diplomatic, development, and people-to-people ties that will strengthen Palau's resilience and ability to avoid predatory economic practices. If confirmed, I will work swiftly to support good governance, transparency, and anti-corruption efforts. I will also work with Congress to advance U.S. interests in the region and sustain the progress achieved through this partnership.

Question. Do you believe an aggressive left social policy should supplant national security objectives or American prosperity in our work with Palau?

Answer. I believe that Palau—like most of the world—looks to the United States as the beacon of light for the values people around the world cherish: democracy, freedom, equality, respect for human rights, and respect for the rule of law. We have a rich and deep history with Palau, and Palauans know the United States very well. For just one example, approximately 500 Palauans are currently serving in the U.S. Armed Forces—a per capita rate higher than any U.S. state.

I am confident that as our two countries' societies continue to evolve, as societies always do, our relationship with Palau will continue to advance U.S. national interests including improving our national security and prosperity. If confirmed, my efforts in Palau will seek to further deepen and expand this close relationship to ensure the advancement of our national interests.

Question. Do you believe that if Azerbaijan were to exert full territorial control over Nagorno-Karabakh (NK) the ethnic Armenians living there would be safe? Do you commit to fully advocating for the protection and security of all people living in Nagorno-Karabakh?

Answer. I am deeply concerned about the rights and security of ethnic Armenians in Nagorno-Karabakh (NK). Following the closure of the Lachin corridor roadway and in light of the worsening humanitarian situation in NK, we should press for the immediate restoration of food and humanitarian deliveries even as we redouble our diplomatic efforts to bring peace to the region. This means strenuously pressing Azerbaijan to allow the immediate delivery of food and other vital humanitarian supplies into NK—and pressing for transparency via an international implementing partner to monitor the rights and security of ethnic Armenians living there once a settlement has been agreed. If confirmed, I commit to advocating fully and energetically for the rights and security for the ethnic Armenian residents of Nagorno-Karabakh both immediately and as part of a just and durable peace agreement. That is, and in my view must remain, a central focus of U.S. diplomatic efforts.

Question. Will you commit to strongly condemning Azerbaijani efforts to block humanitarian access to Nagorno-Karabakh?

Answer. Yes. I strongly condemn Azerbaijani actions which have resulted in the blocking of humanitarian access to NK and will continue to do so if confirmed.

Question. President Aliyev has publicly threatened the lives and security of ethnic Armenians. Will you unequivocally condemn this kind of incendiary rhetoric and take steps to stop it?

Answer. Yes. I condemn any sort of threatening and incendiary rhetoric. If confirmed, I will use my position in Baku to press the Government of Azerbaijan, publicly and privately, to negotiate seriously without resorting to threats or inflammatory rhetoric.

Question. As the United States continues to facilitate talks between Armenia and Azerbaijan will you commit to prioritizing and ensuring the durable safety and security of all people, including ethnic Armenians in Karabakh?

Answer. Yes. A durable and dignified negotiated peace agreement must provide for the safety and security of all persons in the region, including the ethnic Armenians of NK. If confirmed, I will consistently advocate for the human rights of all persons in the region while doing all I can to encourage such a settlement.

Lachin Corridor

I am deeply concerned by Azerbaijan's more than 180-day blockade of Nagorno Karabakh.

Question. If confirmed, would you commit to keeping sanctions on the table as a tool to pressure Azerbaijan to end its cruel blockade?

Answer. Yes. I do not rule out the use of any of the tools at our disposal to achieve the U.S. goals of: promoting a just and durable peace agreement between Armenia and Azerbaijan; prioritizing the rights and security for the residents of Nagorno-Karabakh; and restoring free and open transit for civilian and commercial traffic through the Lachin corridor. If confirmed, I will forcefully and directly advocate with the Azerbaijani government for: unhindered civilian and commercial traffic through the Lachin corridor; transparency into the situation in Nagorno-Karabakh; the rights and security of all the people who live there; and a just and durable peace agreement between Armenia and Azerbaijan.

Azerbaijani Ties with Russia

During a recent summit in Moscow, the Azerbaijani leader claimed that Russia supported his plan for a corridor to Nakhchivan, a declaration that surprised the Armenian Prime Minister. Moreover, Azerbaijan began importing Russian gas in November to meet its domestic needs as it increases exports to the European Union. While Russia ignores the security guarantees that it gave to Armenia, Azerbaijan appears to be getting closer to Russia.

Question. How do you assess the state of Azerbaijan's relationship with Russia?

Answer. Azerbaijan occupies a difficult, strategically important geographic space between Russia and Iran. Russia pursues its own geostrategic interests in the South Caucasus and benefits from regional destabilization that creates the conditions for its continued military presence in neighboring countries. I strongly support U.S. policy that every country has a sovereign right to determine its international relations. Azerbaijan, like every other country—former Soviet state or not—has the right to pursue its foreign relations as it chooses, in the furtherance of its own interests, and in accordance with international law. The Department has made this clear publicly, at the highest levels in private discussions with regional partners, and with Russia, which should not attempt to undermine this right. Azerbaijan has demonstrated its willingness to resist Russian pressure by refusing to join the Eurasian Economic Union or rejoin the Collective Security Treaty Organization. Azerbaijan voted in favor of U.N. General Assembly Resolution 68/262, which affirmed Ukraine's territorial integrity and condemned Russia's occupation of Crimea. It has offered humanitarian and energy support to Ukraine following Russia's further invasion. If confirmed, I will do all I can to encourage Azerbaijan to continue such policies.

Question. How can we prevent Azerbaijan from financing Putin's war in Ukraine to enable its deals with the European Union?

Answer. Azerbaijan's energy resources and long-term interest in integration with the West bolster its ability and willingness to maintain independence from Russia. Azerbaijan and the United States have worked closely in developing the 16 billion cubic meter per year (bcma) Southern Gas Corridor project, which brings natural gas from Azerbaijan's Shah Deniz field to Europe. Azerbaijan signed a deal with the European Union to double its natural gas exports to the EU by 2027, which the United States strongly supports. If confirmed, I will seek to prioritize the importance of Azerbaijan's continuing efforts to support European energy security following Russia's further invasion of Ukraine.

I have long called for ending all security assistance to Azerbaijan, including through efforts to end the 907 waiver all together.

Question. Do you think the United States should be providing any form of security assistance or International Military Education & Training (IMET) to a country that attacked its neighbor in September, began a war that killed over 6,500 people in 2020, and is currently blockading a vulnerable population?

Answer. I am firmly committed to implementing the letter and spirit of the FREEDOM Support Act, as well as the recommendations of the 2022 GAO report, and all other statutory requirements including "Leahy" provisions for vetting foreign security assistance. If confirmed, I will recommend to the Administration only those policies and programs that best serve the interests and goals of the United States in Azerbaijan and in the region—and that have no negative effect on efforts to find a peaceful settlement in the conflict between Azerbaijan and Armenia. The United States carefully reviews assistance for Azerbaijan to ensure it fulfills these criteria. If confirmed, I will faithfully and scrupulously work to ensure that U.S. assistance to Azerbaijan continues to meet those conditions. U.S. security assistance to Azerbaijan promotes U.S. national security interests including counterterrorism, combating the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, securing critical energy infrastructure, and combating narcotics trafficking and human trafficking. Through E-IMET, professional military education exposes Azerbaijani military servicemembers to U.S. and NATO precepts, including civilian control of the military, human rights, and adherence to the law of war.

Armenian Genocide

I am very proud that the Senate took the important step four years ago in recognizing the Armenian Genocide with the passage of my bipartisan resolution. Not only does recognition of the past give some solace to the victims and their descendants, but being honest about this ultimate crime helps us to ensure that the crimes of the past are not repeated.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to putting out an annual statement on Armenian Genocide Remembrance Day reaffirming this ultimate crime?

Answer. Yes, I do. Your leadership on this issue has underscored the importance of recognizing the Armenian genocide. The President's last three annual statements have mourned the one and a half million Armenians who lost their lives in the Armenian genocide during the final years of the Ottoman Empire. Acknowledging and reckoning with painful periods in history, such as the Armenian genocide, is a critical step towards building a foundation for a more just and tolerant future. In this year's statement, the President asked us to recommit "to speaking out against hate, standing up for human rights, and preventing atrocities." If confirmed, I pledge to amplify this message and subsequent annual statements from the President on Armenian Remembrance Day.

Question. Do you believe that if Azerbaijan were to exert full territorial control over Nagorno-Karabakh (NK) the ethnic Armenians living there would be safe? Do you commit to fully advocating for the protection and security of all people living in Nagorno-Karabakh?

Answer. I am deeply concerned about the rights and security of ethnic Armenians in Nagorno-Karabakh (NK). Following the closure of the Lachin corridor roadway and in light of the worsening humanitarian situation in NK, we should press for the immediate restoration of food and humanitarian deliveries even as we redouble our diplomatic efforts to bring peace to the region. This means strenuously pressing Azerbaijan to allow the immediate delivery of food and other vital humanitarian supplies into NK—and pressing for transparency via an international implementing partner to monitor the rights and security of ethnic Armenians living there once a settlement has been agreed. If confirmed, I commit to advocating fully and energetically for the rights and security for the ethnic Armenian residents of Nagorno-Karabakh both immediately and as part of a just and durable peace agreement. That is, and in my view must remain, a central focus of U.S. diplomatic efforts.

Question. Will you commit to strongly condemning Azerbaijani efforts to block humanitarian access to Nagorno-Karabakh?

Answer. Yes. I strongly condemn Azerbaijani actions which have resulted in the blocking of humanitarian access to NK and will continue to do so if confirmed.

Question. President Aliyev has publicly threatened the lives and security of ethnic Armenians. Will you unequivocally condemn this kind of incendiary rhetoric and take steps to stop it?

Answer. Yes. I condemn any sort of threatening and incendiary rhetoric. If confirmed, I will use my position in Baku to press the Government of Azerbaijan, publicly and privately, to negotiate seriously without resorting to threats or inflammatory rhetoric.

Question. As the United States continues to facilitate talks between Armenia and Azerbaijan will you commit to prioritizing and ensuring the durable safety and security of all people, including ethnic Armenians in Karabakh?

Answer. Yes. A durable and dignified negotiated peace agreement must provide for the safety and security of all persons in the region, including the ethnic Armenians of NK. If confirmed, I will consistently advocate for the human rights of all persons in the region while doing all I can to encourage such a settlement.

Trafficking in Persons

In the State Department's 2022 Trafficking in Persons Report, Azerbaijan was upgraded to Tier 2 or continued efforts to meet the minimum standards to eliminate trafficking, but more work remains to improve the trafficking situation in country.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Azerbaijan operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. I support the Administration's strong commitment to combatting trafficking in persons and, if confirmed, I will pursue this goal vigorously in Azerbaijan. The United States has already implemented programs in Azerbaijan to improve the capacity of government and civil society actors to assist victims of trafficking.

The Department of State and the Embassy in Baku have welcomed the cooperation Azerbaijan has shown on trafficking issues, and if confirmed I would capitalize on this willingness to work together to tackle the challenges that remain. Although the Government of Azerbaijan has increased some of its efforts, I commit to advocating for stronger victim protection, including proactively identifying labor and internal trafficking victims, child trafficking victims, and implementing victim-centered approaches. If confirmed, I will continue promoting opportunities for U.S. capacity-building assistance to support victims.

I will also redouble our political outreach to ensure that Azerbaijan stays the course on our recommendations, to include investigating and prosecuting perpetrators of trafficking, providing adequate penalties for those convicted, and increasing proactive identification efforts for trafficking victims.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to portraying the reality of the trafficking situation in Azerbaijan in the annual country report as accurately as possible?

Answer. Yes. As with all Congressionally mandated reports, I pledge to guide our Embassy team in Baku to report on the trafficking situation in Azerbaijan accurately and completely. I will personally emphasize the importance of this issue in my political engagement with the Azerbaijani government.

Religious Freedom

In the State Department's 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Azerbaijan was listed as having a lack of governmental and societal respect for religious freedom with noted government instances of intimidation or abuse.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Azerbaijan is a Shi'a Muslim majority country with a history of religious tolerance. Followers of many different religions are able to practice their faith in Azerbaijan. Nevertheless, as you noted, the Department's annual International Religious Freedom Report on Azerbaijan documented the difficulties some religious groups face in registering their organizations and official harassment some experience in trying to practice their faith, among other issues.

If confirmed, I will work closely and directly with the Ambassador at Large and his team to improve religious freedom in Azerbaijan. I understand that the Ambassador at Large sent a team to visit Baku in March, and that they were able to press the government on these very important issues. If confirmed, I look forward to following up on their findings and engaging the government publicly and privately to uphold its international commitments regarding freedom of religion or belief.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will ensure the team at Embassy Baku continues to monitor the status of religious freedom in Azerbaijan through regular meetings—including by me personally—with civil society representatives, including those of religious organizations, and human rights activists.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Azerbaijan increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani Government to improve societal and governmental respect for religious freedom. Specifically, I will forcefully advocate for improvements in areas of concern identified in State Department reports, including facilitating the registration of all religious groups, allowing members of religious groups to choose their own leaders, and protecting the rights of members of all groups, as outlined in Azerbaijan's constitution. I will engage regularly with civil society, including with people from faith groups across the spectrum, to amplify our messaging to the Azerbaijani government and underscore U.S. support for this important issue.

Human Rights

In the State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report, Azerbaijan was listed as having a long list of significant human rights abuses, including political prisoners, limits on freedom of expression and the media, corruption, and much more.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. Human rights are at the heart of this Administration's foreign policy, and they are a key part of U.S. bilateral engagement with Azerbaijan. I believe the United States should use all the tools in its diplomatic toolbox to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms in order to create a stronger foundation for Azerbaijan's long-term security and stability. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani government at the highest levels to create an environment in which NGOs, the media, political parties, religious groups, and the private sector can operate freely. I will work to ensure U.S. foreign assistance continues to promote free and open exchange of information, democracy and human rights.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, such meetings will be among my top priorities—both upon arriving in Azerbaijan and throughout my tenure in Baku. I will continue the Embassy’s current commitment to meeting with a full range of non-governmental and civil society figures, including human rights defenders, NGO representatives, and independent journalists, to demonstrate our support for pluralism and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will express publicly and privately U.S. concerns about the shrinking space for civil society and restrictions on fundamental freedoms. Azerbaijani progress in this area would help to deepen its bilateral relationship with the United States and enhance the country’s long-term security.

International Organizations

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. I believe that it is vitally important to U.S. national security that the United States and our like-minded allies and partners do not cede influence in the U.N. system to those who do not share our values and are not committed to the foundational principles of the U.N. If confirmed, I will work closely with the International Organizations Bureau, the government of Azerbaijan, diplomats from allies and partner countries, and other stakeholders to augment the number of Americans in the U.N. system, while encouraging citizens of likeminded nations to work throughout the U.N. system.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. Although Azerbaijan has not always been as aligned with the United States in the U.N. as we might hope, if confirmed, I commit to working regularly with the Government in Baku to advance U.S. interests in U.N. institutions. My team and I will maintain regular contact with Azerbaijan counterparts—and with colleagues in USUN and IO—to ensure maximum coordination on upcoming votes and other actions in the U.N. and other multilateral bodies, including actions to stand with Ukraine. My team and I will continue to seek opportunities for further cooperation with Azerbaijan on these important issues.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARK W. LIBBY BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People’s Republic of China is the “only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it.” The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People’s Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that “the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Azerbaijan ties.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests?

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence’s 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.”

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party would constructively work with the United States in good faith?

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State’s new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in the region.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People’s Republic of China in the country in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Azerbaijan and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State, interagency colleagues, and Congress to address China’s efforts to expand its influence in Azerbaijan and the region.

Question. Over several administrations, a peaceful resolution to the Azerbaijan-Armenia conflict has been sought regarding the Nagorno-Karabakh territory. U.S. assistance aimed to mitigate the impacts of the conflict and parity with regards to Foreign Military Financing assistance to both sides. Since 2001, the annual presidential waiver to Section 907 of the FREEDOM Support Act has taken place and enabled U.S. military aid and other foreign assistance to Azerbaijan. If confirmed, how would you work on resolving continued Nagorno-Karabakh territorial disputes and access?

Answer. The United States supports direct engagement between Azerbaijan and Armenia to work toward a peaceful resolution of the conflict, which has lasted more than 30 years. Senior U.S. officials have been very engaged in this process, including Secretary Blinken, who has hosted two rounds of peace talks in Washington and spoken directly to the leaders multiple times over the last year. A durable and dignified peace must be one that emanates from the region—we cannot impose a solution on Armenia and Azerbaijan. Armenia has publicly acknowledged that an arrangement between the population of Nagorno-Karabakh and the Azerbaijani government is essential for securing the rights and security of those belonging to the ethnic Armenian residents of Nagorno-Karabakh. In this regard, transparency for the international community is critical. The State Department prioritizes the rights and security for the residents of Nagorno-Karabakh at every level of engagement with the Azerbaijan government—including with President Aliyev. If confirmed, I will advocate forcefully with Azerbaijan for transparency into the situation in Nagorno-Karabakh and for the rights and security of all the people who live there.

Question. If confirmed, would you advocate for a presidential waiver to Section 907, despite the well documented human rights abuses committed by Azeri security forces against Armenian civilians?

Answer. U.S. assistance to Azerbaijan promotes U.S. national security interests, which is why every Administration has waived section 907 of the FREEDOM Support Act every year since 2002. The most recent waiver went into effect June 22, 2022. The United States does not approve any security assistance or military sales that could undermine efforts to find a peaceful settlement of the conflict between Azerbaijan and Armenia. I am firmly committed to implementing both the letter and spirit of the FREEDOM Support Act—as well as the recommendations of the 2022 GAO report and all applicable “Leahy” legislative requirements for vetting foreign security assistance. If confirmed, I will recommend to the Administration the policies and programs that best serve the interests and goals of the United States in Azerbaijan and in the region and that will have no negative effect on the peace process.

Question. How would a long-term peace deal between Azerbaijan and Armenia impact Russian influence in the region?

Answer. The Russia-negotiated trilateral arrangement paused the fighting in 2020, but was written in a way that set up Russia as the chief arbiter and allowed each side to interpret it as it sees fit. While Russia has, at times, played a role in convening the parties, Russia also pursues its own geostrategic interests in the Caucasus and benefits from regional destabilization that creates the conditions for its continued military presence in neighboring countries. Direct engagement between the sides leading to a durable and dignified peace agreement offers the clearest path forward to resolving the Armenia-Azerbaijan conflict. It provides the best opportunity for the sides to demonstrate their sovereignty and independence and reduce Russian influence.

Question. How realistic is a peace deal to occur between Azerbaijan and Armenia while Russia is consumed by its war in Ukraine?

Answer. The United States supports direct engagement between Azerbaijan and Armenia to work toward a peaceful resolution of the conflict. Senior U.S. officials have been very engaged in this process, including Secretary Blinken, who has hosted two rounds of talks in Washington and spoken directly to the leaders multiple times over the last year. The parties have publicly committed to this peace process and the United States is supporting them as a facilitator. I share the Administration's belief that a durable and dignified peace must be one that emanates from the parties, and the United States and partners such as the European Union are working hard to support the parties in their talks. As Secretary Blinken said following talks he hosted in May, "there is an agreement within sight, within reach. And achieving that agreement would be, I think, not only historic, but would be profoundly in the interests of the people of Azerbaijan and Armenia, and would have very positive effects even beyond their two countries." Reaching a durable and dignified peace agreement offers the best opportunity for each of the sides to demonstrate their sovereignty and independence and reduce Russian malign influence in the region. If confirmed, I will advocate vigorously and directly with the government of Azerbaijan to take the steps necessary to reach such an agreement.

In the State Department's 2022 Trafficking in Persons Report, Malaysia was listed as Tier 3 for continued failure to meet the minimum standards to eliminate trafficking.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Malaysia operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. Working with the interagency team at U.S. Embassy Kuala Lumpur, and in close partnership with the State Department's Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (J/TIP) and other elements of the U.S. Government, I will seek to advance our anti-trafficking goals. If confirmed, I will push publicly and privately for Malaysia to take meaningful action to combat trafficking. I will urge the Malaysian Government to increase the capacity of local law enforcement to investigate, prosecute, and convict traffickers—especially labor traffickers. The Malaysian Government publicly stated its desire to continue improving its anti-trafficking efforts after Malaysia was upgraded to Tier 2 Watch List in the State Department's 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report. If confirmed, I plan to work closely with the Malaysian Government to achieve our shared goals of protecting victims and bringing traffickers to justice.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to portraying the reality of the trafficking situation in Malaysia in the annual country report as accurately as possible?

Answer. An accurate Trafficking in Persons Report is vital to publicly identify the drivers of trafficking and prescribe actionable recommendations that will lead to the structural change necessary to end trafficking as well as maintain U.S. credibility. If confirmed, I commit to portraying the reality of the trafficking situation in Malaysia in the annual country report and to working with Congress and U.S. Government agencies to push for additional action by the Malaysian Government to increase trafficking investigations, prosecutions and convictions of traffickers, and to increase victim identification and protection.

Religious Freedom

In the State Department's 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Malaysia was listed as lacking governmental and societal respect for religious freedom but that the U.S. Embassy had stressed the importance of tolerance and community understanding.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. As Secretary Blinken has stated, the United States maintains its unwavering support to promote respect for and protection of freedom of religion or belief for all. I understand that Embassy Kuala Lumpur has conducted a broad range of engagement with the Malaysian Government and with civil society to highlight the importance of religious freedom. If confirmed, I would ensure that we continue these important engagements, and I would work with the Ambassador at Large for Religious Freedom to explore ways to bolster religious freedom in Malaysia. I appreciate the longstanding Congressional support on freedom of religion or belief and, if confirmed, look forward to working with Congress to continue to preserve and protect this human right.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Promoting respect for human rights, including freedom of religion or belief, and the rule of law, is fundamental to U.S. values and interests. If confirmed, I commit to personally engaging with civil society and the Malaysian Government on these issues and other human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Malaysia increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. There are limits on freedom of religion or belief in Malaysia, including through federal and state laws against blasphemy and apostasy, and there are also restrictions on all non-Sunni forms of Islam. If confirmed, I will urge the Government of Malaysia to encourage Malaysian authorities to increase respect for members of religious minority groups and resolve longstanding cases of enforced disappearances of religious figures. I will also work with civil society to promote religious tolerance for members of all religious groups.

Human Rights

In the State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report, Malaysia was listed as having a litany of human rights abuses, including reports of arbitrary killings, torture, censorship, limits on freedom of assembly and expression, among many others.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. The United States places great importance on civil society and NGOs because they serve as the critical links between government and the public, and I have worked extensively with civil society organizations throughout my career. If confirmed, I will continue our strong advocacy both publicly and privately in support of the critical role played by civil society in Malaysia's democratic development and promotion of human rights. If confirmed, I would work to advance democratic values and respect for human rights in my engagements at all levels of the Malaysian Government and with all parts of Malaysian society.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will personally engage with civil society on human rights and fundamental freedoms. I firmly believe that the promotion of human rights is in the interest of all people in the United States and Malaysia and will work in support of that goal. If confirmed, in addition to engaging civil society, human rights advocates, and other non-governmental organizations on human rights issues, I look forward to meeting regularly with Malaysian Government officials to affirm U.S. support for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

International Organizations

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. The Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs works closely with IO and USUN on shared priorities and on all campaigns and hiring initiatives involving qualified American candidates for the U.N. system. If confirmed, I will continue to engage the Malaysian Government to gain support for U.S. citizens seeking to work in the U.N. system and other multilateral organizations.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with USUN and IO colleagues to advance the United States' affirmative agenda for the U.N. and strengthen partnerships with traditional and non-traditional partners, including in specialized and technical agencies. U.S. re-engagement at the U.N. system is critical to reasserting U.S. leadership, including by working with our partners and allies to promote initiatives that advance shared priorities on technical matters.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the country in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be to advance U.S. interests in Malaysia and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partnerships in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues, as well as Congress to address the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in Malaysia and the region.

Since the late 1990s, the U.S. enjoyed a deepening of bilateral ties with Malaysia. However, recent developments in both countries have led to uncertainties regarding the strength of these ties now, and into the future. Friction between the U.S. and Malaysia have included human rights concerns, U.S. military interventions in the Middle East, and U.S. support for Israel. Even with the backdrop, U.S.-Malaysia military security cooperation has been active in countering terrorism activities in Southeast Asia and includes naval cooperation near the Malacca Strait.

Question. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between the U.S. and Malaysia?

Answer. The United States and Malaysia enjoy a strong partnership based on robust economic, security, and people-to-people ties, and rooted in our shared national interests. We cooperate on security matters, including counterterrorism, cybersecurity, maritime security, and efforts to promote regional stability. Our economic relationship continues to expand with bilateral trade reaching nearly $80 billion and supporting an estimated 58,000 U.S. jobs. Bilateral military cooperation, in particular, is continually expanding, supporting regional security needs of both Malaysia and the United States. Additionally, Malaysia's recent interest in accelerating its clean energy transition and becoming a Carbon Capture, Utilization and Storage leader in Southeast Asia offers substantial U.S.-Malaysia energy cooperation. Malaysia has prospered during decades of stability in Southeast Asia underpinned by the United States' diplomacy and presence. If confirmed, I will work with Departments and Agencies across the U.S. Government and with Congress to further strengthen relations with Malaysia.

Question. Are you concerned with the existing relationship? Please explain.

Answer. Since becoming Prime Minister in November 2022, Anwar Ibrahim has fostered an environment for greater collaboration and cooperation between our two countries on issues of mutual interest including human rights, economic development, and South China Sea issues.

If confirmed, I would engage with the highest levels of the Malaysian Government to further strengthen our partnership and would work closely with Congress as well as empower my staff to further expand relationships central to U.S. strategic goals.

Question. If confirmed, are there opportunities or projects you would advocate for as Ambassador to utilize the Development Finance Corporation in Malaysia?

Answer. An important energy producer, Malaysia is the world's fourth-largest exporter of Liquefied Natural Gas. Prime Minister Anwar's Administration has signaled one of its priorities is the clean energy transition and becoming the Carbon Capture, Utilization and Storage regional leader in Southeast Asia. As Ambassador, if confirmed, I would encourage the Development Finance Corporation, in partnership with the State Department's Clean EDGE Asia program, other U.S. agencies, the private sector, and the Malaysian Government and Congress to identify opportunities that would support and accelerate Malaysia's clean energy transition.

Question. How would you advance U.S. support for Israel in Malaysia if confirmed?

Answer. Having served in Israel for three years, I know well the value of its international engagement. If confirmed as Ambassador to Malaysia, I would work to ensure awareness of the significant changes in the Middle East following the Abraham Accords, including the growing normalization of relations between key Arab nations and Israel. I would work with the Government of Malaysia and civil society to identify potential areas of opportunity to improve Israel-Malaysia relations. I would also highlight the tangible benefits of normalization, as demonstrated by the Abraham Accords, other normalization agreements, and the Negev Forum.

Malaysia takes careful steps when balancing strategies with the U.S. and China in its relations. Malaysia has typically taken a low-key approach regarding confronting tensions with China in the South China Sea, it prioritizes negotiating a code of conduct between ASEAN and China to govern behavior. Malaysia has also entered into CCP Belt and Road Initiative projects including port, rail, and manufacturing investments.

Question. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between China and Malaysia?

Answer. Malaysia has a significant economic relationship with the People's Republic of China (PRC) which Malaysian leaders see as key to achieving the country's development goals. The PRC has been Malaysia's largest trading partner since 2009 and was the country's largest investor in 2022.

Malaysia does not recognize the PRC's so-called "nine-dash line" or its other expansive and unlawful South China Sea (SCS) maritime claims, which overlap with Malaysia's exclusive economic zone (EEZ) and continental shelf. Malaysia has publicly stated the PRC's SCS claims, persistent patrols in Malaysia's EEZ, and air incursions into Malaysian-managed air space pose a threat to Malaysia. Despite the PRC presence and intrusions, Malaysia is actively engaged in oil and gas exploration and recovery on its continental shelf notwithstanding the PRC's expansive and unlawful overlapping maritime claims.

If confirmed, I would work with Malaysia, with U.S. Government departments and agencies, and with Congress to increase U.S. economic engagement while strengthening our security partnership and our people-to-people ties.

Question. Are you concerned with their existing relationship? Please explain.

Answer. PM Anwar's public statements have emphasized the need for Malaysia to maintain "strategic balance" between the United States and the PRC. If confirmed, I will work with U.S. Government departments and agencies, Congress, and the private sector to strengthen existing areas of cooperation with Malaysia, expand our partnership to new areas and identify alternatives to PRC financing.

Question. Do you believe an ASEAN Code of Conduct will ever be agreed to between the PRC and ASEAN? If so, when?

Answer. The United States supports ASEAN efforts to negotiate a meaningful and effective Code of Conduct (COC) on the SCS with the PRC that is fully consistent with international law as reflected in the 1982 Law of the Sea Convention and protects the rights and interests of third parties.

We also support ASEAN countries to continue their progress in negotiating maritime boundary agreements to resolve their overlapping lawful maritime entitlements to support the international law of the sea and to strengthen their collective voice during the COC negotiations. Although it is unclear if or when negotiations might conclude, if confirmed as Ambassador, I will work with Malaysia, including by continuing our existing legal engagement, to strengthen ASEAN's collective voice and support efforts to ensure any COC protects U.S. interests.

Question. Do you believe the CCP would honor an ASEAN Code of Conduct?

Answer. I believe a strong and unified ASEAN that negotiates a meaningful and effective Code of Conduct that protects the rights and interests of third parties is the best way to ensure the People's Republic of China honors its commitments.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. NISHA DESAI BISWAL BY SENATOR JOHN BARRASSO

Question. What specific criteria is used by the International Development Finance Corporation (DFC) to decide whether the United States should make an equity investment?

Answer. It is my understanding that DFC's objectives and criteria for equity investments are specified in the BUILD Act (22 USC Sec. 9621c(3)). DFC takes into account whether support for the project would: substantially reduce or overcome the effect of an identified market failure in the country; would not proceed or would be substantially delayed without support; contribute to transforming local conditions to promote development of markets; be aligned with commercial partner incentives; have significant developmental impact and contribute to sustainability; and furthers U.S. policy. Equity is clearly an important tool for DFC to pursue its dual strategic and developmental mission. DFC also looks at the investment's growth prospects and the ability of the Corporation to exit the investment in the future. This is done by establishing a management approval process requiring a thorough evaluation of how each proposed investment satisfies these objectives.

Question. With the increased risks and exposure of equity investments, what requirements are being put in place to ensure adequate oversight and risk management?

Answer. In addition to DFC's Board of Directors' oversight, it is my understanding that DFC's Chief Risk Officer and an enterprise risk management program help the Corporation navigate the risks and opportunities associated with its proposed investments. I also understand that specific processes for origination and oversight of equity investments have been put in place to help control risks associated with equity investments.

Question. Do you support the DFC providing equity investments in a foreign state-owned enterprise? If yes, under what circumstances?

Answer. The BUILD Act requires DFC to mobilize private sector capital to the markets where it can work, many of which feature state owned enterprises (SOEs). Generally, DFC has understood this mandate to mean that DFC should not invest in SOEs, but there could be cases where an investment through an SOE does in fact mobilize private capital.

Question. Do you support the DFC providing equity or investment financing to upper-middle income countries like Brazil, China, Mexico, Russia, and Turkey? If yes, under what circumstances?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that DFC follows applicable law related to country eligibility. I understand that DFC is prohibited by law from supporting investment in Russia and I can affirm that DFC does not intend to make any investments in China. However, I understand that under the BUILD Act, DFC is able to support projects in other upper middle-income countries subject to obtaining Presidential certification that the investment is in the national economic or foreign policy interests of the United States; and that such support is designed to produce significant developmental outcomes or provide developmental benefits to the poorest population of that country.

Question. Please explain the DFC's net zero carbon plan.

Answer. I understand DFC announced a commitment to reach net zero emissions through its investment portfolio by 2040. Under this plan, DFC will retain the ability to support other technologies or energy sources on a case-by-case basis when there are strong developmental or geostrategic benefits.

Question. How does DFC's net-zero carbon plan align with U.S. efforts to support other U.S. goals, such as the 30,000-megawatt goal under Power Africa?

Answer. I believe DFC's priorities to support investment in affordable, reliable energy are closely aligned with the objectives of Power Africa. Significant investment in a wide array of technologies and sources of energy to reduce energy poverty in Africa. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Power Africa.

Question. Do you believe developing nations should be exempt from the net-zero carbon target?

Answer. I believe access to reliable, sustainable sources of energy are critical to economic activity in developing nations. If confirmed, I will work to increase energy as a key focus of DFC. I understand that DFC's portfolio target does not prevent it from supporting strategic projects in the gas sector if certain conditions are met or other industries that help deliver strong developmental impacts or contribute to key geostrategic goals.

No modern economy can run on variable renewable power alone. Developing countries will need reliable base load energy to run a manufacturing plant, data center, or a hospital. The DFC's new CO2 emissions cap limits the US to financing only 8 more natural gas power plants globally and forever.

Question. What is your view on this policy and the impact on the developing world?

Answer. I believe that DFC should look to support solutions that provide affordable, reliable power supply. There are many options for countries to achieve that goal. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the team at DFC to explore ways to increase energy access.

Question. How important is providing reliable baseload energy when assisting countries with economic growth, job creation and poverty reduction?

Answer. Supplying businesses and households with reliable energy is essential to economic growth, job creation, and poverty reduction.

On October 24, 2021, the President of Uganda wrote an opinion editorial in the Wall Street Journal titled, "Solar and Wind Force Poverty on Africa." He stated, "Africa can't sacrifice its future prosperity for Western climate goals." The President of Uganda explained, "This stands to forestall Africa's attempts to rise out of poverty, which require reliable energy. African manufacturing will struggle to attract investment and therefore to create jobs without consistent energy sources."

Question. Given the extensive expertise of the United States in these areas, why isn't the DFC financing more projects with coal, oil, and natural gas to developing nations?

Answer. My understanding is that DFC is responsive to the demands of the private market for investment support. The companies that seek DFC support conduct their own analysis and determine what type of energy is most suitable for the local market. DFC considers energy projects on a case-by-case basis. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that advancing energy security remains a key focus of DFC investments.

Question. Do you support the DFC financing coal, oil and natural gas projects?

Answer. I understand that DFC considers energy projects on a case-by-case basis. DFC can support strategic projects in the gas sector if certain conditions are met or other industries that help deliver strong developmental impacts or contribute to key geostrategic goals. If confirmed, I will support DFC's policy.

Question. Would you pursue an all-of-the-above energy strategy at the DFC?

Answer. My understanding is that DFC has not imposed restrictions on specific technologies or energy sources for power projects. If confirmed, I will support DFC's policy of advancing market driven investments that advance energy security through a wide array of technologies.

Question. What restrictions are currently in place on the financing of energy projects, including coal, oil and natural gas, at the DFC?

Answer. My understanding is that DFC has not imposed restrictions on specific technologies for power projects. If confirmed, I would continue this practice.

Question. Please outline the DFC's priorities in revising its environmental and social policies and procedures.

Answer. I understand that the last major update to DFC's Environmental and Social Policy and procedures (ESPP) occurred in 2016 when it was still operating as the Overseas Private Investment Corporation under different statutory authority. I have been briefed that DFC is updating its ESPP to keep up with evolving best practices and the standards of its peer development finance institutions and to clarify provisions that have led to confusion in practice. If confirmed, I look forward to learning more about these policies and the procedures.

In April, it was announced that the Export-Import Bank of the United States and the DFC may lend up to $4 billion for the development of small modular nuclear reactors in Poland.

Question. Do you support the DFC financing more nuclear energy projects?

Answer. Yes.

Question. If confirmed, what steps would you take to promote nuclear energy projects?

Answer. I understand that DFC has been engaged in discussions with various stakeholders including discussions regarding potential support for projects that deploy small, modular nuclear reactor (SMR) technology. If confirmed, I would look forward to advancing these efforts.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. NISH DESAI BISWAL BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. The Chinese Communist Party (CCP), has, and continues to, pursue policies that are more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. The United States and the CCP are strategic competitors. If confirmed, I will advance the strategic foreign policy and development goals of the United States as called for under the BUILD Act.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests?

Answer. International investment activities directed by the Chinese Communist Party come with significant risk of dependence, environmental degradation, and harm to local communities. None of these potential outcomes are in the U.S. interest.

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party would constructively work with the United States in good faith?

Answer. While the United States and the People's Republic of China (PRC) are strategic competitors, it may be possible for the PRC to make constructive contributions in areas of mutual interest, including in disaster response. If the U.S. pursues cooperation, we must remain clear-eyed about the challenges that the PRC poses and continue to best position ourselves to compete economically. Any PRC contributions must be scrutinized, however, to ensure they are not springboards for PRC economic and security interests.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the organization in which you will work?

Answer. It would not be appropriate for DFC to work with government entities or institutions of the People's Republic of China, or entities that are otherwise controlled by the CCP.

Question. In May 2022, I sent a letter to the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation's (DFC) CEO Scott Nathan regarding the use of taxpayer funds that bankroll international projects focused on climate change and gender equity instead of facilitating advancement of national security policy goals and advancing American prosperity. DFC has continued to prioritize climate-change and an extreme social agenda, while the CCP continues to expand its control over foreign critical infrastructure projects that matter to the economies of the U.S., allies, Africa, Latin America, the Indo-Pacific, and beyond. How does the DFC weigh its funding priorities with respect to its development and foreign policy objectives?

Answer. It is my understanding that DFC funding is allocated to projects that advance development and foreign policy priorities. Transactions that do not fit within DFC's statutory mandate under the BUILD Act are not supported. If confirmed, I would work to ensure that DFC remains faithful to its strategic and developmental mandates.

Question. When was the last time the DFC invested in a project whose primary objective was not to advance a gender equity or climate priority?

Answer. It is my understanding that pursuant to the BUILD Act, DFC invests in projects that advance development and foreign policy objectives. For example, DFC's Board of Directors approved last month a $150 million loan for the expansion, renovation, and operation of the Freetown International Airport in Sierra Leone. This came on the heels of the approval of a $150 million investment to expand and modernize a port in Ecuador, among other infrastructure and critical technology projects.

Question. When was the last time the DFC declined a strategically important investment opportunity because it did not believe it sufficiently advanced a gender equity or climate priority?

Answer. It is my understanding that DFC does not decline investments because of insufficient contributions to gender equity or climate goals.

Question. What is the average timeline for DFC to receive a project proposal to it being authorized/approved?

Answer. I understand that DFC project approval timelines vary depending on the complexity of the project, with some taking as short as six months and others over a year.

Question. What would it take to shorten that timeline?

Answer. I understand that DFC is working to shorten timelines by building its overall capacity and improving processes to meet demand. If confirmed, I look forward to advancing these efforts and identifying additional ways that DFC can optimize its processes.

Question. Last week, media reports indicated that the DFC would be re-organized to focus on five key sectors: Infrastructure and minerals, energy, health and agriculture, small business support, and funds. The reorganization has already received criticism across the DFC who are concerned that the process is rushed. Have you been briefed on the reorganization of the DFC?

Answer. I am aware of the broad strokes of DFC's potential re-alignment based on sector strategies. If confirmed, I look forward to learning more about the process.

Question. If confirmed, how would you ensure that the reorganization helps DFC achieve the core objective of the BUILD Act, to provide nations an alternative to Chinese Belt and Road Initiative projects?

Answer. I understand that DFC's potential realignment efforts are closely guided by DFC's BUILD Act mandates to advance development and strategic interests of the United States. If confirmed, I expect to be closely involved in DFC's organizational efforts to ensure it meets these objectives.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21, 2023

U.S. SENATE
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:17 p.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Christopher A. Coons presiding.

Present: Senators Coons [presiding], Ricketts, Young, and Cruz.
Also Present: Senator Carper.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER A. COONS, U.S. SENATOR FROM DELAWARE

Senator COONS. I would like to call this hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to order.

We are here today to consider nominations for five important positions: Ms. Kara McDonald for Ambassador to Lithuania; Ambassador Jack Markell for Ambassador to Italy and San Marino; Ambassador Dorothy Shea for Deputy Representative to the U.S. Mission to the U.N.; Ms. Vernelle FitzPatrick for Ambassador to Gabon; and Ambassador Lisa Peterson for Ambassador to Burundi.

My colleague, Senator Carper, is going to come to introduce my dear friend and our former governor, Jack Markell, and when he arrives I will suspend to allow him to make that introduction.

Let me just make some brief remarks, if I could, about the other ambassadors and nominees we will hear from today in their order of listing by the State Department.

Ms. McDonald, your experience as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor and director of the United Nations and international operations at the National Security Council will serve you well in this position.

I look forward to hearing how you will work with one of our most important partners through NATO and the EU, if confirmed.

I will wait until my senior senator introduces Ambassador Markell to make some comments.

Ambassador Shea, I am impressed by your 31 years of service in our Foreign Service including most recently as Ambassador to Lebanon, an exceptionally difficult country, and I look forward to hearing how you will strengthen our engagement at the U.N. across a range of humanitarian issues.

Ms. FitzPatrick, your time as director of the Office of Assistance to Africa in the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, known as PRM, and as Deputy Chief of Mission for the U.S. Embassy in Cameroon well suits you for an ambassadorship in neighboring Gabon.

I look forward to hearing how you will strengthen our partnership with this important African nation.

And, Ambassador Peterson, you bring a wealth of knowledge and experience from your time as Ambassador to Eswatini to your work at DRL.

I look forward to learning how you will take advantage of warming relations with Burundi, or maybe less cold relations with Burundi, to support improvements on human rights issues and to push back on Russia's malign influence in that country and across the continent.

Do we have an update on the timing of Senator Carper?

No. I will simply proceed with an introduction, if I might, of Ambassador Markell.

I have known Ambassador Markell and his fantastic wife, Carla, for 35 years—I did the math—and over your decades of public service as our state treasurer, as our governor, and now as ambassador to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, you have been guided by strong values and a sharp intellect.

A dedicated and capable public servant with experience, intelligence, and character, you will serve us well as U.S. Ambassador to Italy, one of our most important and longest-standing partners in Europe.

I look forward to hearing how your experience at the OECD among your other previous positions of leadership will guide you in Italy, and I will also just reference your strong educational background both at Brown University and at the University of Chicago School of Business.

I will ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution from the Delaware Commission on Italian Heritage and Culture in support of your nomination for the record.

That is my opening.

Senator Ricketts, did you have any opening comments?

STATEMENT OF HON. PETE RICKETTS, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEBRASKA

Senator RICKETTS. Yeah. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I just wanted to say thank you to all of our folks that are here today for your service to our country and, of course, I am always biased toward governors but I want to especially say thank you to our career Foreign Service people because as governor myself I know that when I have been on trade missions the Foreign Service staff at our embassies is just top notch and has always done a great job of representing our country.

I know you and your families all sacrifice to be able to represent our great nation, that you do it in such a way that really represents the United States so, so well and that you spend time outside of the country away from your friends and family.

Your families also have to make that sacrifice, and just I appreciate everything that you do and that also that you all have very tough jobs ahead of you, certainly, with the changing environment.

We remind the world is a very dangerous place with Russia's aggression in Ukraine and the rising belligerence of the Chinese Communist Party in the People's Republic of China.

You are all going to have to deal with that in your respective future areas where you are going to have to manage both Russia and the PRC, and that is going to be a tough job, going forward.

So I just wanted to say, again, thank you to you and your families and I look forward to hearing the testimony.

Senator COONS. Thank you very much, Senator Ricketts, and thank you for agreeing to serve as the ranking member for this confirmation hearing.

Just a moment on process and timing. As you may have heard from the bells, we are in the middle of a vote on the floor of the Senate.

Senator Ricketts and I have agreed that we will simply suspend in about 20 minutes. Basically, after you have concluded your openings we will suspend, run to the floor, vote, and return and then begin a five-minute round of questioning.

So I could not agree more with Senator Ricketts that I am thankful to your families for the support and sacrifice that is involved in service overseas and to each of you for the time that you have dedicated to public service here at home and around the world.

So if I might, Meg, do we have any update?

Voice: I am checking.

Senator COONS. Thank you. I am simply going to invite our nominees to begin their opening statements in the order in which they were noticed for this hearing and when Senator Carper joins us we will suspend.

So, Ms. McDonald, if you might begin.

STATEMENT OF KARA C. MCDONALD, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF LITHUANIA

Ms. MCDONALD. Thank you.

Chairman Coons, Ranking Member Ricketts, distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as the nominee for U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Lithuania. I want to thank President Biden and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me.

Before I begin I want to thank and honor those who make it possible for me to be here today: my husband just behind me, Geneve Mantri, of 21 years of marriage for his selfless love, his good wit through a life in the Foreign Service.

We are blessed to have two children also with us today, Liam and Ciaran, whom I thank for their resilience through multiple languages, schools, and countries.

I also want to thank my parents and brother, John, for their love and support, to my dad whose own parents never got to go to high school but who proceeded to go on to medical school, who served in the U.S. military, and who has always championed my education and my career in public service, and to my late mom who passed last year for her grit and for teaching me to work hard and especially to leave every place better than I found it.

I am a career Foreign Service officer with 25 years of government experience under seven presidential administrations. Much of my career has been focused on advancing freedom and countering authoritarianism in Europe and beyond.

Russia's brutal war against Ukraine I think illustrates well that upholding freedom, the sovereign right of a country to determine its future and to choose democracy, is essential to our interests in the United States and to international security.

It has been a privilege for me in my current position to work with this committee to hold Russia to account over the past couple of years as well as to advance human rights in Europe and beyond, and I want to thank the members of this committee for the bipartisan support and leadership that you all have shown on these issues.

If confirmed you can expect that there will be no higher priority for me than the safety and security of mission Vilnius and all Americans in the Republic of Lithuania.

My second priority is to strengthen regional security and to elevate Lithuania in its support to Ukraine.

Lithuania—Lithuania is punching above its weight. It is a strong partner. It is a strategic ally with outsized contributions to transatlantic security. It is hosting, as you know, Mr. Chairman, in Vilnius in a couple of weeks the next NATO summit and it consistently models investment in the alliance and its defense with current defense spending at just over 2.5 percent of GDP.

That is because, I believe, Lithuania knows what is at stake. It is providing over 1 billion euro in assistance to Ukraine, it is welcoming 77,000 Ukrainian refugees, and it is even crowd funding drones and radars.

My third priority will be to deepen economic and commercial ties and, very specifically, to support Lithuania as it derisks its energy and commercial relationships from autocratic sources.

Lithuania has led the way on energy independence and was the first EU country to stop all energy imports from Russia.

Likewise, Lithuania, with support from the U.S. and others, has shown remarkable resilience and courage in the face of economic coercion from the People's Republic of China.

My fourth priority will be to strengthen our shared work to advance democratic principles in the region. I have to say I am inspired by the Lithuanian people, who refuse to accept Soviet occupation, which we also rejected.

In fact, we maintained the Lithuanian Embassy here in Washington, DC., and Lithuania was the first nation to step out bravely to declare independence from the Soviet Union.

Last year we celebrated and commemorated proudly 100 years of diplomatic ties. We are truly partners in freedom.

Lithuania's commitment to countering authoritarianism is evident not just in its support to Ukraine but also in the safe harbor that it provides for Belarusian and Russian activists, who continue to aspire for freedom at home.

Mr. Chairman, the relationship between the United States and Lithuania is strong. If confirmed, I pledge to partner with Congress on these priorities as we strive towards a more free, a more prosperous, and a more peaceful tomorrow.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I welcome your questions.

[The prepared statement of Ms. McDonald follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KARA C. McDONALD

Chairman Coons, Ranking Member Ricketts, distinguished Members of the Committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as the nominee for U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Lithuania. I thank President Biden and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me.

I want to honor those who made it possible for me to be here. I thank my husband of 21 years, Geneve Mantri, for his selfless love and good wit through a foreign service career. We are blessed to have two sons, Liam and Ciaran, whom I thank for their resilience through multiple moves, languages, and schools. I am grateful for my parents and brother John. To my Dad, whose own parents never went to high school, but who earned a medical degree, served in the U.S. military, and championed my education and career in public service. And to my late Mom, who taught me grit, to work hard, and to leave every place better than I found it.

I am a career Foreign Service Officer with 25 years of government service under seven Presidential administrations. Much of my career has focused on supporting freedom and countering authoritarianism in Europe and globally. As Russia's brutal war against Ukraine demonstrates, upholding freedom the right of a sovereign country to determine its future and to choose democracy is central to America's interests and international security. In my current position, I have been privileged to work with this Committee over the last three years to hold Russia to account for its abuses, to counter the Kremlin's disinformation and aggressive behavior, and to defend and advance human rights and democratic values in Europe and beyond. I thank the Committee for its strong bipartisan leadership on these issues.

If confirmed, I will have no higher priority than the safety and security of Mission Vilnius and all U.S. citizens in the Republic of Lithuania.

My second priority will be to strengthen regional security and counter Russia's aggression.

Lithuania is a true strategic partner and strong NATO ally, with outsized contributions to Transatlantic security. In July, Lithuania will host in Vilnius the next NATO Summit, and Lithuania consistently models a commitment to investing in the Alliance, with current defense spending at over 2.5 percent of GDP.

This is because Lithuania knows what is at stake, and it is providing inspiring support to Ukraine with over one billion euro in assistance, welcoming over 77,000 refugees from Ukraine, and even crowdfunding radars and a combat drone.

If confirmed, I will strengthen our security partnership and Alliance through NATO and elevate Lithuania in its support for Ukraine.

My third priority will be to deepen our bilateral trade and commercial ties, and to support Lithuania's energy security and sustainability.

Once again punching above its weight, Lithuania is leading by example to de-risk its trade and energy relationships from autocratic sources. Lithuania led the way on energy independence, and was the first EU member to stop all energy imports from Russia. Likewise, Lithuania exhibited extraordinary resilience to economic coercion from the People's Republic of China. With support from the United States and others, Lithuania is now a model for turning economic vulnerability into opportunity. If confirmed, I look forward to advancing these secure and resilient supply chains.

My fourth priority will be to partner and strengthen our shared work with Lithuania in advancing democratic principles and human rights in the region and globally.

I am inspired by the steadfast refusal of the Lithuanian people to accept Soviet occupation which the United States also rejected. In fact, we maintained the Lithuanian Embassy here in Washington, DC throughout Soviet times. The Lithuanians then stepped out bravely as the first nation to declare independence from the Soviet Union, and last year, Lithuania and the United States proudly commemorated 100 years of bilateral ties. We are truly partners in freedom.

Lithuania's commitment to countering authoritarianism is evident in its safe harbor for Belarusian and Russian activists who continue to pursue freedom and democratic aspirations in their home countries. And working with our motivated partners in the Lithuanian Government, I hope to build on progress to address the legacy of the Holocaust.

The relationship between the United States and Lithuania is strong. If confirmed, I pledge to partner with Congress to further these priorities, and to engage individuals from across Lithuanian society as we strive toward a more free, more prosperous, and more peaceful tomorrow.

Mister Chairman, Ranking Member, thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

Senator COONS. Thank you very much, Ms. McDonald.

Ambassador Markell, I may skip over you in order to allow Senator Carper the opportunity to introduce you once he arrives. Is that all right?

If I might, Ms. Shea, please proceed.

STATEMENT OF HON. DOROTHY CAMILLE SHEA, OF NORTH CAROLINA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE THE DEPUTY REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNITED NATIONS, WITH THE RANK AND STATUS OF AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY AND THE DEPUTY REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA IN THE SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Ms. SHEA. Chairman Coons and Ranking Member Ricketts, distinguished members of the committee, it is a great honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as Deputy Permanent Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with you and your colleagues to protect U.S. strategic interests by engaging with and through the United Nations and its member states.

I am both proud and humbled to again appear before this august body, having come before this committee almost three and a half years ago when I was nominated to be ambassador to the Lebanese Republic. As I did then, I present myself to you in the spirit of public service that my parents inculcated in me.

My father, Brandan Shea, served in the Army in World War II, mostly in North Africa and later in France as part of the Marshall Plan. He went on to serve for several decades at the Department of Defense.

My mother also had a career in public service after raising six kids. Speaking of whom, I would like to acknowledge several of my siblings here today and other family members who are with them. Their love and support for me has been vital to my success and resilience throughout my 31-year Foreign Service career.

Being in this chamber also brings to mind my time as a Pearson Fellow with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in 2009 and '10. It was a great honor to cover Middle East issues for the then ranking member, Richard Lugar, a true statesman from whom I learned a great deal, and I am also lucky to count as friends several fellow SFRC staffers, some of whom are back there today.

I brought a commitment to public service to my three years as ambassador to Lebanon, where I have worked every day to advance U.S. interests in a profoundly complex political, economic, and security environment.

I know that if I am confirmed to take on this new challenge I will face a diplomatic ecosystem with its own complexities and I am braced for a steep learning curve.

But I am also well aware that I would be joining a very capable, dedicated team of public servants at the mission in New York led by Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield from whom I take great inspiration.

I believe that American leadership at the United Nations and other international organizations is crucial to the direction, performance, and accountability of those bodies.

We need look no further than the international response to Russia's unprovoked and unjustified invasion of Ukraine. In the days following the invasion the United States led efforts to mobilize the U.N. membership, resulting in 141 nations voting in the U.N. General Assembly to condemn Russia's aggression and demand an end to the invasion.

That action triggered consideration of Russia's actions in a host of relevant U.N. bodies including the U.N. Human Rights Council, where Russia's membership was suspended. Across the international system Russia is today less influential and more isolated.

U.S. leadership at the United Nations has been evident throughout this period and underscores the value in our determined investment in a U.N. system that is ready and able to respond to the needs of today and tomorrow.

That leadership is not a given. It requires constant tending and attention to our competitors. Most notably among those is China, which is making its own investments designed to reshape and redirect multilateral bodies.

As this committee knows well, that effort is expanding and the U.S. must energize its efforts to rally broad-based partnerships to safeguard institutions that should serve the interests of all member states, not just one.

If confirmed, I look forward to lending my efforts to that urgent cause as well as to working with like-minded counterparts to tackle other pressing challenges to peace and security, burgeoning humanitarian needs, and global issues including climate change, food insecurity, the trafficking of fentanyl and precursor chemicals, transnational crime, and many more.

I am also motivated to contribute to our collective efforts to defend American values by fighting hate and antisemitism in the U.N. system.

If confirmed, I look forward to adding my voice and energy to efforts to promote bold and lasting reforms across the U.N. system to make it more effective, efficient, representative, and credible.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am a firm believer in the confident and appropriate use of foreign policy tools to advance U.S. interests.

I am convinced that our foreign policy is best served when there is close collaboration between the executive and legislative branches of government and, if confirmed, I pledge to continue that cooperation as we pursue our vital interests through the United Nations.

Thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I will be happy to take your questions.

vance American interests. I am convinced that our foreign policy is best served when there is close collaboration between the executive and legislative branches of government. If confirmed, I pledge to continue that cooperation as we pursue our vital interests through the United Nations.

Thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am happy to take your questions.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Ambassador.

I would like to now invite my friend and senior colleague, a former state treasurer and former governor from the state of Delaware, Senator Tom Carper.

STATEMENT OF HON. THOMAS R. CARPER, U.S. SENATOR FROM DELAWARE

Senator CARPER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

To our ranking member, good afternoon.

It is an honor to sit next to Jack Markell, not the first time and perhaps not the last time either, but I will share with you and our colleagues some thoughts that I have with respect to his nomination to serve as our next ambassador to the country of Italy.

I have known Jack Markell for over two decades as a steadfast governor. The first—before that I knew his mom and dad. I was an MBA student at the University of Delaware and his dad actually ran the, I think, the College of Business and Economics. So we go way, way back.

And I just want to say, having spent a little time as state treasurer, he is, I think, one of the two best state treasurers we have ever had.

Senator CARPER. Some would say the best. Those of us—those who know us well would say he is the best.

But I have known him as a skilled businessperson, as a compassionate coordinator of Operation Allies and, most recent I have know him as a dad and as a son and a father, and has recently—more recently as the ambassador to the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development, better known as OECD.

Jack is someone whom I deeply respect not just as a public servant but in all those other roles that I just mentioned.

As made clear by his Senate confirmation to represent our nation at the OECD he is someone who senators from both sides of the aisle can and actually do trust to serve to steward the interests of our country around the world, and I am confident that Jack will serve the United States with great distinction as our top diplomat in Italy and I am honored to introduce him here today.

When I think of Jack Markell I think a lot about the successes he has had in the first state—that what our state is called—the first state while overcoming a great deal of adversity.

When he was first elected governor of Delaware in November of 2008 housing—the housing bubble had burst and our nation entered the Great Recession.

Jack knows all too well that in adversity lies opportunity and in the face of all that adversity he worked to court companies from all over the world to bring their operations—some of their operations to Delaware to bring jobs back and to retrain employees who lost the jobs they had held for decades.

For eight years as governor he worked with both sides of the aisle to get things done to improve the lives of Delawareans and his legacy will be felt for generations.

Most importantly, he has learned how to lead with empathy, and by answering President Biden's call to lead our nation's Afghan resettlement operation he embodied the core tenet of Matthew 25, to welcome the stranger in our land and to welcome our Afghan allies with open arms and open hearts.

Jack's ability to connect with people from all walks of life, to hear from their stories, and to help make life better for them, although I am confident that he will make an excellent ambassador in this role.

His deep knowledge of international relations and his experience in developing global solutions for complex issues with care and thoughtfulness will serve our country as well.

That is why I urge my colleagues, our colleagues on this committee, to act swiftly on Jack's nomination to serve as our U.S. ambassador to Italy.

To Jack, to his wife, Carla—to his wife, Carla, for sharing him with the people of Delaware for all these years, and for his children—their children—for sharing their dad with all of us.

So I want to thank them for their willingness to continue to let you do these things with your life so that the rest of us can benefit.

And with that, I thank you, Mr. Chairman. Senators, Senator Ricketts, I thank you all for giving me the opportunity to sit next to him one more time and sing his praises. Thank you.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Carper.
Ambassador Markell?

STATEMENT OF HON. JACK A. MARKELL, OF DELAWARE, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ITALIAN REPUBLIC, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SAN MARINO

Mr. MARKELL. Well, thank you, Chairman Coons, and to you and Senator Carper thank you so much for the gracious, wonderful introductions. I was so fortunate to serve as governor with the two of you in the Senate and I am truly grateful for that.

Ranking Member Ricketts, it is an honor to be in front of you as well. This is sort of the perfect panel for our family. My wife and I—Carla—are both native Delawareans but Carla's stepmother is from Nebraska and told many, many stories about Nebraska to us over the years.

So it is an honor to be appear here as the nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Italian Republic and the Republic of San Marino, and I am grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for their confidence.

I am indebted to my family for the love and the support, which have played an important role in my being here. My wife, Carla, as Senator Carper mentioned, is here with me today. We have known each other for 57 of our 62 years, having met in kindergarten.

I also am indebted to our kids, Michael and Molly, to my sister and her family, and I am also grateful to my parents and my brother, who are no longer with us, as well as to my brother's family.

I had the honor of appearing before this committee in 2021 during my nomination to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

I am humbled by the support of the committee and by my subsequent confirmation by the Senate, and serving in that role has prepared me to serve as the ambassador to Italy and San Marino.

Even though my initial career was in the private sector I had long been interested in a career in public service. I always believed that my home state and my country had given me enormous opportunities and I wanted to play a role in ensuring that similar opportunities are available to future generations.

As governor of Delaware, concerned about the impacts of globalization and automation, I knew that the states and countries that out educate today will out compete tomorrow and that is why we work so hard to ensure that our children had opportunities to thrive in school.

For those who wanted to go to college we worked to secure opportunities for them to do so even when they could not afford it, and for those who wanted to go directly to work we created new programs to help them get the skills they needed for good-paying jobs.

My experiences working across the aisle and with representatives of employers, labor unions, all levels of government, and non-government organizations prepare me well to serve as the ambassador to Italy and San Marino.

Given Russia's unjustified and brutal war against Ukraine, the threats posed by authoritarian regimes like the PRC and Iran, and global challenges from climate change to infectious diseases it is abundantly clear that strong relationships with our allies are more important than ever and Italy is one such ally and has been for many decades.

Eighteen million Americans are of Italian descent. Six million Americans visit Italy annually. Italy is home to 30,000 American soldiers, sailors, airmen, DOD, civilians, and their dependents.

Italy is a strong supporter of the allied effort to confront Russia's war of aggression and Italy supports the people of Ukraine with military, economic, and humanitarian assistance.

If confirmed, I will have four main objectives. First, I would promote the safety and well being of Americans living in or visiting Italy.

Second, I would expand our already deep economic ties, promoting U.S. exports and attracting additional Italian investment into the U.S. to support American jobs.

Third, I would aim to maintain and deepen our very strong military and security partnership with Italy.

And fourth, I would encourage increased Italian defense spending consistent with NATO allies' 2 percent commitment.

If confirmed, I will be an effective representative of the United States not only to our Italian government interlocutors but also around the country to business groups, students, civil society, and others.

The stakes of our relationships with important allies like Italy are enormous. We are truly at an inflection point in history. Authoritarian countries like Russia, China, and Iran threaten the way of life and the values that we and our like-minded allies have enjoyed for many years.

When I appeared here before in 2021 I said the United States and our allies must continue to demonstrate that democracy, human rights, free markets, and capitalism deliver growth and innovation and a better quality of life for all our citizens. That is certainly still true today and Italy has a key role to play.

If confirmed, I would be honored to serve as the U.S. ambassador and forge the strongest possible ties between our countries. Thank you for your consideration, and I am at your disposal to answer any questions you may have.

Ambassador FitzPatrick?

STATEMENT OF VERNELLE TRIM FITZPATRICK, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE GABONESE REPUBLIC

Ms. FITZPATRICK. Chairman Coons, Ranking Member Ricketts, and distinguished members of the committee, I am very honored to appear before you today as the nominee for U.S. Ambassador to the Gabonese Republic.

I am grateful for the confidence President Biden and Secretary Blinken have placed in me and for your consideration of my nomination.

If confirmed, I will work closely with you and all Members of Congress to advance our nation's national security interest in Gabon.

I would not be here today before you without the unwavering love and support of my family. I am eternally grateful to my husband, Christopher FitzPatrick, who has made sacrifices for my service to our country by remaining here at home while I have been posted overseas; my mother, Mary Trim, my sisters, Melissa and Debra Trim, and my stepdaughter, Anna. Although my father, Venantious Trim, passed away many years ago I hope he is looking down on me today with pride.

Over the past 25 years I have had the honor and privilege to represent our country in Latin America, Europe, and Africa, and in domestic assignments in Washington.

Throughout my career I have drawn on values instilled in me and my sisters by my parents, who were immigrants from St. Lucia and who taught us the importance of hard work and sacrifice.

I have also drawn from my experiences I have had as a native of St. Croix in the U.S. Virgin Islands where as a child I dreamt of joining the Department of State someday. I have spent much of my time, much of my career, on promoting democracy and good governance, championing human rights, and deepening bilateral relations with various countries.

I have not only promoted a greater understanding and appreciation of U.S. foreign policy but also of the American people, building bridges and embracing mutual understanding wherever I have represented our country. Since 2010 I have worked on Eastern, Western, and Central Africa. If confirmed, I will bring all of these experiences to bear in Gabon.

Gabon is a stable upper middle income country in Central Africa that is focused on diversifying its economy away from oil and mineral extraction for the good of its people.

As part of the Congo Basin, the world's second lung after the Amazon, Gabon is a regional and global leader in efforts to promote biodiversity and conservation, interests that we share.

Thanks to its location of the Gulf of Guinea, a strategic maritime space, Gabon has an important role to play in advancing maritime security and commerce in the region.

In addition, Gabon adds its voice on the global stage as a non-permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, as a current member of the U.N. Human Rights Council. It also hosts the headquarters of the Economic Community of Central African States.

If confirmed, my top priority in Gabon will be to advance the safety and security of the Embassy community, both American and locally employed staff, as well as all U.S. citizens residing or visiting the country.

As a career Foreign Service officer I attach particular importance to the word service in my job title. There is no higher duty than ensuring the safety and security of the U.S. Embassy and the American community.

Helping Gabon to protect its forests and its maritime domain will be my second priority, if confirmed. The United States must continue to work closely together with Gabon to support policies that combat climate change and protect the environment not only in the Congo Basin but also around the world and to counter nature crimes such as illegal logging and wildlife trafficking.

It is also important to continue to build Gabon's capacity to counter illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing, counter incidents of piracy and banditry off of its coasts, and to protect its exclusive economic zone.

Deepening our partnership and cooperation with Gabon bilaterally and in international fora is my third top priority. If confirmed, I will continue our dialogue with Gabon on issues before the U.N.

I will work with our Embassy team to advance several agreements we hope to sign with Gabon, including a defense cooperation agreement, a USAID bilateral framework agreement.

I will also support U.S. Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and Initiative for Atlantic Cooperation Activities in Gabon. Having these agreements and engagements in place will more firmly anchor our partnership with Gabon.

Our bilateral relationship with Gabon, which dates back to the country's independence in 1960, also focuses on other important issues. These include promoting good governance and human rights, improving the business climate, which will help attract domestic and foreign investment, and enable increased commercial ties, addressing malign influences both in the region and globally and increasing people-to-people ties.

There is much work to do together with Gabon and, if confirmed, I will rely on my experience and the talents of the Embassy team to advance our nation's priorities.

Thank you once again for considering my nomination. I look forward to answering your questions.

It is also important to continue to build Gabon's capacity to counter illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing, counter incidents of piracy and banditry off of its coast and protect its exclusive economic zone.

Deepening our partnership and cooperation with Gabon bilaterally and in international fora is my third top priority. If confirmed, I will continue our dialogue with Gabon on issues before the U.N. I will work with our Embassy team to advance several agreements we hope to sign with Gabon, including a Defense Cooperation Agreement and a USAID Bilateral Framework Agreement. I will also support U.S. Wildlife Service, the U.S. Forest Service, and the Initiative for Atlantic Cooperation activities in Gabon. Having these agreements and engagements in place will more firmly anchor our partnership with Gabon.

Our bilateral relationship with Gabon, which dates back to the country's independence in 1960, also focuses on other important issues. These include: promoting good governance and human rights; improving the business climate which will help attract domestic and foreign investment and enable increased commercial ties; addressing malign influences both in the region and globally; and, increasing people-to-people ties. There is much work to do together with Gabon, and if confirmed, I will rely on my experience and the talents of the Embassy team to advance our nation's priorities.

Thank you once again for considering my nomination. I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Ambassador.
Ambassador Peterson?

STATEMENT OF HON. LISA PETERSON, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF BURUNDI

Ms. PETERSON. Chairman Coons, Ranking Member Ricketts, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify before you today. It is a great honor to appear as President Biden's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Burundi.

I would like to thank the people who have helped form and shape me over many years to arrive at this moment. My husband, Siza Ntshakala, who is currently watching, I believe, and serving as the human resources officer at our Embassy in Accra, Ghana, has steered me to opportunity, guided me away from missteps, and drawn on his life in apartheid South Africa to help me hone my awareness of injustice both on a grand scale and in everyday life.

My children, both by marriage and biology—Thandeka, Njabulo, and Thabo—my late father, David, born in Nebraska, my mother, Janet, and my four siblings have all given me fantastic models of approaches to life and the people around me.

Beyond my family circle there is a whole raft of teachers, friends, and State Department colleagues who have encouraged the curiosity and developed the skills that have helped bring me before you today.

Mr. Chairman, Burundi is small, densely populated, and the poorest country in the world, according to World Bank statistics.

Forty percent of its over 12 million people are under the age of 15 and these young people are seeking economic opportunities they currently cannot find in Burundi. It is in our national interest to support Burundi's development and reform efforts to achieve a more stable prosperous country and Central African region.

The U.S.-Burundi bilateral relationship has improved greatly in the three years since President Evariste Ndayishimiye assumed office. The president reengaged with the international community and pursued reforms across multiple sectors including holding some individuals accountable for human rights abuses.

In 2021, recognizing the changed circumstances, President Biden terminated the Burundi sanctions program imposed in 2015 in response to violence and repression. This action did not signify that human rights were no longer a concern.

As Acting Assistant Secretary for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor I traveled to Burundi in 2022 to convey our concerns and urge government to take clear action to protect human rights.

Ambassador Higgins, Assistant Secretary Phee, and other high-level officials have delivered similar messages. If confirmed, I would continue to raise these issues with the government of Burundi.

Despite these concerns there is reason to be optimistic about Burundi's future. As chair of the East African Community, Burundi has played an important role in mediating the conflict in eastern Democratic Republic of Congo. The president has mended relationships with his neighbors.

Burundi has reengaged with international financial institutions, reaching a staff level agreement with the International Monetary Fund in April on a program designed to promote macro economic reforms and inclusive economic growth.

The government took steps to fight corruption and improve rule of law. For the second year in a row Burundi maintained a Tier 2 ranking in the annual Trafficking in Persons Report due to significant and increasing efforts to investigate, prosecute, and convict human traffickers.

If confirmed, I will encourage the government to continue along this positive path.

In fiscal year 2022 the United States provided approximately $90 million in bilateral development and humanitarian assistance to Burundi. Through programs that support the government of Burundi's efforts to strengthen anti-corruption efforts, prioritize health systems, improve health outcomes, and strengthen global health security the United States and Burundi have worked together to advance economic opportunity, combat HIV/AIDS and malaria, improve maternal and child health, and reduce the high rate of chronic malnutrition.

As we continue to assist the Burundian people, if confirmed I would ensure this assistance is accompanied by a continued focus on the governance foundations that make economic growth and development viable and sustainable.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today and I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Ms. Peterson follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. LISA PETERSON

Chairman Coons, Ranking Member Ricketts, and Members of the Committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify before you today. It is a great honor to appear as President Biden's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Burundi.

I would like to thank the people who have helped form and shape me over many years to arrive at this moment. who have encouraged the curiosity and developed the skills that have helped bring me before you today.

Mr. Chairman, Burundi is small, densely populated, and the poorest country in the world according to World Bank statistics. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to your questions.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Ambassador.

Thank you to all of our witnesses. We are now going to suspend this hearing for five to 10 minutes while Senator Ricketts and I go and cast a vote and formulate some piercing and penetrating questions, and then we will return.

[Recess.]

Senator COONS. This meeting will resume. This hearing will resume.

If you will forgive me, to begin, I have a few questions. The chairman of this committee has asked that every confirmation hearing ask these questions of every nominee and I am going to ask that each of you in series if you would provide a simple yes or no answer.

To Ms. McDonald, do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when so invited?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator COONS. Do you commit to keeping this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator COONS. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator COONS. And do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by this committee and its designated staff?

Senator COONS. Thank you. Having successfully navigated that challenging exercise, I will now turn to a sentence or two, a question or two, of each of you, if I might.

Ms. McDonald, as you may know, I am on my way to Lithuania just tomorrow and was there literally the day Russia's invasion of Ukraine began.

How do you think U.S. and NATO military presence in Lithuania and in the Baltic regions is doing at successfully deterring Russian aggression and how do you assess the threats posed to the Baltic states by Russia? And how do you think we might more successfully push back on PRC economic coercion?

I have a specific piece of legislation with Senator Young to strengthen U.S. capabilities to resist economic coercion.

If you would speak to those two briefly, please.

Ms. McDONALD. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Both very important questions and I do wish you safe travels, and thank you for being willing to go. I think it is part of the deterrence picture, right, and I am a big believer in deterrence.

As you mentioned, the picture, if confirmed, that I would like to help push forward is really what we expect to see coming out of the NATO summit in Vilnius in mid July, which is unprecedented steps towards modernization of the NATO alliance and that includes an enhanced security architecture in the Baltic Sea region.

So with the accession of Finland, we hope Sweden, looking at the map that would then circumscribe the Baltic Sea region with NATO allies. That is tremendously important to our Lithuanian friends and those who sit on the front line.

I mentioned it in my opening statement Lithuania knows what is at stake. It essentially sits next to the bear's mouth, if I can put it that way.

Secondly, I think the mil-to-mil relationship is one that is important to strengthen. Thanks to the generosity of Congress we have provided $446 million in security assistance since 2019; $140.1 million of that is FMF financing in the last fiscal year.

It would be my goal to strengthen and continue that forward. That goes towards Lithuania's national capabilities, it goes to NATO interoperability, and it goes to hybrid threats, cyber issues and, certainly, if confirmed, you can expect that I will continue to be in touch with military and Lithuanian government partners on refining and defining China.

Senator COONS. Thank you.

Ms. McDONALD. You want me to turn to China?

Senator COONS. No. I have a brief window left.

If I could, Ambassador—

Ms. McDONALD. Okay.

Senator COONS.—Markell, about China one of the key challenges I think we face in a very close and enduring U.S.-Italy relationship is their engagement with the Belt and Road Initiative.

Italy's prime minister has taken a fairly strong stance against Chinese encroachment and their malign influence. How can we work more closely with Rome and our other close partners and allies in Europe on aligning our policies towards Beijing?

Mr. MARKELL. Thank you for the question, Senator. A very significant issue and one where Prime Minister Meloni has certainly been focused within the last couple of years.

Italy has used his golden power rules on transactions ranging from seeds to drones to chips to robotics equipment, as recently as this week on tires, to limit the PRC's ability to invest in Italy.

As it relates to Belt and Road specifically, Italy is really not seeing much advantage at all from the Belt and Road Initiative and I believe that the combination of the opaque financing that Italy has provided, the lack of information it has provided, lack of transparency on a range of issues including international health organizations, the PRC's continuing over promising and under delivering is something that is very clear to the Italians and I certainly look forward to working with them to make sure that they understand the magnitude of these issues.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Ambassador.

One last question, if I might, of Ambassador Shea and then I will defer to my ranking member.

I think the United Nations is one of the most critical and overlooked areas where the United States is losing influence relative to China. You mentioned it in your opening statement.

What is your view of PRC efforts to increase their influence in the United Nations and how can we most effectively respond?

Ms. SHEA. Thank you for the question, Mr. Chairman, and based on my understanding the People's Republic of China is trying to insert language in various U.N. fora, documents, resolutions to reflect its more authoritarian worldview in direct contradiction to the underlying founding principles of the United Nations.

So I think it is very important that the United States hold firm that the principles on which the United Nations was founded—democracy, human rights, the rule of law —and we have got to stick to that. That means we have got to build coalitions and put forward our positive vision for the United Nations.

Senator COONS. Thank you very much.

Senator Ricketts?

Senator RICKETTS. Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

In 2014 at the NATO summit in Wales the NATO members agreed to get to 2 percent of GDP spending by the year 2024.

Yet, despite an invasion by Russia of Ukraine, Putin's nuclear saber rattling, and nearly 10 years later we only see seven NATO members have reached that goal of 2 percent and many of the heavyweight economies that have a trillion dollars in GDP, notably Canada, France, Germany, Italy, and Spain, have not reached that goal, and Italy's defense spending in particular sits at 1.15 percent of GDP and Italy said it would not meet the 2 percent threshold until 2028.

Prime Minister Meloni has vowed to increase the defense spending to reach the NATO target, and given that Italy is a critical player and anchor of NATO's southern flank as well as its deployment of troops in places like Bulgaria, Kosovo, Latvia, we need to see this promise translate into action, especially at a time what is going on. And, of course, we have got the Vilnius summit coming up next month in NATO and it really is important that our NATO partners reach this goal.

It is literally depriving the alliance of tens of billions of dollars in defense that could be used toward deterrence.

We really need to see this happen and so, Ambassador Markell, do you view Prime Minister Meloni's pledge to reach 2 percent as credible and, if so, when would you expect Italy to be able to reach that goal?

Mr. MARKELL. Thank you for the question, Senator. What I can tell you is that I totally agree with the premise of the question, the importance of Italy reaching that 2 percent.

When I engage with my interlocutors in Italy, including the prime minister, I will make clear that we are really looking at that not so much as a ceiling but as a floor, and as I mentioned in my introduction that is one of my highest priorities as it relates to my time in Italy as ambassador, if I am confirmed.

Senator RICKETTS. I could not agree with you more about being—the 2 percent being a ceiling and not a floor. Do you have any feel for how long it would take Italy to be able to get there?

Mr. MARKELL. I do not, and I just have not been read into that. But it is something that, again, will be one of my highest areas of focus and something that I would intend to engage with the committee on as well.

Senator RICKETTS. Thank you, Ambassador.

And, Ambassador Shea, if confirmed, you will be—one of the roles you will be is representing the U.S. on the U.N. Security Council and one of the failures of the Security Council is to—in a number of international crises including discouraging Russia's invasion of Ukraine but also Iran's ill intentions, the failure of the JCPOA and the U.N. Security Council Resolution 2231 has failed to contain Iran in enriching uranium and curb its nuclear ambitions.

On October 18th of this year the U.N.'s prohibition against Iran transfers of long-range drones and ballistic missiles will expire as will the U.N. asset freezes and visa bans against dozens of Iranian entities and individuals involved with nuclear and ballistic missile programs.

Iran has already violated the U.N.'s prohibition against arming Iran by sending hundreds if not thousands of drones to Russia, the suicide type drones we have seen. This should trigger the snapback sanctions against Iran but they have not been triggered.

It is critical that these get triggered before October 2023 when this agreement expires. What can we do with regard to making sure that those snapback sanctions get triggered and what is your understanding about what our agreement with the E-3 is with regard to those snapback sanctions?

Ms. SHEA. Senator, I am better prepared to answer the questions that are directed to me with respect to the U.N. and the diplomacy that we will be conducting in New York.

What I can tell you is I share your consternation about Iran's blatant violation of U.N. Security Council resolutions. Whether with respect to nuclear, other ballistic weapons, the provision of kamikaze drones to Russia for use against civilians in Ukraine, all of this is unacceptable and it needs to be called out, exposed, and stopped.

I commit to working through the administration, if confirmed, to help address these concerns whether through the United Nations or elsewhere. Some of these actions are going to require diplomacy outside of the U.N. I am not as well prepared to address those today, sir.

Senator RICKETTS. Great. Thank you very much, Ambassador.

And, Mr. Chair, I just also want to flag that there are news reports that the Biden administration is in negotiations with Iran. We do not know, obviously, the validity of this because it has not been confirmed.

But I highlight that we are the committee of jurisdiction on this and that it would do the Biden administration well to come and brief, certainly, in a classified setting what is going on and have Mr. Robert Malley and Mr. Brett McGurk here to tell the Foreign Relations Committee about this rather than us finding about it in newspaper accounts.

Mr. MARKELL. Agreed.

Senator RICKETTS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator COONS. Senator Cruz?

Senator CRUZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Peterson, the internationally accepted definition of antisemitism is enshrined in the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance's working definition, the so-called IHRA definition.

That definition says it is antisemitic to engage in the, quote/unquote, "targeting of the State of Israel conceived as a Jewish collectivity by applying double standards not applied to similar democracies."

Ms. Peterson, do you agree with the IHRA definition that it is antisemitic to target Israel using double standards?

Ms. PETERSON. Yes, Senator. I agree.

Senator CRUZ. Okay. Ms. Peterson, while you were at the top of DRL the bureau published a notice of funding opportunity, what is called a NOFO—essentially, a grant offer—for $1 million to fund NGOs to launch human rights investigations against and inside Israel.

Now, as you know, I vociferously opposed that NOFO. I called for it to be canceled. I wrote a letter to Secretary Blinken highlighting that it was an outrage and that it was antisemitic under the plain terms of the IHRA definition.

In my letter I outlined how your grant offer echoed decades of double standards in antisemitic campaigns against Israel and against Israeli Jews, how it echoed accusations that Israel steals lands and commits crimes against humanity.

My letter was signed by a dozen Republicans. I also questioned in writing the President's then nominee to be the head of DRL, Uzza Zeya, about this grant.

Now, there are a couple of things we did not know at the time but which we recently discovered. The first is that the State Department's own office to combat antisemitism—the Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Antisemitism—was also saying the same thing. They were saying the grant violated the IHRA definition and they were saying it applied double standards to Israel. That is the first thing.

The second thing is that the person who was pushing the grant through the State Department, the person who was at the very top of approving it and defending it from criticism and answering questions including my questions in my letter, that person, Ms. Peterson, was you.

Ms. Peterson, why did you push for an antisemitic grant targeting Israeli Jews that even the State Department's antisemitism envoy would not approve?

Ms. PETERSON. Thank you very much for the opportunity to address this question, Senator.

Let me first clarify that no activity was actually funded under this notice of funding opportunity and I want to underscore that I personally take seriously any allegations of antisemitism and I am committed to working against it wherever it occurs.

The policy of DRL is the policy of the Biden-Harris administration and we continue to steadfastly support Israel and reject any and all delegitimization efforts.

The Special Envoy's office was among the entities that highlighted for us after, unfortunately, this notice of funding opportunity had gone public how this could be construed.

They should clearly have been brought in while this was being formulated. We did continue to let that process run its course. We attempt to deliberately make our notices of funding opportunity broad in order to try to receive innovative proposals.

Once we received everything that came in responding to what was in that notice of funding opportunity we ran things through our very rigorous panel review process. We heard the concerns from the Hill.

We heard the concerns from American Jewish organizations, met with some of them to further hear concerns and explained what we were trying to accomplish.

But after the review and consideration of all of the factors in what we had originally thought we were trying to achieve and what had come in in actual applications we did not feel that anything that came in really met what was required to take an activity—a legitimate activity forward in Israel.

Senator CRUZ. Well, you are absolutely right that it was not funded and it was not funded because of my criticism, which your office tried hard to push back against and, in fact, I knew you would say what you just said because I am holding the answers that you and your office prepared for the State Department to give to Congress and you prepared these answers back in '22 because—and I will just go ahead and quote you—because reports that, quote, “the department is supporting the delegitimization of Israel or the BDS movement or contributing to antisemitic activities with Senator Cruz calling for it to be canceled.”

Now, there are a couple of things about what you just said. First, this set of answers from back in 2022—I am looking at the approvals on the back of it—and it was also not approved by your own office of antisemitism.

So when the State Department is facing, rightly, accusations of being antisemitic and you are defending against them and your own office of antisemitism is echoing those charges why on earth do you still lock the office of antisemitism out of reviewing the answers and dig into defending a notice to fund an attack on Israel that was plainly unjustified and well within the standard definition of antisemitism?

Ms. PETERSON. Senator, I will say flat out it is deeply unfortunate that the Special Envoy’s office was not part of that clearance.

But I will clarify that once we reached the point of the panel review process for the applications that actually came in on that notice of funding opportunity they were very explicitly included in the review process of the applications.

Senator CRUZ. Thank you.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Senator Cruz. Thank you, Senator Ricketts.

With that, we have concluded today’s hearing. I appreciate the presence and testimony of all five nominees and I look forward to advancing you through the committee. Thank you.

With that, this hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:22 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO KARA C. McDONALD BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Trafficking in Persons

In the State Department’s 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report, Lithuania remained on Tier 1 for its continued commitment to anti-trafficking work but progress remains needed in a few key areas, like increased convictions and victim identification.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Lithuania operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. Lithuania continued to demonstrate serious and sustained efforts to combat trafficking, as outlined in the 2023 Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report. If confirmed, I look forward to leveraging the TIP Report as the primary guide for U.S. anti-trafficking policy and encourage the Lithuanian government to implement the TIP Report’s prioritized recommendations, including to investigate, prosecute, and convict traffickers under the anti-trafficking statute and to enhance efforts to proactively identify victims of trafficking.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to portraying the reality of the trafficking situation in Lithuania in the annual country reports on Trafficking in Persons?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to reporting accurate information as it pertains to the reality of the trafficking situation in Lithuania.

Religious Freedom

In the State Department’s 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Lithuania was noted for generally having societal respect for religious freedom but with noted concerning antisemitic incidents.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. The U.S. Department of State is monitoring the rise of antisemitism across Europe and, if confirmed, combatting antisemitism will be a priority for me. The Lithuanian Government responded quickly to repeated recent antisemitic remarks by opposition MP Remigijus Zemaitytis, strongly condemned publicly the remarks, and launched two pre-trial investigations into his statements. If confirmed, I will draw on my experience as a senior official involved in monitoring and combatting antisemitism and build on my predecessor's extensive work on this issue, to include by engaging the U.S. Ambassador at Large for International Religious Freedom, the Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Antisemitism, the Special Envoy for Holocaust Issues, the Lithuanian government, and Lithuanian civil society to combat antisemitism, advance religious tolerance, and promote Holocaust education through public statements and in meetings with government officials. I will also continue to advocate for the removal of plaques and memorials to Nazi collaborators in the country.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I would regularly engage with civil society on this issue and work with the Lithuanian government to maintain its strong human rights record, including by meeting with counterparts throughout civil society. Additionally, I would encourage government officials to condemn antisemitic incidents publicly and to include the Lithuanian Jewish community on matters related to combating antisemitism, Holocaust remembrance, and the preservation of Jewish heritage. I would also ensure the Embassy regularly engages on this issue.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Lithuania increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with diverse religious communities in Lithuania and work closely with government officials to promote and support initiatives aimed at enhancing religious freedom. One of the key aspects I will address is the need to condemn religious hatred, including antisemitism, and emphasize its detrimental impact on society. I will plan to make remarks at events honoring important religious-affiliated events and encourage other Embassy representatives to do the same. Finally, I will also use the Embassy's social media platforms to amplify messages supporting religious freedom and condemning acts of intolerance or hate.

Human Rights

In the State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report, Lithuania had few significant human rights abuses but there is always more work to be done to better promote internationally-recognized human rights.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. I have spent much of my career defending and advancing human rights and democratic values in Europe and beyond. If confirmed, I will work to promote Embassy Vilnius' regular and meaningful engagement with the many local and regional civil society organizations, to include those designed to support the third country national refugee and activist communities, in order to continue to support Lithuania's progress on human rights.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to personally engaging with civil society with an emphasis on the areas for improvement highlighted in the 2022 Human Rights Report, to include Roma integration, combatting antisemitism and vandalization of Holocaust monuments.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. Ensuring that the United States and our like-minded allies and partners do not cede influence in the U.N. system to those who do not share our values and are not committed to the foundational principles of the U.N. is of vital importance to U.S. foreign policy and national security interests. If confirmed, I will work directly with the International Organizations Bureau, the government of Lithuania, and other stakeholders to augment the number of Americans while also encouraging citizens of likeminded nations to work throughout the U.N. system.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. Lithuania is closely aligned with the United States across the spectrum of foreign policy, national security, and economic issues, and we should take full advantage of this close alignment to advance U.S. and shared interests. If confirmed, I would ensure that my team and I maintain regular contact with host government counterparts to ensure maximum coordination on upcoming U.N. votes and other actions in the U.N. and other multilateral bodies, including actions to support Ukraine and further isolate Russia in the international system.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO KARA C. McDONALD BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People’s Republic of China is the “only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it.” The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People’s Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Just this week, reporting indicates that the Chinese are planning a training facility that could put People’s Liberation Army troops within 100 miles of the United States. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that “the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its malign influence, through our robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Lithuania ties.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence’s 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.”

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party that would constructively work with the United States in good faith? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, we seek to manage this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, counternarcotics, and public health, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with Departments and Agencies across the U.S. Government as well as with Congress to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior in Europe by the PRC and other actors.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People’s Republic of China in the countries in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be to advance U.S. interests in Lithuania and to counter efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partnerships in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues, as well as Congress, to address the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in Lithuania and the region.

Question. Since their independence in 1991 from the Soviet Union, the U.S. has renewed bilateral efforts with Lithuania and the Baltic region. Relations have been driven by the reality and threats posed by Russia given its renewed aggression to neighbors, and also due to Lithuania joining NATO and the EU. Lithuania ranks 5th regarding total bilateral assistance to Ukraine as a percentage of GDP and has advocated for the strongest possible EU sanctions against Russia. They have additionally declared Russia a "state sponsor of terrorism," given Russia's actions in Ukraine. Lithuania has sought, and received, significant security assistance from the U.S. since 2004 and has growing economic relations. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between the U.S. and Lithuania?

Answer. Lithuania is a valuable Ally, partner, and close friend, and the U.S.-Lithuania relationship is broad and multi-faceted. The United States has sustained continuous official diplomatic relations with the Republic of Lithuania since 1922. During the illegal Soviet occupation of Lithuania, the United States never recognized the country as a part of the Soviet Union. This policy has long been emblematic of the close relations between our two nations and is the foundation of our close cooperation today. If confirmed, I will work to sustain our countries' rich historic ties.

Question. If confirmed, how would you assist Lithuania's energy independence and from reliance on Russian energy supplies?

Answer. Lithuania has a vital role to play in Europe's energy security and diversification. It was the first EU member state to stop importing natural gas from Russia and took the prescient step of investing in its own off-shore LNG import terminal, aptly named the Independence in 2014, which now supplies Latvia, Estonia, Finland, and Poland. Lithuania is also looking to further modernize many aspects of its energy infrastructure and diversify its mix. If confirmed I will encourage Lithuania's progress on safe, responsible, and coordinated steps towards further energy independence from Russia.

Question. In the 115th Congress, Senator Baldwin and I worked together to pass the Justice for Uncompensated Survivors Today (JUST) Act to assess the level of restitution needed for victims of the Holocaust whose assets were illegally seized by European governments during the Nazi era. The report required by the JUST Act found that Lithuania is one of the few countries in Europe that still has not adequately resolved Holocaust claims. For Lithuania and other Eastern European countries that fell under the Russia and Soviet yoke during the 20th century, portions of their independence movements cooperated with Nazi Germany, leaving a complicated legacy for these countries to deal with. If confirmed, how will you address the remaining antisemitism in Lithuania?

Answer. Following the Department's submission to Congress and release of the JUST Act report, Lithuania passed a law in 2022 providing compensation to the Jewish community for heirless property and symbolic payments for unaddressed private property claims. As with previous ambassadors to Lithuania, if confirmed, I will continue to call upon the Lithuanian government and municipalities to remove remaining memorials and plaques to Lithuanian partisans known to have also participated in Holocaust-era atrocities. I will work in partnership with civil society and the Jewish community on this effort, building on a recent law on the removal of monuments to Nazi and Soviet collaborators.

Question. If confirmed, what will you do to ensure that Lithuanian Jews are included in Lithuanian government discussions over how to handle Jewish cemeteries and holy sites?

Answer. A Lithuanian Government commission, composed of local and overseas historians, rabbis, and other experts, including two members of the U.S. Commission for the Preservation of American Heritage Abroad (USCPAHA), has been appointed by the Prime Minister and began work in June to discuss the future of the Snipiškes, a former Jewish cemetery in Vilnius over which the Soviets built a sports palace. If confirmed, I commit to working with Lithuanian authorities to ensure the Jewish Lithuanian community is included in discussions regarding Holocaust remembrance, combating antisemitism, and the preservation of Jewish heritage.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DOROTHY CAMILLE SHEA BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. If confirmed, do you support U.N. Security Council reform including any potential efforts to expand the non-permanent or permanent members of the Council?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support expansion of the permanent and non-permanent membership of the U.N. Security Council, including permanent seats for countries from Africa, as well as from Latin America and the Caribbean, as stated by President Biden in his September 2022 address to the United Nations General Assembly.

Question. Do you support the expansion of veto power?

Answer. If confirmed, I will oppose any alteration or expansion of the veto. I also note how the overuse of the veto by certain member states has created challenges for the Security Council's effectiveness.

Question. Do you believe Security Council reform is necessary? Why or why not?

Answer. Security Council reform is necessary so that the institution can become more inclusive and better respond to the needs of today's world. We need influential countries on every continent fighting for the Security Council's continued relevance and credibility. That is why expansion of permanent Council membership is so important.

Question. What other efforts would you support?

Answer. Modernizing the Security Council is an important element of a broader effort to support a U.N. that is more fit-for-purpose for the 21st century. In addition to expansion of permanent and non-permanent seats, if confirmed, I will support efforts aimed at making the Security Council more effective and efficient, including improvements to the Council's working methods.

Question. What is your assessment of the U.S.'s role on the Security Council? Are we effectively using our voice and vote to influence positive change towards peace and security?

Answer. The United States continues to lead Security Council efforts in influencing positive change. This includes promoting respect for human rights and upholding the U.N. Charter, including issues of sovereignty and territorial integrity. If confirmed, I will work closely with our P3 allies, France and the UK, as well as with elected members to push back on the PRC and Russia's obstructionism and their efforts to advance an alternative authoritarian agenda.

Question. What is your assessment of Russia on the Security Council in light of their war on Ukraine?

Answer. Russia's egregious actions are an affront to the core mandate of the Security Council and undermine the purposes and principles of the U.N. Charter. They are especially outrageous given that Russia is a permanent member of the Security Council. Although Russia's actions should disqualify it from serving on this body, let alone as a permanent member, we do not see a viable way to suspend Russia from the Security Council. If confirmed, I will work with allies and partners to hold Russia to account for its brutal, unjustified war against Ukraine with every tool at my disposal.

Question. The recent effort in the General Assembly to force a GA meeting upon the use of a veto was supported by the U.S. In your view, was this key to strengthening the council?

Answer. All Permanent Members should exercise restraint in using the veto. Since 2009, Russia has cast 27 vetoes, 12 of which were joined by the PRC. During the same period, the United States exercised its veto four times. As a co-sponsor to General Assembly resolution 76/262, we have signaled that the resolution's adoption is a significant step toward achieving the accountability, transparency, and responsibility of all Permanent Members that wield the veto. Those that exercise their veto to defend their own acts of aggression and violations of the U.N. Charter must be held accountable.

Question. What can be done to strengthen the U.S. position on the Security Council?

Answer. The U.S. position continues to be strengthened through concerted and continued outreach and coordination with the P3 (UK and France) as well as with the elected ten members (E10).

Question. What is your view of the current state of U.N. peacekeeping?

Answer. U.N. peacekeeping operations are among the most effective mechanisms of burden-sharing to address the global challenges to international peace and security. The United States continues to evaluate peacekeeping missions with a view to making them as efficient and effective as possible, while also providing missions with the necessary resources to fully implement their mandates. If confirmed, I will commit to working with the Administration to prioritize reforms in annual budget negotiations, increase the efficiency of missions, and minimize the cost of these operations to U.S. taxpayers, including reducing or closing missions where appropriate and when conditions allow.

Question. Are there missions that are more challenging politically than others? If so, which ones?

Answer. Peacekeeping missions facilitate post-conflict recovery by protecting civilians, preserving security, and creating the space for political solutions. While the U.N. Secretary-General and many Member States stress the importance of peacekeeping missions supporting political solutions, these are long-term endeavors that require persistence, political will, and significant resources. The most challenging missions are those where tremendous effort and many political processes over the years have not yielded a durable, sustainable peace. If confirmed, I will ensure that the United States continues to press the United Nations and political counterparts to fully utilize the political and technical expertise peacekeeping missions offer in pursuing both short- and long-term solutions.

Question. Do you believe any missions are no longer meeting their mandate? If so, what do you believe would be appropriate action by the Security Council?

Answer. The Administration continually reviews and assesses all existing peacekeeping missions to ensure they are making a meaningful and substantive contribution to international peace and security, including through yearly mission monitoring and evaluation assessments. If confirmed, for missions where that work remains imperative, I will focus on making them as effective and efficient as possible and providing them with the resources necessary to fully implement their mandates, including well-trained and well-equipped troops and police. If confirmed, for missions in countries where conditions allow, I will work with the U.N. Secretariat and U.N. Security Council to press for early strategic planning and sustainable transitions that preserve the advances in host nation peace and security.

Question. Ongoing allegations and incidents of sexual exploitation and abuse by peacekeepers and U.N. personnel (and most recently an American) continue to draw international attention. What can the U.S., and the U.N., do to prevent more incidents of sexual abuse and assault?

Answer. The United States strongly supports the Secretary-General's policy of zero tolerance for sexual exploitation and abuse (SEA) and calls for troop and police contributing countries to hold perpetrators of SEA accountable. The United States also endorses measures by the U.N. Secretary-General to prevent and combat SEA consistent with U.N. Security Council Resolution 2272.

The United States incorporates the prevention of SEA into its peacekeeping training activities with partners by drawing on funding from the Global Peace Operations Initiative. To help improve the investigation of and accountability for SEA, GPOI supported the initial development of the U.N.'s National Investigation Officer (NIO) course. GPOI continues to support the U.N.'s train-the-trainer NIO course to institutionalize the training of NIOs in the investigation of allegations of misconduct (including SEA) against their personnel.

Question. Most recently, the Council has experienced internal conflict about holding meetings on particular humanitarian crises like Syria, Ukraine, Ethiopia, and more. What is your assessment of this issue? Should the Security Council hold more regular meetings on these topics? If no, please explain.

Answer. The monthly program of work for the Security Council is negotiated among the members, with a significant number of the meetings fixed by directives in Security Council resolutions, including discussions on the humanitarian situation in places like Yemen and Syria. The Security Council has met regularly during Russia's war against Ukraine since February 21, 2022, though some meetings were called by Russia on farcical pretenses. If confirmed, I commit to using these engagements as opportunities to work with like-minded partners to highlight humanitarian crises, including ones caused or exacerbated by Russia's invasion of Ukraine.

Question. Additionally, the Council has issues passing resolutions or making statements on these topics. Do you believe the U.N. Security Council is broken? Why or why not?

Answer. Due primarily to Russian intransigence aided by the PRC, the U.N. Security Council has struggled to address many of the crises around the world affecting international peace and security. However, the Security Council continues to reauthorize mandates for field operations, many of which serve to protect civilians and ensure humanitarian assistance. If confirmed, I will continue to build as broad and diverse a coalition of nations as possible on the future we collectively seek, starting with the foundational principles on which the U.N. and international system should rest.

Question. Russia and China have used their position on the Council to block formal meetings on topics they did not like, including human rights abuses in Xinjiang, Syria, and more. What is your assessment of this issue? How can the U.S. use its influence to highlight these important issues regardless of other P5 members?

Answer. Russia and China use their influence with U.N. Security Council members states to prevent the Security Council from addressing important issues, including human rights. If confirmed, I will commit to working closely with our partners to ensure the UNSC discusses all threats to international peace and security, even when Russia and China work to limit the agenda. The United States leads efforts to highlight issues like oppression by Russia and the PRC of their own citizens, Syria's chemical weapons use, and Iran's nuclear program across the U.N. system and in other fora, including in the General Assembly, Human Rights Council, Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Question. The most recent Security Council elections replaced five of the elected ten members with each candidate running unopposed. Do you believe clean slates for U.N. bodies are beneficial? Why or why not?

Answer. On June 6, the U.N. General Assembly elected Algeria, Guyana, the Republic of Korea, and Sierra Leone, which all ran unopposed, and Slovenia, which won a contested race against Belarus, as non-permanent members of the U.N. Security Council (UNSC) for the 2024–25 term. UNSC membership is arguably the most prestigious assignment in the U.N. system and requires significant resources and preparation. Countries typically announce their candidacy years in advance and regional blocs often discourage competition to ensure diversity of representation. In general, clean slate elections can be detrimental to U.N. bodies, often electing candidates who are unqualified for, or worse, hostile to, the work of those bodies. If confirmed, I will actively encourage qualified candidates to participate in U.N. elections.

Question. There have been proposals put forward for the U.N. peacekeeping budget to fund missions that have not been approved by the U.N. Security Council. Do you believe that the U.N. peacekeeping budget should only be put towards missions approved by the U.N. Security Council?

Answer. I want to reaffirm the importance the United States attaches to U.N. Security Council (UNSC) authorization, primacy, and oversight over peacekeeping missions funded out of the U.N. peacekeeping budget. The Department may use funds authorized to be appropriated under the United Nations Participation Act for assessed and other expenses of international peacekeeping activities only for international peacekeeping operations that have been expressly authorized by the UNSC.

Question. The United States is the single largest financial contributor to U.N. peacekeeping activities. Congress authorizes and appropriates U.S. contributions, and it has an ongoing interest in ensuring such funding is used as efficiently and effectively as possible. Do you believe that any nation, including the United States, should pay more than 25 percent of the U.N. peacekeeping budget?

Answer. I believe that other countries can and should assume more of the financial burden for U.N. peacekeeping. I also believe that once the U.N. General Assembly has reached agreement on the distribution of financial responsibility, each country should uphold its responsibility to pay its share. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to discuss this issue further in the context of the next scale of assessments negotiation that will determine how much each country contributes for U.N. peacekeeping.

Question. What is your position on U.S. repayment of U.N. peacekeeping arrears? As memorialized in the 1999 Helms-Biden agreement, the Late Ambassador Holbrooke, then-President Clinton, then-Secretary General Kofi Anan, and then-

Senator Biden all believed that the United States has no obligation to pay, and thus should not pay, the roughly $500 million in “contested arrears” that were explicitly excluded from the $1.6 billion Helms-Biden agreement. However, since then, the U.N. has insisted upon keeping on its books, and the Obama administration sought to pay over Congressional objections. Do you commit not to pay these “contested arrears” per Congressional intent as outlined in the Helms-Biden agreement?

Answer. My understanding is that the Administration has not sought funds from Congress to pay the contested arrears and has no plans to pay the arrears. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss steps to address recently accrued U.S. arrears and how to avoid new U.S. arrears, if confirmed.

Question. Are there any specific steps you believe the U.N. should take to reduce the overall size of the U.N. peacekeeping budget? If so, what are they?

Answer. U.N. peacekeeping budgets are informed by mandates adopted in the Security Council and budget levels agreed to in the Fifth Committee of the General Assembly. The U.S. Mission to the United Nations works with other Security Council members and Fifth Committee delegations to ensure that both mandates and budgets are appropriately tailored to advance U.S. national interests. With the closure in recent years of missions in Cote d’Ivoire, Liberia, Haiti, and Sudan the overall size of the U.N. peacekeeping budget has decreased from over $8 billion in 2016 to approximately $6.4 billion currently.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. DOROTHY CAMILLE SHEA BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People’s Republic of China is the “only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it.” The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People’s Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Just this week, reporting indicates that the Chinese are planning a training facility that could put People’s Liberation Army troops within 100 miles of the United States. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Yes. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that “the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will work to advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, and public diplomacy to bolster the United States’ interest in the U.N. system.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. It is highly unlikely that Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) activities would be beneficial to U.S. interests, given that the Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence’s 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.”

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party that would constructively work with the United States in good faith? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State’s new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in the U.N. System.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the countries in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in the U.N. system and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address China's efforts to expand its influence in the U.N. system.

Question. The Biden Administration has voiced support for a pair of deals to import $600 million of gas and electricity into Lebanon via Syria. This appears to violate the Caesar Syria Civilian Protection Act, as the Assad regime would receive compensation for the deal. Why is the administration trying to avoid waiving the application of sanctions under the Caesar Act for this project?

Answer. The Administration has not waived Caesar or any other sanctions, which remain an important tool to press for accountability for the Assad regime's atrocious record of human rights abuses and violations. The United States is focused on maximizing the benefits to the Lebanese people—who continue to struggle with an acute energy crisis—while limiting any potential benefit to the Assad regime. No final determination has yet been made about the U.S. sanctions implications of that proposal. We received provisional contracts for both the electricity and gas deals last year. The final financing terms and contracts are still being discussed by the parties and the World Bank. The Departments of Treasury and State still need to review details of the final financing terms and contracts to assess any relevant sanctions concerns. Only at that time will we have the information needed to make any final determinations. The Department of State looks forward to continuing to consult with Congress on this important issue.

Question. If confirmed, will you advocate for the U.S. to violate its own sanctions or statutes for partisan activity at the U.N.?

Answer. No. If confirmed, I would continue to comply with all relevant U.S. laws, including applicable sanctions laws.

Question. Can you assure this committee that you will actively oppose all efforts by foreign governments to engage with or rehabilitate the Assad regime while at the U.N.?

Answer. We have been clear that the United States will not normalize relations with the Assad regime, nor support other countries normalizing relations, absent authentic progress toward a political solution consistent with U.N. Security Council resolution 2254. As Ambassador to Lebanon, I consistently conveyed these positions to Lebanese authorities at all levels, and if confirmed, I will prioritize continuing to work with our allies, likeminded partners, and the U.N. to implement Security Council resolution 2254.

Question. While serving as the U.S. Ambassador to Lebanon, you held a meeting with pro-Hezbollah officials. Photographs surfaced of you wearing the traditional hijab for the meeting, while Iranian protesters were dying to give women the right not to wear a hijab in Iran. Do you believe you made a mistake by wearing the hijab when meeting with the pro-Hezbollah officials?

Answer. Sheikh Ali al-Khatib is not a pro-Hizballah official; he is a religious leader in Lebanon's Shia community, which includes those who oppose Hizballah. As Ambassador to Lebanon, I regularly engage with the country's array of religious leaders. I do not believe there is any contradiction between my choice to wear a veil during this meeting (out of respect for religious tradition when meeting a cleric in Lebanon)—and my absolute support for and solidarity with the women of Iran. If confirmed, I will continue to press for the advancement of women's rights in Iran and all countries.

Question. Would you do it again? And if so, why? What kind of signal did this send to the pro-democracy movement in Iran?

Answer. Yes, I would choose to do so again in such a setting, out of respect for religious tradition. As my record has shown, I have been and remain committed to advancing freedoms of expression and religion or belief. Wearing a veil as a sign of respect during a meeting with this influential religious figure—as I also have done when meeting with Sunni and Druze religious leaders in Lebanon—in no way contradicts my steadfast support for the right of Iranian women not to wear the veil and indeed the rights of all Iranians to full freedom of expression, and religion or belief. Moreover, while Hizballah routinely tries to portray the U.S. Government as working against the Shia community in Lebanon, my engagement with Shia religious figures (in which among other things I underscore the good work that the U.S. Government is doing in their communities) clearly demonstrates the fallacy of Hizballah’s narrative. Indeed, my wider efforts to push back on Hizballah’s malign influence in Lebanon and throughout the region serve to contain the influence of Iran’s main ally and help further the cause of democracy and human rights.

Question. Will you promote an LGBT agenda at the U.N., even if this might alienate needed allies and partners in our competition with Beijing?

Answer. The United States will continue to promote respect for the human rights of all persons, including LGBTQI+ persons, globally. The United States has found ways to partner with allies and partners across regions with the goal of bringing attention to, and support for, LGBTQI+ persons including in the Human Rights Council, U.N. Security Council, OAS, and ILO, among other multilateral organizations. If confirmed, I will continue to support the work of the U.N. LGBTI Core Group in New York. These partnerships are critical to building relationships across regions and other important cross-cutting issues, without alienating allies and partners in our competition with Beijing.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. JACK A. MARKELL BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

In the State Department’s 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report, Italy remained on Tier 2 for its incremental progress but lack of victim identification, particularly among children.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Italy operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. I take the issue of trafficking in persons extremely seriously. If confirmed, I will encourage the Italian Government to implement the TIP Report recommendations to protect potential trafficking victims, including amongst migrant populations, and work vigorously to support their efforts to investigate and prosecute trafficking cases.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to reporting the reality of the trafficking situation in Italy as it pertains to the country narrative in the Trafficking in Persons report?

Answer. As I understand, Embassy Rome works closely with the Italian Government to share U.S. concerns about trafficking in persons and the Embassy contributes to the Congressionally mandated reporting on conditions there. If confirmed, I commit to comprehensive reporting of the trafficking situation and will work with the Government to address the concerns as outlined in the Trafficking in Persons Report.

In the State Department’s 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Italy had concerning incidents of antisemitic incidents and threats of violence.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. The Italian constitution protects religious freedom and Prime Minister Meloni has condemned the rise of antisemitism in Italy, appointed a special envoy to combat antisemitism, and met with Italian Jewish leadership. However, there is still more to be done to address religious intolerance and discrimination, including antisemitism. If confirmed, I commit to working with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom, the Special Envoy to Monitor and Combat Antisemitism, and the Government of Italy to bolster religious freedom and to combat all forms of antisemitism including online and in public sporting events. I also look forward to engaging with the Senate Bipartisan Task Force for Combating Antisemitism, of which I know you are a member.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage, formally and informally, with government officials—including its coordinator to fight antisemitism—religious actors, youth activists, media, and other civil society groups to address the issue of antisemitism and highlight the importance of religious freedom and tolerance, in coordination with colleagues in Washington.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Italy increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. I believe that religious freedom is critical to pluralistic societies. If confirmed, I would engage with all stakeholders, including civil society, faith-based organizations, and the Government of Italy, including its coordinator to fight antisemitism, to focus our efforts to promote respect for religious freedom and tolerance.

In the State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report, Italy had several significant human rights abuses, including threats of violence against journalists.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. Violence and threats of violence against journalists, members of national, racial, and ethnic minorities, and members of the Jewish and LGBTQI+ communities are not acceptable. If confirmed, I would work with the Government of Italy to ensure that those responsible for human rights abuses are held accountable under the law. I would also work with the relevant offices in the U.S. Mission to engage civil society organizations that advocate for human rights to better understand their concerns and elevate their voices when appropriate.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Promoting respect for human rights is a key priority of mine and is a central priority for the Biden administration. If confirmed, I commit to personally engaging with civil society to hear their concerns and to elevate their voices when appropriate. I would also encourage and support all members of the Mission to meet with civil society groups.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. It is important that international organizations are led by capable individuals committed to upholding the integrity of the rules-based international order. If confirmed, I would work with USUN and IO colleagues to identify, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. Ensuring that the United States and our like-minded allies and partners do not cede influence in the U.N. system to those who do not share our values and are not committed to the foundational principles of the U.N. is of vital importance to U.S. foreign policy and national security interests. If confirmed, I commit to working with allies and partners to promote likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system.

According to the Conduct in U.N. Field Missions online portal, there are two open allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by the country's peacekeepers deployed to U.N. peacekeeping missions, in cases from 2023.

Question. How will you engage with the Italian Government to ensure that perpetrators of sexual exploitation and abuse from U.N. peacekeeping missions are held accountable?

Answer. Italy rightly takes pride in being a major global security provider through its leadership and participation in numerous U.N. missions, to include its contribution of 900 troops to the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), as well as NATO and EU operations overseas. Every U.N. member country should be working towards creating a U.N. peacekeeping system that is free from sexual exploitation and abuse. If confirmed, I will continue to voice strong support for the U.N.

Secretary-General's policy of zero tolerance for sexual exploitation and abuse and call for the Government of Italy to ensure that perpetrators are held accountable.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the countries in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be to advance U.S. interests in Italy and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partnerships in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues, as well as Congress to address the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in Italy and the region.

Question. Italy's 2022 general election resulted in a center-right majority in Parliament, which resulted in the first female Prime Minister of Italy. The new Italian Government is supportive of NATO, skeptical of China, supports closer ties between Italy and Taiwan, has condemned Russia's invasion of Ukraine, is acutely aware of mass migrations effects upon Europe, and maintains conservative views and policies. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between the U.S. and Italy?

Answer. The United States and Italy enjoy a close partnership and vital alliance. Prime Minister Meloni's Government has continued Italy's impressive support to Ukraine and policy of holding Russia accountable and deployed forces to strengthen deterrence and defense on NATO's eastern flank. It has been forward-leaning and clear-eyed in addressing the challenge posed by the PRC, acted to de-risk Italy's economy through investment screening, championed Italy's role in the greater Mediterranean, and is working to deepen transatlantic collaboration. If confirmed, I will endeavor to continue this positive trajectory with her Government.

Question. With more than 80 percent of this ally's population practicing the Catholic faith, if confirmed, will you promote an LGBT agenda in Italy?

Answer. If confirmed, I will promote respect for the human rights of all people, including LGBTQI+ persons. As I have during my time leading our mission to the OECD, I would continue to promote the rights and dignity of all persons.

Pope Francis recently called for members of the Catholic Church to welcome and respect LGBTQI+ people and called laws against them unjust. In promoting human rights in Italy, I would work with members of all faiths, including the Catholic faith, to advance our shared goals of human dignity for all.

Question. Should an LGBT agenda come before national security or American prosperity?

Answer. Promoting respect for human rights is an integral aspect of securing American prosperity and national security. Countries are stronger and more prosperous when all people are respected, treated with dignity, and able to contribute to the economy without discrimination. Support for the equal rights and dignity of all people is an international obligation that the United States, Italy, and countries from all regions around the world have sworn to fulfill. If confirmed, I will strengthen American national security and prosperity and work to deepen U.S.-Italy cooperation to address global challenges, defend the international rules-based order, reduce nuclear risk, promote democracy and respect for human rights, and address climate change. I will also strive to advance U.S.-Italy economic ties and promote U.S. exports and boost Italian investment in the United States.

Question. How can the U.S. support Italy and EU energy diversification away from Russia?

Answer. U.S. LNG is helping to improve European gas diversification. U.S. LNG exports to Italy increased three-fold in 2022, contributing to Italy's remarkable reduction in its dependence on Russian gas since the start of Russia's full-scale invasion of Ukraine.

If confirmed, I will continue to promote opportunities for U.S. exports of all kinds. At the same time, I will promote our growing bilateral cooperation and two-way investment in the clean energy transition, including in solar, wind, hydrogen, and other renewable sources of energy.

Question. If confirmed, how will you convince Italy to meet the 2 percent GDP defense spending upon NATO?

Answer. Italy is a vital ally and shares our goal of strengthening NATO to deal with the full range of threats facing the transatlantic community, including terrorism. If confirmed, I will urge Italy to increase its defense spending (currently at 1.54 percent of GDP) to meet its Wales Pledge commitments in support of our collective defense. Prime Minister Meloni committed in March to raising Italian defense spending to 2 percent of GDP by 2028.

Question. Earlier this week, Italy invoked national security to remove the CCP's influence over tire maker Pirelli by removing a Chinese company's right to appoint Pirelli's CEO and to negate the possibility the CCP could use the Chinese company to misuse Pirelli's chip technology. This decision comes amid allegations that the CCP was attempting to exert tighter controls over the company. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between China and Italy?

Answer. Under a previous Italian Government, Italy was the only G7 member to join the PRC's Belt and Road Initiative (BRI). Like other countries, Italy has not seen the hoped for economic boost from BRI and subsequent Italian Governments have been more skeptical of the PRC. PM Meloni has voiced concerns over the PRC's activities and her Government has used its investment-screening authorities to reverse or limit some previous investments by China.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the Italian Government to address shared concerns regarding the PRC's non-market policies and practices as well as its threatening behavior toward Taiwan, its human rights record, and the risks of deepening or creating new economic dependencies.

Question. Do you believe Italy, or the EU, can de-risk instead of decouple critical industries from the CCP?

Answer. As evidenced by Italy's recent decision involving Pirelli, the Government of Italy is aware of the need to screen foreign investment in strategic sectors and has used its investment and procurement screening authority to assess and regulate investment in strategic sectors by foreign firms, including from the PRC. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to work with the Government of Italy to de-risk its economic relationship with the PRC.

Question. How can the U.S. assist Italy and regional partners to decouple their supply chains and critical industries from the CCP?

Answer. Italy recognizes that an economic model relying on cheap energy imports from Russia and exports to the PRC market is no longer viable. Instead, Italy is working to become a hub for new energy flows into Europe and to attract greater foreign investment.

Italy is eager to join the United States as members of a group of "digitally capable" countries leading on critical and emerging technologies and policy. Italy is preparing legislation to incentivize the extraction of 15 critical minerals found in Italy. If confirmed, I would continue to engage Italy on the crucial topic of supply-chain security, and to support its efforts to de-risk its economic ties with the PRC.

SUBMITTED TO VERNELLE TRIM FITZPATRICK BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Bilateral Relations

Question. In your view, what are the top three priorities for the U.S. bilateral relationship with Gabon that you will advance or maintain as U.S. ambassador, if confirmed?

Answer. Our top three strategic priorities in Gabon are to collaborate with the Gabonese government to protect Gabon's forests and biodiversity in the Congo Basin, what some call Earth's second lung; countering the harmful activities of the People's Republic of China (PRC) and Russia; and, working to broaden cooperation on maritime and other security issues.

If confirmed, I will advance several agreements that we are hoping to sign with Gabon, including a Defense Cooperation Agreement, a Bilateral Framework Agreement and development cooperation agreements with U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Forest Service. All of these agreements will help anchor our partnership with Gabon and will allow us to do more together.

Question. If confirmed, you will likely arrive in Gabon in the immediate pre-election or post-election period, where President Ali Bongo is expected to seek reelection and "win" another term. Gabon is rated "not free" by Freedom House's Freedom in the World Index. How will you use your position and platform, as U.S. Ambassador, to address issues of democracy and democratic governance, as well as corruption, in Gabon?

Answer. Corruption and lack of transparency remain major impediments to domestic and foreign investment and commercial opportunities, and the U.S. supports Gabon's commitment to addressing endemic corruption. In June 2019, the government of Gabon created a new ministry to address good governance, anti-corruption, and the evaluation of public policy. Since the creation of the ministry, there have been several high-level officials arrested for corruption, including cabinet ministers, former aides of the president, and the mayor of Libreville.

Gabon has rejoined the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, aimed at improving transparency in the management of mining, oil, and gas revenues. In addition, in 2022, the government made significant anticorruption efforts to reduce cases of security forces harassing or extorting refugees and noncitizen Africans.

Question. In your view, how can the United States better support the democratic aspirations of the people of Gabon?

Answer. The United States supports the people of Gabon in their goals of long-term stability, prosperity, economic growth, and the expansion of democracy. We seek to promote more open and inclusive governance and respect for human rights and the rule of law through strengthened bilateral relations emphasizing our enduring commitment to trade, investment, security, and environmental protection.

If confirmed, I will engage with Gabonese authorities, citizens, and civil society groups in all aspects of combatting corruption, and improving and expanding democratic governance, democratic electoral processes, and civic participation. I would meet with opposition parties, promote professional journalism, and support efforts by the Government of Gabon to build stronger institutions. Recognizing that U.S. assistance to Gabon is limited to a few areas—namely environment and security—as it is an upper middle-income country, it will also be important to leverage what other like-minded actors are doing in the good governance space.

U.S. Africa Leaders Summit

Question. What is your understanding of the deliverables from the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit (ALS) broadly targeting the African continent?

Answer. The U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit demonstrated our renewed commitment to partnerships between the United States and African countries, institutions, and people. We remain focused on what we will do with African nations and people, not for African nations and people as we deepen and expand our partnerships, amplify African voices, and support the empowerment of Africans.

At the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit, leaders shared their commitment to championing democracy, good governance, and respect for human rights; advancing trade and investment; progressing climate innovation; improving health and food security; strengthening peace and security; and supporting the African diaspora. We are proud of the private sector commitments made as well as the Administration's continuation of high-level engagements with countries on the continent. Further, the President's Advisory Council on African Diaspora Engagement in the United States (PAC-ADE) will advise the President on strengthening relationships between the United States, African communities, and the African Diaspora.

Question. What is your understanding of specific deliverables from ALS to Gabon?

Answer. The programs and projects outlined during ALS differ from country to country -- whether it is for security assistance, public health, democracy and governance, infrastructure development, education, or the environment. The United States is engaging with the Gabonese to advance initiatives in many of these areas. For example, working to sign a Defense Cooperation Agreement with the Gabonese government, which would facilitate consistent and expanded security cooperation and assistance. This would be in addition to current programs such as the International Military Education and Training (IMET) program.

Another initiative that presents opportunities is the Initiative for Atlantic Cooperation, announced last September by Secretary Blinken during UNGA, which Gabon is now engaged in, along with many other countries along the Atlantic seaboard. In addition, USAID has developed a Framework bilateral cooperation agreement for Gabon, which, when finalized, will be a big step towards expanding future programs in Gabon. If confirmed, I will support these ongoing efforts.

Question. Has Mission Libreville received specific guidance from the Administration in messaging and implementing ALS deliverables?

Answer. Yes. Our Embassy in Libreville received guidance on U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit implementation areas and the Digital Transformation with Africa initiative. Details on announced deliverables and talking points were provided.

Question. What feedback have you received from Gabon's delegation to ALS? What is its understanding of ALS deliverables and next steps?

Answer. As the Ambassadorial nominee, I have not met with the Government of Gabon. However, the Bureau of African Affairs has advised me that the Gabonese delegation was very pleased with ALS. They viewed it as a positive step forward for U.S. engagement and partnership with African nations, and Gabon in particular. Our Embassy in Libreville and the Bureau of African Affairs in Washington have been engaged with Gabonese officials including President Bongo, the Foreign Minister, Prime Minister, Gabon's Ambassador to the United States, and other government ministries since ALS to fully explain and implement ALS deliverables. If confirmed, I will follow up on these discussions with the Gabonese government to further strengthen the bilateral relationship.

Question. How does Mission Libreville plan to support the implementation of ALS deliverables in Gabon?

Answer. To realize the potential of what was messaged at ALS, if confirmed, I will continue existing efforts aimed at strengthening bilateral relations, including continuing negotiation of bilateral agreements such as the USAID Framework Bilateral Agreement and the Defense Cooperation Agreement; developing arrangements for cooperation with U.S. Forest Service and U.S. Fish and Wildlife; and continuing work on the Initiative for Atlantic Cooperation. I will also seek to develop and expand commercial business initiatives between the United States and Gabon.

During the ALS, President Biden, African Union Chair and President of Senegal Macky Sall, and African Union Commission Chair Moussa Faki Mahamat issued a joint “Vision Statement” pledging to “deepen our collaboration to solve global problems and shape the rules of the road for technology, space, cybersecurity, trade, environmental protection, and economics.”

Question. How do you conceive of Mission Libreville’s role in implementing this vision?

Answer. As part of the whole-of-government effort, Mission Libreville is supportive of the launch of the President’s Advisory Council on African Diaspora Engagement, the half a billion dollar rise in investment value of deals committed through the U.S. Africa Business Forum from $15.7 billion to $16.2 billion, the implementation of signature initiatives, including the Digital Transformation with Africa (DTA), and investments under the Partnership for Global Infrastructure and Investment (PGII), and elevating African voices. If confirmed, I will be a strong advocate for greater collaboration between Gabon and the U.S. Government in all these areas.

The Administration pledged during the ALS, among other things, to expand U.S. support for leadership training, economic and trade integration, digital access and literacy, health system capacity, food security, climate adaptation, and security sector reform in Africa.

Question. How does Mission Libreville plan to support these objectives in concrete terms?

Answer. Gabon and the United States have an excellent, longstanding cooperative relationship particularly on environmental and security issues, which we will continue to grow. We collaborate closely on protecting Gabon’s unique forest ecosystem, primarily through USAID’s Central Africa Regional Program for the Environment (CARPE), which has been in place since 1995 and is the U.S. Government’s oldest and largest environmental program in Africa. The U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service helped establish Gabon’s National Parks Agency (ANPN) to protect the country’s rich biodiversity with a $40 million grant dispersed from 2013 to 2023. The U.S. Forest Service is also helping Gabon combat illegal logging activities through capacity building programs, such as training prosecutors, judges, and investigators.

U.S. security cooperations and assistance efforts focus on building Gabonese capacities in several areas. Security assistance includes the International Military Education and Training (IMET) program and occasional military-to-military events. Gabon has been a longtime partner on maritime security issues, such as by being a participant in exercise “Obangame Express” since its inception. In late April 2023, the United States and Gabon announced a joint State Partnership Program that links U.S. National Guard units from a specific U.S. state (the state is TBD) with partner nations security forces and disaster response organizations in a cooperative, mutually beneficial relationship.

Gabon was formally invited to the Secretary Blinken-hosted Ministerial launching the Initiative on Atlantic Cooperation in September 2022 at UNGA, the aim of which is to advance shared security, economic, and environmental interests in the Atlantic Basin. We expect Gabon will be especially interested in countering illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing and developing its blue economy. If confirmed, I will work closely with the embassy team to build on these initiatives and seek opportunities to engage on the other ALS objectives.

Question. How, and according to what benchmarks, will Post be assessed in terms of achievement of these objectives?

Answer. Many of the commitments announced at the U.S. Africa Leaders Summit relate to programming that already has a proven track record and associated program benchmarks. If confirmed, I will lead Mission Libreville to continue advancing key themes of the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit, including supporting peace and security, generating economic growth, combating climate change, and building healthier lives.

One of the new commitments the Administration announced during the ALS is to “engage with complex political transitions in Africa and demonstrate U.S. Government support to governments and civil society at critical moments.”

Question. What role do you envision Mission Libreville playing in this African Democratic and Political Transitions (ADAPT) initiative, if any?

Answer. The new ADAPT initiative reaffirms U.S. commitment to durable democratic political transitions and will work to counter democratic backsliding in partnership with regional bodies, governments, and civil society. Pilot countries for ADAPT support are currently being finalized.

Trade and Investment

Question. How would you practice commercial diplomacy on behalf of U.S. investments in Gabon?

Answer. With its high per capita GDP, stability, educated workforce, and the government's commitment to diversifying its economy away from oil and mineral resource extraction, Gabon presents opportunities to boost commercial ties. At the same time, however, the business climate remains challenging due to the need to increase accountability and transparency, decrease bureaucratic impediments, and improve the country's infrastructure. As a result, the presence of U.S. companies is small in the country.

If confirmed, I will engage in commercial diplomacy by meeting with U.S. businesses to learn about barriers to trade and investment and working with Embassy Libreville and agencies in Washington as well as the Foreign Commercial Service representative to identify potential linkages between U.S. companies and opportunities in Gabon. I will seek opportunities to build on the March 2023 visit of the Department of State's Special Representative for Commercial and Business Affairs, Dilawar Syed, to Gabon. The visit opened new avenues for the embassy team to pursue.

If confirmed, I will ensure Embassy Libreville draws on the range of economic tools at our disposal, including Prosper Africa, Power Africa, DFC, USTDA, the Export-Import Bank, and more. I will also engage government counterparts to encourage them to remove barriers to trade and investment and advocate for U.S. companies over our competitors.

Question. What is your assessment of Gabon's greatest barriers to increased two-way trade and investment with the United States?

Answer. Gabon's oil-reliant economy recovered significantly in 2022 as world oil prices increased, but minimal diversification, a large and stifling bureaucracy, and frequent widespread public and private sector strikes discourage domestic and foreign investment. Corruption is also a major impediment to increased bilateral trade and investment.

Despite the economic turmoil of the COVID-19 pandemic, Gabon remains the third highest GDP-per-capita in Africa and presents many opportunities for growth. If confirmed, I will advocate for increased commerce between the two nations and engage with government counterparts about lowering the barriers to investment, including fighting corruption and promoting good governance, which are key to laying the groundwork for economic stability and development.

Question. What is your understanding of the tools at your disposal—including through Prosper Africa—as U.S. Ambassador to Gabon, if confirmed, to support addressing barriers to trade and investment in the enabling environment, including the need for economic and political reforms?

Answer. Increasing U.S. investment in and bilateral trade with Gabon is a key line of effort in our work to strengthen our partnership with the country. U.S. companies advance democratic principles, promote corporate responsibility, provide goods and services that are known for their excellence, and create jobs both at home and abroad when they increase invest and trade. The Government of Gabon has repeatedly expressed an interest in increasing the presence of U.S. companies in the country.

Prosper Africa is a Presidential-level, national security initiative that brings together—and enhances—the tools and services from 17 U.S. Government agencies to help companies and investors do business in U.S. and African markets. The initiative serves as an entry point for companies and investors to access the full suite of U.S. Government trade and investment services.

If confirmed, I will tap expertise within the Department of State, USAID, the Department of Commerce, and other agencies involved in the Prosper Africa initiative to address barriers to trade and investment to create a more enabling environment in Gabon, including the need for economic and political reforms. I will engage Prosper Africa to mobilize resources and expertise from across the U.S. Government's trade and investment agencies, including DFC, USTDA, and the Export-Import Bank, to provide market insights and advisory services to U.S. companies seeking to invest in Gabon, and more broadly expand two-way trade and investment between the United States and Gabon. For example, DFC has expressed interest in pursuing projects in the country.

Foreign Assistance

Question. The USAID/Central Africa Regional Mission in Kinshasa covers Gabon. How will you approach partnership with the USAID Mission Director and other USAID colleagues covering Gabon remotely?

Answer. Building on the strong, collegial partnership with the USAID's West Africa Regional Mission in Accra and USAID's Central Africa Regional Operating Unit in Kinshasa will be key to my efforts, if confirmed, to managing USAID equities in Gabon effectively. The U.S. AID Mission in Kinshasa manages the Central Africa Program for the Environment (CARPE), which has been in place in the region since 1995 and is the U.S. Government's oldest and largest environmental program in Africa, with over $650 million invested throughout the region to date.

If confirmed, I will prioritize building a collegial, and effective relationship with the USAID/Central Africa Regional Mission in Kinshasa and will encourage other members of the team to follow suit at the working level. I will view USAID leadership as an extension of the embassy's country team though they are physically located in the region and not in Gabon and will seek consistent, regular exchanges with USAID's leadership.

A significant portion of the U.S. foreign assistance portfolio for Gabon is focused on the environment and biodiversity, including through the Central Africa Regional Program for the Environment (CARPE).

Question. As U.S. Ambassador to Gabon, if confirmed, how will you engage with USAID and its implementing partners to ensure adequate and appropriate in-country oversight of CARPE programs?

Answer. If confirmed, I will draw from my experience as the Director of the Office of Assistance to Africa in the State Department's Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM) when engaging with USAID and its implementing partners who work on CARPE programs. At PRM, we must maintain close contact with our Regional Refugee Coordinators on the continent. Our partnership with them relies on constant and consistent communication, our joint monitoring and evaluation of projects, and our shared responsibility to engage partners and highlight challenges and ways to resolve them.

If confirmed, I will ensure that we encourage visits in country by USAID colleagues, ensure regular communication between USAID, its partners, and Embassy Libreville, request that the embassy be briefed about the performance evaluations of programming in Gabon, and seek USAID colleagues' input in the embassy's review of our Integrated Country Strategy.

Question. How can you, as U.S. Ambassador to Gabon, if confirmed, improve efforts to communicate the work of the United States to support Gabon to preserve its natural resources and biodiversity, including as part of U.S. efforts to counter Chinese influence and China's extractive relationship with Gabon?

Answer. The Administration has been clear that the Peoples Republic of China (PRC) is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. Gabon and the United States have an excellent, longstanding cooperative relationship on issues involving the biodiversity and natural resources, which we will continue to grow. If confirmed, I will continue to highlight the benefits of partnering with the United States to my Gabonese government counterparts through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Gabonese ties. I will work closely with the embassy's Public Affairs Section to review the mission's media strategy to determine how we can best build on the embassy's efforts to bolster the U.S. Government's public profile in Gabon and implement a plan of action accordingly.

Trafficking in Persons

In the State Department's 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report, Gabon remained on Tier 2 Watch List for its failure to meet the minimum standards but incrementally improving its' anti-trafficking capacity.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Gabon operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue Embassy Libreville's ongoing efforts working with the Gabonese government. Post is engaging the government in many areas and has provided a number of recommendations, including: resource and implement the National Action Plan on TIP; formally convene the national inter-ministerial anti-trafficking commission to coordinate government efforts; increase efforts to proactively identify adult and child victims of trafficking, including among key sectors such as domestic service, markets, and individuals in commercial sex, and refer trafficking victims to care; increase efforts to investigate and prosecute trafficking crimes, including those involving complicit officials, and adequately sentence convicted traffickers; provide training for law enforcement officers, prosecutors, and judges on the penal code and victim-centered, trauma-informed investigations; and, increase financial or in-kind support to government- and NGO-run shelters.

If confirmed, I will take various steps to encourage the Government of Gabon to increase its efforts to counter trafficking in persons. This would include raising the issue early on in meetings with all relevant senior-level government officials, ensuring continuous meetings at all levels of the government responsible for addressing the issue, ensuring that the embassy attends public events to highlight support for trafficking in persons including at the Chief of Mission level, and meeting with representatives of civil society that are engaged in the fight against trafficking in persons, among other actions.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to reporting the reality of the trafficking situation in Gabon in the country narrative of the annual Trafficking in Persons report?

Answer. Yes, I do. The Department has consistently raised concerns in both Libreville and Washington regarding the challenges related to human trafficking, and I will not hesitate to report the situation on the ground in a comprehensive and authentic manner. I have worked on the fight against Trafficking in Persons for years, and if confirmed, look forward to engaging on the issue in Gabon.

Religious Freedom

In the State Department's 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Gabon was noted for having great societal and governmental respect for religious freedom, but more work can be done to better bolster this important internationally-recognized human right.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. The Gabonese constitution prohibits religious discrimination and provides for freedom of conscience, the free practice of religion, and the right to form religious communities that may govern and manage their affairs independently, consistent with public order. It grants religious groups autonomy and the right to provide religious instruction. U.S. embassy staff meet with senior Gabonese officials, NGOs, civil society, and local religious leaders to encourage continued respect for religious freedom and interreligious dialogue and activities.

If confirmed, I will continue these efforts and will maintain an open dialogue with the Department of State's Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes, I commit to personally engaging with civil society on a wide range of human rights issues, including freedom of religion or belief.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Gabon increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Embassy Libreville's efforts to work with the Government of Gabon on this issue. Post regularly engages with religious communities to listen to their concerns and solicit their input on how best to improve society and government respect for religious freedom. If confirmed, I will work closely with the government, religious leaders, and people of all beliefs to promote respect for and the right to freedom of religion or belief for all.

Human Rights

In the State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report, Gabon was listed as having a litany of significant human rights abuses, including political prisoners, child labor, corruption, and more.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. While the Government of Gabon has taken some steps to identify, investigate, and prosecute officials for human rights violations and abuses as well as corruption, impunity remains a serious problem. The government has made significant efforts over the past year to reduce cases of security forces harassing or extorting refugees and noncitizen Africans. They have also made some progress related to violence against women and women's rights writ large; however, legal, and cultural obstacles continue to dissuade women from reporting cases to authorities, and concerns persist related to child marriage in Gabon.

If confirmed, the Embassy staff and I will continue to work closely with the government, NGOs, civil society, religious leaders, and people of all beliefs to promote respect for human rights for all people. I will also support efforts to increase the capacity of civil society organizations to better position them to advocate for an improvement of Gabon's human rights record.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes, I commit to personally engaging with civil society on a wide range of human rights issues. Civil society organizations play a key role in promoting respect for human rights, including freedom of expression, and advancing democracy and good governance. If confirmed, I will engage closely with civil society stakeholders to listen to their experiences and concerns, to identify areas of cooperation, and to advance U.S. priorities with regard to human rights.

International Organizations

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. The Bureau of African Affairs works closely with IO and USUN on shared priorities and on all campaigns and hiring initiatives involving qualified American candidates for the U.N. system. If confirmed, I will continue to elevate these efforts in multilateral fora and with our partners in the region and in my engagements with U.S. citizens. My background working in the Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration (PRM), which requires significant diplomatic engagement with a number of U.N. agencies which PRM funds, has prepared me well for understanding the nuances of the U.N. system, and the importance of strong U.S. leadership role in advancing strategic priorities related to U.N. reform and oversight.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with USUN and IO colleagues to advance the United States' affirmative agenda for the U.N. and strengthen partnerships with traditional and non-traditional partners, including in specialized and technical agencies. U.S. re-engagement at the U.N. system is critical to reasserting U.S. leadership, including by working with our partners and allies to promote initiatives that advance shared priorities on technical matters.

If confirmed, I will draw from my experience in PRM and with the U.N. system and as DCM and Chargé d'Affaires in Cameroon as well as communication with colleagues at USUN and IO to advocate for the Government of Gabon's support for U.S. initiatives at the U.N. I would have periodic consultations with IO and USUN colleagues to keep abreast of the trendlines of Gabon's voting patterns on specific votes and more generally the engagements that secure Gabon's support for U.S. or likeminded initiatives at the U.N.

According to the Conduct in U.N. Field Missions online portal, there are 108 open allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by the country's peacekeepers deployed to U.N. peacekeeping missions, in cases dating back to 2020.

Question. How will you engage with the Gabonese government to ensure that perpetrators of sexual exploitation and abuse from U.N. peacekeeping missions are held accountable?

Answer. The United States continues to be a resolute supporter of the full implementation of the Secretary-General's policy of zero-tolerance for Sexual Exploitation and Abuse (SEA) across the United Nations system, including in U.N. peacekeeping operations. Embassy Libreville has had frank discussions with the Government of Gabon on sexual abuse allegations levied against Gabonese peacekeepers, which resulted in the U.N. repatriating the entirety of Gabon's 450-strong contingent from the U.N. Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Force Mission in the CAR (MINUSCA) in September 2021.

If confirmed, I will continue to engage the Gabonese Government to carry out credible investigations of all allegations and bring any cases to conclusion with appropriate action.

State Management and Oversight

Question. How do you intend to work with senior leadership at the State Department to address acute staffing challenges at Mission Libreville?

Answer. The challenge of filling positions in historically difficult to staff posts, of which those in Africa comprise more than half, is one that the Department is deeply committed to resolving. Insufficient infrastructure, inadequate schools, health care challenges, and the remote nature of many postings in Africa are inherent impediments to getting our posts to full staffing.

I believe the Department is working to address these challenges, and if confirmed, I commit to maintaining a focus on finding specific solutions for Mission Gabon. I would ask the Deputy Chief of Mission, the Management Officer, and the Human Resources Officer to review our existing approach and determine what additional steps we can take to fill positions. I believe that the embassy's leadership has an important role to play in filling positions and would personally participate in outreach to prospective bidders.

Question. Many U.S. missions have been under enormous stress over the last several years, in large part due to COVID. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Libreville?

Answer. I understand that morale at Embassy Libreville is good. This is despite the stresses of living in a country with poor (transportation, communication, and health) infrastructure, and staff vacancies. The embassy team knows what the priorities are and is working as a unified mission to achieve them.

As was the case everywhere, COVID-19 was a challenge for Mission Libreville, but the strong community within the mission helped manage the challenging times. With most positions filled at the Embassy, a strong sense of community, and an inspired team of American officers and locally employed staff, morale is higher at Mission Libreville than it has been in a long time.

If confirmed, I pledge to support the Embassy community in every way possible. The work is challenging, and the city offers some entertainment, in particular access to beautiful beaches. However, it can be isolating as well. I will encourage the team to get away—whether to another country or within Gabon to enjoy its natural beauty.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Libreville?

Answer. Maintaining and improving morale at any post is essential to ensuring that the mission advances U.S. national foreign policy interests effectively and to building the “esprit de corps” of the embassy team. If confirmed, I will convey my top priorities to the embassy team and the milestones reached in advancing them. I will also set the tone at the top to ensure that everyone knows that I expect that all members of our team treat each other with respect, professionalism, and collegiality, and I will model that behavior.

Other key elements of improving morale include ensuring that colleagues have the opportunity to convey their concerns, are briefed on the steps we are taking to address these needs and understand what we can and cannot do. This includes addressing issues such as schools, Eligible Family Member employment, or housing and health care concerns. It is important we hear the concerns of our locally employed staff, who are often raise issues related to pay, health insurance, and hiring practices. It will also be important to encourage supervisors to reward their subordinates for good work but also to address any performance or conduct issues, as failure to do so would decrease morale.

I will seek information from the Deputy Chief of Mission about efforts to conduct surveys and use of the resources available to us including our Community Liaison Officer, our Regional Medical Officer Psychologist, and those offered by the Department of State and other agencies to assist the embassy team.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Libreville?

Answer. Creating a unified mission and vision is absolutely essential for any Chief of Mission. If confirmed, I would create a unified mission and vision at Mission Libreville by laying out my priorities on day one to the entire embassy community. Working with the Deputy Chief of Mission, I would convene regularly scheduled town halls to ensure that the Mission is aware of the successes we have had toward these priorities and will conduct reviews of the mission's efforts to implement the Integrated Country Strategy. I will also encourage the effective functioning of embassy working groups that share information and promote synergies so that members are leveraging each other's knowledge and resources.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of Mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I would describe my management style as nurturing and empowering. I believe in setting colleagues up for success and meeting them where they are as everyone brings different skills and experiences to a job. I firmly believe in mentoring and coaching and would help colleagues develop new skills. I also believe it is important to stress to colleagues that everyone makes mistakes and will encourage them to see mistakes as opportunities to grow. I also create a nurturing environment by encouraging the sharing of best practices so that my team can learn from each other.

I am an inclusive, approachable manager who seeks all viewpoints, including dissenting opinions and the questioning of underlying assumptions. I would take the time to explain my decisions, especially on delicate issues. I would also encourage colleagues to take leave and to de-prioritize tasks when needed so that they can stay focused on the most important priorities and reduce the risk of burn out. I will also make known my expectation that I expect managers to reward their subordinates for their work but also to address conduct and performance issues early. If confirmed, I will work with the Deputy Chief of Mission to create an environment in which colleagues feel appreciated and valued at the Embassy and are committed to maintaining a collegial environment.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or in private?

Answer. No. It is never acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates either in public or in private. If I have a concern about a subordinate's actions, I will raise the issue with that individual in private using a respectful tone and would demonstrate respect and professionalism in dealing with the issue. Everyone makes mistakes. What is important is what a leader does to help a subordinate learn from the experience and grow. If confirmed, I would create a nurturing environment that allows colleagues to make mistakes and learn from them.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with the Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. Having an effective, productive, and collegial relationship between the Ambassador and the Deputy Chief of Mission is absolutely vital to the success of an Embassy. If confirmed, I will draw on my own experience as a DCM and would establish a close relationship with the DCM. I will look to capitalize on our collective but diverse skills and experiences. I would encourage him to give me his frank or dissenting opinions behind closed doors which I would take into account when making decisions. If we have differing opinions on an issue, I would ensure that we present a united front to the embassy team.

I will make clear to the team that the DCM speaks for me when I am not around and ask that they follow the chain of command and discuss issues with the DCM before coming to me, recognizing that there may be rare instances in which that is not possible. I will also make sure that the DCM is aware of and briefed on communication and developments so that he can seamlessly act in my stead at any moment, including when he is Chargé d'Affaires. In addition, I will convey to the DCM my commitment to help him in his professional development and success and will ensure that he is recognized for his and our collective success.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. I see the Deputy Chief of Mission role, which is probably the hardest job at any mission, as the embassy's Chief Operating Officer. If confirmed, I will empower the DCM to fully own this space and to ensure that we have effective oversight of U.S. Government resources and assistance and are careful stewards of U.S. taxpayer dollars. I would also rely on the DCM to ensure we have strong internal controls, run an effective International Cooperative Administrative Services process, ensure that the various boards and committees within the embassy run well, continue mentoring first and second tour officers as well as mid-level officers and assist me in breaking down barriers between American and locally employed staff.

I will encourage the DCM to engage in foreign policy discussions, include the DCM on messages to Washington, and have meetings with Gabonese Government officials and other diplomatic engagements. It will be important for him to be kept abreast of all policy discussions and for him to provide me with recommendations and analysis. I would also ensure the DCM has a sufficient budget to host representational events, encourage him to engage in public affairs programming, and travel around the country.

In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking

Question. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeed in their roles?

Answer. Yes, I believe it is vital that all managers, including the Chief of Mission, provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who must succeed in their roles.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes. It is essential for all managers, including the Chief of Mission, to provide clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers. If confirmed, I would model this behavior. I regularly highlight the great work done by specific members of the team in staff meetings and have instituted a weekly award both at Embassy Yaoundé in Cameroon where I was the Deputy Chief of Mission and at the Office of Assistance in the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, where I am currently the Director. I prepare award nominations for colleagues who have done great work and encourage other managers to take the time to reward their employees. If confirmed, I would continue to follow these practices.

I act decisively to address conduct and performance issues and encourage managers to do the same, including by reaching out to the Human Resource Officer at Post. I encourage managers to see addressing conduct and performance issues as an opportunity to be a leader and to show others on the team their willingness to address these issues especially as failure to do so would undermine the confidence of the team in the manager.

It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and local citizens.

Question. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our Embassy walls enough to fully accomplish their missions?

Answer. In my experience, diplomats get outside of embassy walls to fully accomplish their missions. Getting outside of embassy walls is a core mandate of diplomatic work. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Cameroon as well as in other leadership roles in Washington, I have encouraged colleagues to travel to and within posts, including outside of the capital to other major cities as well as to rural areas. It is crucial to get a wide variety of views from different segment of the population.

In the past several years, diplomats have, however, had to change the way they do contact work during COVID, in a field where person to person contact is essential. Working during the outbreak and height of the pandemic was more difficult given the need to follow Centers for Disease Control guidelines, including in countries in Africa where many people did not wear masks, were often in close contact with each other, and did not have access to the vaccines, and when they did, did not take the vaccines for a variety of reasons. Even with this difficulty, diplomats and locally employed staff got the work done, relying on the strength of existing relationships.

The other constraint diplomats face is security. I believe it is important to support the work of the Regional Security Office (RSO) and to follow the professional advice of RSO colleagues on all matters dealing with security and to fight for the resources they need to do their jobs. For example, while I was the Deputy Chief of Mission in Cameroon, I supported efforts to obtain a second Assistant Regional Security Officer, which were successful. In Cameroon, we had some travel restrictions in place in parts of the country and followed the RSO guidelines about travel there. I also encouraged the embassy team to be cognizant of RSO requirements and the timeframes required to get the proper preparations in place to support travel outside of the capital.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage embassy colleagues to meet diverse contacts at all levels of the government and society both within and outside of Libreville, the capital, while maintaining ties with longtime Embassy contacts. I would stress the importance of determining whose opinion or perspective we are missing. I would also encourage American colleagues to get involved in public diplomacy outreach programs, any Ambassador Self-Help Fund or the Ambassador's Fund for Cultural Preservation programming, or any embassy supported English Language programs. If confirmed, I would encourage American colleagues to engage in social activities, such as sports or the arts, that target a wide swath of the Gabonese population both in urban and rural settings. I firmly believe that every diplomat is an ambassador of American culture regardless of position or rank. I would also encourage projects that demonstrate our care for the well-being of the Gabonese people. For example, the embassy team recently participated in a blood drive. I would encourage the continuation of such projects.

Question. The U.S. Embassy in Libreville is a small post with limited presence by USAID and other U.S. federal agencies and departments. How will you, as U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed, approach recruitment of staff and maintaining morale in Gabon?

Answer. I believe that the recruitment of staff and the maintaining of morale in is an all-embassy effort and that the Ambassador and Deputy Chief of Mission must articulate and visibly support the importance they attach to these objectives and ensure that these objectives are enshrined in the Integrated Country Strategy.

If confirmed, I would ask the Deputy Chief of Mission and the Management Section to assess what more can we do, using best practices from other posts and working with the Africa Bureau and Global Talent Management colleagues, to recruit staff for vacancies and proactively pursue top prospective bidders. I would personally engage in outreach to bidders to advocate for post. I would also support post's efforts for incentives and other benefits to encourage bidders' interest in Gabon.

On maintaining morale, I would support efforts to address the concerns of the Embassy team, both American and Locally Employed Staff, by ensuring that we are communicating the steps being taken to address them. I would ensure that we conduct climate surveys and reach out to the various communities within the embassy team, such as Eligible Family members, Marines, single employees, the Locally Employed Staff Association, etc. to make certain that we are addressing their needs. I would also support the work done by the Community Liaison Officer, ensuring that she has regular interaction with the embassy's leadership team. I would also support the embassy's award program including by encouraging managers to write awards for their subordinates but also mentor colleagues and take steps to address conduct or performance issues. In addition, I would encourage colleagues to take leave and to take care of their mental health.

SUBMITTED TO VERNELLE TRIM FITZPATRICK BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Just this week, reporting indicates that the Chinese are planning a training facility that could put People's Liberation Army troops within 100 miles of the United States. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. The Biden administration has stated that China is the most important geopolitical challenge to the United States. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi Jinping, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against People's Republic of China (PRC) efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Gabonese ties.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration has stated that China remains the United States' biggest geopolitical challenge. Secretary Blinken has said the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. Moreover, according to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system."

If confirmed, I will work with the Embassy team to counter China's influence, including by highlighting to the Government the threat China poses to Gabon. We have already seen that Chinese entities engage in illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing and in illegal logging in Gabon despite the Gabonese Government's commitment to protect the country's environment. If confirmed, I will also advocate for: the improvement of the business climate to attract U.S. companies to Gabon; U.S. firms over Chinese companies; and Gabon's support for the U.S. position on issues before the U.N.

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party that would constructively work with the United States in good faith? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the People's Republic of China (PRC), the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges—such as global health and the environment—when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in Gabon and the Gulf of Guinea region.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the countries in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Gabon and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the People's Republic of China (PRC) is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partnerships in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address China's efforts to expand its influence in Gabon and the Central Africa region. I would consult closely with the Department of State on any other aspect of engagement with China, namely the need to address transnational challenges, such as the environment and global health.

Question. U.S. aid and relations are limited with Gabon. While oil-rich, Gabon is sparsely populated and has a history of authoritarian rule with limited political rights and civil liberties. Gabon enjoys a close relationship with its former colonial power, France, in the oil sector and hosts French military bases. China is the largest importer of Gabonese products, with petroleum and critical minerals being the top export products. China has also funded several road and bridge infrastructure projects in Gabon. While the State Department lists the relations between the U.S. and Gabon as excellent, trade has plummeted in the past decade and in 2019 Gabonese officials cut off high-level contacts with the U.S. at the Embassy. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between the U.S. and Gabon?

Answer. The United States and Gabon have had a strong relationship for over sixty years characterized by our enduring commitment to trade, investment, security, and environmental protection.

The United States and Gabon share the priority of combatting climate change and conserving the natural environment. The United States continues to support Gabon's efforts to end wildlife and timber trafficking, preserve and manage the Congo Basin rainforest, and access global finance that supports carbon sequestration and emissions reductions in Gabon's forests. If confirmed, I will continue to support these efforts, in addition to continuing to seek ways to increase security cooperation in areas such as maritime security, institution building, and exchange programs.

If confirmed, I will work to advance several agreements that we hope to sign with Gabon that will anchor our bilateral cooperation. These include a Defense Cooperation Agreement, a USAID Bilateral Framework Agreement, and cooperation agreements with the U.S. Forest Service and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. I will also advance the Initiative for Atlantic Cooperation with the Gabonese Government. Gabon has welcomed the initiative and has pledged to engage in it as it develops.

Question. If confirmed, how will you seek to bolster trade between Gabon and the U.S.?

Answer. Gabon's economy relies on oil and gas exports. Besides being a major oil exporter, Gabon is also one of the world's leaders in exporting manganese and is the largest exporter of manganese to the United States. Gabon also has significant timber resources and is seeking to add value and create jobs with exports in this sector.

While the Government recognizes that it must diversify its economy, it is trying to increase the extraction of oil and ore to finance its economic recovery. Despite the economic turmoil of the COVID-19 pandemic, Gabon remains the third highest GDP-per-capita in Africa, and there are opportunities to expand our trade relationship beyond the U.S. energy firms who produce and explore offshore oil and gas products or provide services, which I will support if confirmed. If confirmed, I will build on the visit by the U.S. Special Representative for Commercial and Business Affairs, Dilawar Syed, who visited Gabon in March 2023. This trip highlighted how interested Gabon is in creating stronger commercial ties with the United States, especially U.S. investment in Gabon. The engagement opened several avenues for Embassy Libreville and the Gabonese Government to forge stronger commercial ties going forward.

In November 2022, Gabon released its first-ever national African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) strategy, which may signal Gabon is serious about expanding trade through AGOA with the United States. If confirmed, I will capitalize on the momentum and work with the Gabonese Government, the business sector, and the U.S. interagency to support Gabon's efforts to increase its exports to the United States through AGOA. More broadly, if confirmed, I will also encourage the Government of Gabon to take tangible steps to improve the business climate especially as in the 2020 Ease of Doing Business Index (the most recent), Gabon ranked 169th out of 190 countries.

Question. Are there any specific DFC opportunities you would work on with Gabonese officials if confirmed?

Answer. I understand DFC is working to build a pipeline of projects in Gabon. If confirmed, I would look forward to helping grow DFC's investments by working with the Gabonese Government and the private sector to advance these investments, I would also work to with the Government, the business sector, and other key actors such as international financial institutions to improve the country's overall business climate.

Question. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between China and Gabon?

Answer. The People's Republic of China (PRC) provides Gabon with significant political support and direct assistance. Gabon and the PRC have a long history, with Gabon having established diplomatic relations with the PRC in 1974. Gabon has supported the PRC in international fora, including in the UNSC. The PRC is now Gabon's largest trading partner. In 2022, Gabon exported close to $4 billion worth of commodities to the PRC, accounting for over half of its total exports.

The PRC is aggressively courting Gabon. President Bongo visited the PRC this past April, during which he and President Xi upgraded their relationship to a Comprehensive Strategic Cooperative Partnership and signed cooperation agreements in the sectors of agriculture, investment, housing and urban construction, and climate change. This was Bongo's fifth visit since he took office in 2009.

The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will continue to highlight to my Gabonese Government counterparts the benefits of partnering with the United States as demonstrated by our support of Gabon's efforts to protect its biodiversity and advance its conservation efforts, further professionalize its security forces, and strengthen its maritime security posture.

Question. Some of Gabon's neighbors are confronting violent extremism and other threats. What security threats, if any, does Gabon face?

Answer. Gabon has recognized the regional threat that piracy in the Gulf of Guinea poses to all the nations along Africa's Atlantic coast through their willingness to partner with us on the Initiative for Atlantic Cooperation.

External threats to Gabon include wildlife and timber trafficking, and illegal, unreported, and unregulated (IUU) fishing. U.S. efforts have focused on building capacities primarily through the U.S. Forest Service, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, USAID, and the Department of Defense to counter these threats. Gabon has been a mostly willing and able long-time partner in this area and is strongly interested in continued U.S. assistance and partnership. If confirmed, I will continue to support and work to further develop Gabon's capabilities as part of the effort to counter malign actors in the region.

Question. If confirmed, will you promote an LGBT agenda in Gabon, whose population is overwhelmingly religious?

Answer. Promoting respect for the human rights of LGBTQI+ persons is a U.S. foreign policy priority. Democracies are stronger when they celebrate the human rights and value of all persons, without discrimination. In January 2023, in Geneva, Switzerland, the U.N. Human Rights Council Universal Periodic Review (UPR) working group reviewed the human rights record of Gabon. During the review, the United States commended Gabon for the decriminalization of same-sex relations between consenting adults, while the Gabonese representative claimed that its "culture of tolerance" would never encourage discrimination and that this tolerance resulted in Gabon's recent decriminalization of same-sex relations.

As elsewhere, religious communities in Gabon have long been our partners in advancing human dignity for all. If confirmed, I will actively reach out to the Gabonese Government, multilateral institutions, the business community, and civil society, including religious communities, faith-based organizations, and people of all beliefs, to ensure that our messaging and programming advances respect for the human rights of the people of Gabon—including LGBTQI+ individuals—as well as other individuals within the country's borders. It is important that our efforts are informed by the community's priorities.

Question. Should an LGBT agenda come before national security or American prosperity in diplomacy?

Answer. Advancing respect for human rights undergirds our national security and economic prosperity. Democracies are more peaceful, more stable, and more prosperous than their authoritarian counterparts. The strongest democracies are those that protect the human rights of all individuals, regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, or sex characteristics. Promoting respect for the rights of every individual—including LGBTQI+ persons—is a key element of U.S. foreign policy as well as promoting American security and prosperity.

SUBMITTED TO HON. LISA PETERSON BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Bilateral Relations

Question. In your view, what are the top three priorities for the U.S. bilateral relationship with Burundi that you will advance or maintain as U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Burundi's reengagement with the international community, including regional bodies; promote political pluralism, good governance and respect for human rights and the rule of law; and support continued political and economic progress to reduce the likelihood that Burundi will again become a source of regional instability and generate refugee outflows.

The Biden Administration has taken a number of steps to build the U.S.-Burundi relationship under President Ndayishimiye, including allowing the Burundi Sanctions Program to expire, and the re-start of some security assistance.

Question. What is your assessment of the U.S.-Burundi relationship?

Answer. The U.S.-Burundi bilateral relationship has improved greatly since President Evariste Ndayishimiye assumed office in June 2020 and began to implement reforms across multiple sectors and reengage with its neighbors, the international community, and financial institutions. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts to support the people of Burundi in their goals of long-term stability, prosperity, economic growth, and the expansion of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. I will relentlessly highlight the benefits of partnering with the United States to my government counterparts.

Question. Has sufficient progress been made by President Ndayishimiye and the ruling CNDD-FDD in implementing reforms to warrant the overtures made?

Answer. Since President Ndayishimiye assumed office in June 2020, he has implemented reforms across multiple sectors and reengaged with the international community and international financial institutions. The decision to terminate the national emergency reflected the fact that political conditions in Burundi had changed since 2015. The termination did not mean that human rights were no longer a concern in Burundi. The Department of State has continued to watch this space carefully and subsequently designated a formerly sanctioned official for his involvement in a gross violation of human rights.

The decision to restart limited security assistance for Burundian troops in Somalia was made in consultation with Congressional staff and reflects the understanding that Burundian troops serving in ATMIS will be more effective with resumed but limited support.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

You note in your response that “the Department of State has subsequently designated a formerly sanctioned official for his involvement in a gross violation of human rights.” This individual is former minister of public security (2015–2020) and prime minister (June 2020–September 2022) Alain Guillaume Bunyoni. He was designated under Section 7031(c), which was announced on December 9, 2022. Bunyoni was arrested on April 21, 2023 and remains in detention.

Question. Do you think the use of travel sanctions, particularly against someone in detention, are a sufficiently useful accountability mechanism?

Answer. Visa restrictions under Section 7031(c) promote accountability and send a clear message of support for the victims of gross violations of human rights. While Bunyoni may not be able to travel now, his designation under Section 7031(c) is a lifetime designation with no possibility for delisting and includes the lifetime designation of his immediate family members, including his wife Hyacinthe Niyonkuru. Bunyoni’s designation sends an important message about our support for accountability for human rights violations and abuses in Burundi.

Question. Does the Administration’s posture toward Burundi align with President Biden’s commitment that “human rights will be the center of our foreign policy”?

Answer. The United States encourages the Government of Burundi (GOB) to continue progress and deepen reforms, especially in the area of human rights. While we welcome and commend the Government for the liberalization measures made to date, true democratic reforms must embrace inclusive political processes and respect for human rights of all individuals.

Messaging and engagements by senior U.S. officials in Bujumbura and Washington, interventions and support for resolutions at the U.N. Human Rights Council, and most recently, the publication of the 2022 Human Rights Report demonstrate our concerns about reported human rights violations and abuses. If confirmed, I will continue to press the Government of Burundi to ensure accountability for human rights violations and abuses and respect for human rights, even as we engage in other areas to advance government reforms.

Question. In your view, how can the United States better support the democratic aspirations of the people of Burundi?

Answer. The U.S. Government supports political pluralism as a critical pillar for any diverse, vibrant democracy. If confirmed, I will share with government contacts the U.S. perspective that inclusion of diverse political views is essential to the stability of the country. I will encourage Burundian-led efforts toward political pluralism, and I will meet with the full spectrum of political actors.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. To confirm, the way you feel that the U.S. can better support the democratic aspirations of the people of Burundi is by sharing the U.S. perspective on inclusion of diverse political views. In your meetings with government contacts? Is this sufficient? Are there any other ways the U.S. can better support the democratic aspirations of the people of Burundi?

Answer. Sharing the U.S. perspective on best practices and standards for thriving, functioning democracies—including political plurality—is one of several ways we can support the democratic aspirations of Burundians. If confirmed, I will use our full toolkit—including diplomatic engagement and foreign assistance—to encourage our Burundian counterparts to move towards an inclusive, diverse democracy with open civic and public space.

Africa Leaders Summit

Question. What is your understanding of the deliverables from the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit (ALS) broadly targeting the African continent?

Answer. The U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit demonstrated our renewed commitment to partnerships between the United States and African countries, institutions, and people. We remain focused on what we will do with African nations and people, not for African nations and people as we deepen and expand our partnerships, amplify African voices, and support the empowerment of Africans.

At the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit, leaders shared their commitment to championing democracy, good governance, and respect for human rights; advancing trade and investment; progressing climate innovation; improving health and food security; strengthening peace and security; and supporting the African diaspora. We are proud of the private sector commitments made as well as the Administration's continuation of high-level engagements with countries on the continent. Further, the President's Advisory Council on African Diaspora Engagement in the United States (PAC-ADE) was established on June 9th and will advise the President on strengthening relationships between the United States, African communities, and the African Diaspora.

Question. What is your understanding of specific deliverables from ALS to Burundi?

Answer. The programs and projects outlined during ALS differ from country to country—whether it is for public health, democracy and governance, infrastructure development, education, security assistance, or the environment. The $55 billion commitment announced at the Summit includes funding for new programming, including the President's Advisory Council on African Diaspora Engagement, the U.S.-AU Joint Partnership on Food Security, Digital Transformation with Africa (DTA), the African Democratic and Political Transitions (ADAPT) initiative, and the 21st Century Partnership for African Security (21PAS). It also includes plans for new investments in existing programs such as Prosper and Power Africa, Feed the Future, the U.S. President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), and the Adaptation Fund.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. Please describe your understanding of specific ALS deliverables to Burundi. If there weren't any, please confirm that is the case.

Answer. Many of the announcements at the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit relate to programming that already has a proven track record. The $55 billion commitment from ALS includes funding to continue programs in north and sub-Saharan Africa, including Burundi, such as agriculture, nutrition, HIV/AIDS, malaria, maternal and child health, pandemic influenza and other emerging threats (PIOET), and rule of law and human rights programming.

Question. Has Mission Bujumbura received specific guidance from the Administration in messaging and implementing ALS deliverables?

Answer. Yes, our Embassy in Bujumbura received cable guidance on U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit implementation areas and the Digital Transformation with Africa initiative. Details on announced commitments and talking points were provided.

Question. What feedback have you received from Burundi's delegation to ALS? What is its understanding of ALS deliverables and next steps?

Answer. As the nominee, I have not met with the Government of Burundi; however, I understand the Burundian delegation was pleased with their experience at ALS. Officials noted with appreciation the U.S. commitment to expanding and deepening partnership with African countries, institutions, and peoples. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with government counterparts on implementation of the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit deliverables.

Question. How does Mission Bujumbura plan to support the implementation of ALS deliverables in Burundi?

Answer. As part of a whole-of-government effort, Mission Bujumbura is supportive of the launch of the President's Advisory Council on African Diaspora Engagement, the half a billion dollar rise in investment value of deals committed through the U.S. Africa Business Forum from $15.7 billion to $16.2 billion, the implementation of signature initiatives, including the Digital Transformation with Africa and investments under the Partnership for Global Infrastructure and Investment (PGII), and elevating African voices. Mission Bujumbura has engaged with Burundian officials on ways to move forward with the various action items associated with ALS. If confirmed, I will be a strong advocate for greater collaboration between Burundi and the U.S. Government in all these areas.

During the ALS, President Biden, African Union Chair and President of Senegal Macky Sall, and African Union Commission Chair Moussa Faki Mahamat issued a joint "Vision Statement" pledging to "deepen our collaboration to solve global problems and shape the rules of the road for technology, space, cybersecurity, trade, environmental protection, and economics."

Question. How do you conceive of Mission Bujumbura's role in implementing this vision?

Answer. Since President Ndayishimiye assumed office in 2020, Burundi has re-engaged with the international community and regional organizations; for example, Burundi has served as the chair of the East African Community for the last year and has played a role in mediating the conflict in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo. If confirmed, I will encourage government counterparts to increase collaboration on global problems and play a part in "shaping the rules of the road" in critical areas.

The Administration pledged, during the ALS, among other things, to expand U.S. support for leadership training, economic and trade integration, digital access and literacy, health system capacity, food security, climate adaptation, and security sector reform in Africa.

Question. How does Mission Bujumbura plan to support these objectives in concrete terms?

Answer. The United States addresses many of these key issues through U.S. foreign assistance to Burundi. In the past year, the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) included Burundi in the Food for Education and Food for Progress programs, which will help combat malnutrition and provide vital assistance to Burundi's coffee sector. Through programs that support the Government of Burundi's efforts to strengthen health systems, improve health outcomes, and strengthen global health security, the United States and Burundi have worked together to combat HIV/AIDS and malaria, improve maternal and child health, and reduce the high rate of chronic malnutrition. Burundi was also named as a new President's Malaria Initiative (PMI) partner country and selected as a U.S. Government Global Health Security intensive support partner country (GHS); this initiative strengthens multi-sectoral capacities at the global and national level to prevent, detect, and respond to human and animal infectious diseases. If confirmed, I will lead my team in seeking opportunities to address other key areas wherever feasible.

Question. How, and according to what benchmarks, will Post be assessed in terms of achievement of these objectives?

Answer. Many of the commitments announced at the U.S. Africa Leaders Summit relate to programming that already has a proven track record. If confirmed, I will lead Mission Bujumbura to continue advancing key themes of the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit, including supporting peace and security, generating economic growth, combating climate change, and building healthier lives. Burundi's effort to become the first francophone African country declared as achieving HIV/AIDS epidemic control is an example of a possible benchmark.

One of the new commitments the Administration announced during the ALS is to "engage with complex political transitions in Africa and demonstrate U.S. Government support to governments and civil society at critical moments."

Question. What role do you envision Mission Bujumbura playing in this African Democratic and Political Transitions (ADAPT) initiative, if any?

Answer. The new ADAPT initiative reaffirms U.S. commitment to durable democratic political transitions and will work to counter democratic backsliding in partnership with regional bodies, governments, and civil society. Pilot countries for ADAPT support are currently being finalized.

Trade and Investment

Question. How would you practice commercial diplomacy on behalf of U.S. investments in Burundi?

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet with U.S. businesses to learn about barriers to trade and investment, and work with Embassy Bujumbura's Deal Team to identify potential linkages between U.S. companies and opportunities in Burundi. I will ensure Embassy Bujumbura draws on the range of economic tools at our disposal, including Prosper Africa, Power Africa, the DFC, USTDA, the Export-Import Bank, and more. If confirmed, I will also engage government counterparts to encourage them to remove barriers to trade and investment and advocate for U.S. companies over our competitors.

Question. What is your assessment of Burundi's greatest barriers to increased two-way trade and investment with the United States?

Answer. Trade is an area with a huge potential for growth between the United States and Burundi with $12.8 million in bilateral trade in 2022. U.S. businesses seeking to invest in Burundi face significant barriers, including corruption and weak institutional capacity, lack of respect for contracts, poor infrastructure, currency instability, and a low-skilled workforce. The Government of Burundi has repeatedly indicated its interest in attracting foreign investment. If confirmed, I will advocate for increased commerce between the two nations, and I will continue to engage with government counterparts about lowering the barriers to investment, including fighting corruption and promoting good governance, which are keys to laying the groundwork for economic stability and development.

Question. What is your understanding of the tools at your disposal—including through Prosper Africa—as U.S. Ambassador to Burundi, if confirmed, to support addressing barriers to trade and investment in the enabling environment, including the need for economic and political reforms?

Answer. If confirmed, I will tap expertise within the Department of State, USAID, the Department of Commerce, and other agencies in the Prosper Africa initiative to address barriers to trade and investment in the enabling environment, including the need for economic and political reforms. If confirmed, I will engage Prosper Africa to mobilize resources and expertise from the U.S. Government's trade and investment agencies, including DFC, USTDA, Power Africa, and the Export-Import bank, to provide assistance to U.S. companies seeking to invest in Burundi.

Foreign Assistance

Question. The USAID Mission in Kigali covers Burundi. How will you approach partnership with the USAID Mission Director and other USAID colleagues covering Burundi remotely?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage strong communication between the two posts and regular visits to Burundi by the USAID Mission Director and other USAID colleagues covering Burundi in order to continue USAID's critical work improving the health status of the Burundian population and responding to urgent humanitarian needs.

Trafficking in Persons

In the State Department's 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report, Burundi remained on Tier 2. What actionable items did the Burundian Government undertake to support this? What tangible, measurable items is JTIP and the Government of Burundi using to gauge anti-trafficking capacity and progress?

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Burundi operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be fully committed to advancing progress on the Prioritized Recommendations emerging from the annual TIP Report and will support the Government of Burundi's efforts in this area. Our work will include supporting efforts to promote accountability: the Government of Burundi has made significant efforts to investigate, prosecute, and convict traffickers, and refer victims to assistance in the last few years. Investigations, prosecutions, and convictions are up 200-300 percent year-over-year every year since 2020. We commend the Government of Burundi for its intensive efforts in this area—however, there is still much more to be done.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

As was discussed in your meeting with my staff on June 20, to our knowledge, Post relies on the Government of Burundi for the statistics on the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions for TIP cases, which you note are up 200-300 percent year-over-year every year since 2020.

Question. Does the State Department have details on any of these cases to verify that they happened, that they were in fact TIP cases, that the prosecutions were not used to prosecute political or other opponents of the Government or ruling party, and that they were conducted in way that respected due process and other standards for legitimate judicial proceedings? If yes, please share this information. If no, please explain how this data can be used to support Burundi's Tier 2 TIP ranking.

Answer. U.S. diplomatic posts report on the human trafficking situation and governmental action to fight trafficking based on thorough research that includes meetings with a wide variety of government officials, local and international NGO representatives, officials of international organizations, journalists, academics, and survivors. They also utilize local media reporting. In 2021, the Government of Burundi, with technical support from an international organization and civil society organizations, implemented a centralized law enforcement database containing information from courts, magistrates, and prosecutors from all 18 provinces over the past six years. In order to inform this year's TIP report, Embassy Bujumbura worked closely with the Anti-TIP commission, the Burundian National Police, the Ministry of the Interior, and the Ministry of Justice to obtain information on law enforcement efforts to combat human trafficking. Embassy staff then worked with the International Organization for Migration (IOM) to verify the information supplied by the Government of Burundi. Burundi maintained its Tier 2 ranking due to overall increasing efforts compared with the previous reporting period.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to reporting the reality of the trafficking situation on the ground in the next year's country narrative as a part of the Trafficking in Persons report?

Answer. Yes. The Department has consistently raised with Burundian officials in both Bujumbura and Washington concerns regarding the challenges related to human trafficking, and I will not hesitate to report the situation in a comprehensive and accurate manner, reflective of the realities on the ground.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that Burundi's TIP ranking is justified with verifiable information regarding Burundi's anti-trafficking progress, to include specific information related to the prosecution and conviction on human traffickers, and that evidence to justify its TIP ranking is not limited to undetailed statistics provided by the Government of Burundi?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring Burundi's TIP ranking is reflective of the actual progress in all three areas laid out in the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act (TVPR), namely prosecutions, protection, and prevention.

Religious Freedom

In the State Department's 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Burundi was noted for generally lacking societal and governmental respect for religious freedom.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador At Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Religious freedom is a U.S. foreign policy priority. The Department continues to closely monitor respect for freedom of religion or belief in Burundi and the region. In Burundi, the constitution defines the state as secular, prohibits religious discrimination, and provides for freedom of conscience and religion. Religious leaders in Burundi have noted positive relations between the Government of Burundi and religious organizations since President Ndayishimiye took office in 2020. If confirmed, I will support the Embassy's ongoing efforts, in close coordination with the Office of International Religious Freedom and the Ambassador at Large, to engage with the Burundian Government on these issues and promote protections for freedom of religion or belief.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes, I commit to personally engaging with civil society on a wide range of human rights issues, including freedom of religion or belief. Civil society organizations play a key role in promoting respect for human rights, including freedom of expression, and advancing progress across a multitude of sectors, including good governance, economic growth, and public health. I visited Burundi in March 2022 as Acting Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor. During that visit, I was pleased to meet with civil society organizations and individuals working on human rights to discuss a range of topics. If confirmed, I will continue to engage closely with civil society, to better understand their interests and concerns, and to advance U.S. interests.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Burundi increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Embassy Bujumbura's efforts to engage the Government of Burundi on this issue. Post regularly engages with religious communities to listen to their concerns and solicit their input on how best to improve society and government respect for religious freedom. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Government, religious communities, and people of all beliefs to promote respect for freedom of religion or belief.

Human Rights

The State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report for Burundi details a bleak situation in the country, with continued unlawful or arbitrary killings, forced disappearance, torture, arbitrary arrest or detention, serious restrictions on freedom of expression and media, and restrictions on the ability of civil society and the political operation to organize and fulfill their roles.

Question. How will you bring your perspective as the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor to your role as U.S. Ambassador to Burundi, if confirmed?

Answer. The Department has consistently raised our concerns in both Bujumbura and Washington about ongoing allegations of human rights violations and abuses, the space for civil society, media freedom, and cooperation with international human rights mechanisms. We have also raised concerns over the arrest and detention of members of the LGBTQI+ community participating in economic empowerment activities and of human rights defenders and journalists. We have urged the Government of Burundi to carefully assess the validity of any charges and release any unjustly detained individuals.

I visited Burundi in March 2022 as Acting Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor. During that visit, I raised these issues directly with government interlocutors and met with civil society organizations and individuals working on good governance and human rights. State Department colleagues, including Assistant Secretary Molly Phee and Ambassador Melanie Higgins, have continued to raise these issues with Burundian officials. If confirmed, I will not hesitate to raise human rights concerns with Burundian counterparts.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage the Mission to continue the strong work they are already doing to support civil society and promote democracy, respect for human rights, and good governance. Civil society organizations play a key role in promoting respect for human rights, advancing progress, and promoting freedom of expression. I will press the Government of Burundi to provide civil society ample space to survive and thrive.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes, I commit to personally engaging on human rights issues with civil society. I visited Burundi in March 2022 as Acting Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor. During that visit, I was pleased to meet with civil society organizations and individuals working on human rights, discussing a range of topics. If confirmed, I will continue to engage closely with civil society, to better understand their interests and concerns, and to advance U.S. interests.

International Organizations

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the UN system.

Answer. The Bureau of African Affairs works closely with IO and USUN on shared priorities and on all campaigns and hiring initiatives involving qualified American candidates for the UN system. If confirmed, I will continue to elevate these efforts in multilateral fora and with our partners in the region and in my engagements with U.S. citizens.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the UN system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with USUN and IO colleagues to advance the United States' affirmative agenda for the UN and strengthen partnerships with traditional and non-traditional partners, including in specialized and technical agencies. U.S. re-engagement at the UN system is critical to reasserting U.S. leadership, including by working with our partners and allies to promote initiatives that advance shared priorities on technical matters.

According to the Conduct in U.N. Field Missions online portal, there are 12 open allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse by the country's peacekeepers deployed to UN peacekeeping missions, in cases beginning in 2015.

Question. How will you engage with the Burundian Government to ensure that perpetrators of sexual exploitation and abuse from UN peacekeeping missions are held accountable?

Answer. The U.S. Government has zero tolerance for sexual exploitation and abuse and sexual harassment (SEAH), including zero tolerance for inaction in response to allegations, across the international system. I understand many of the allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse against Burundian peacekeepers have been credibly investigated by the Government of Burundi, African Union, and/or the UN. If confirmed, I will continue to engage the Burundian Government to credibly investigate all allegations and bring the cases to conclusion with appropriate action.

State Management and Oversight

Question. How do you intend to work with senior leadership at the State Department to address acute staffing challenges at Mission Bujumbura?

Answer. The Department is deeply committed to resolving the challenge of filling positions in historically difficult to staff posts, of which those in Africa comprise more than half. Insufficient infrastructure, inadequate schools, health care challenges, and the remote nature of many postings in Africa are inherent impediments to getting our posts to full staffing. I believe the Department is working to address these challenges, and if confirmed, I commit to maintaining a focus on finding specific solutions for Mission Bujumbura. I am happy to report that, presently, State Department positions at the mission are fully staffed.

Question. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Bujumbura?

Answer. Morale was undeniably low in the wake of the 2015 civil unrest and post's two successive evacuations. Since 2021, however, there has been a marked improvement in morale as relations warmed and families were allowed back to post for the first time in six years. Post was finally able to fill staffing gaps and have a full complement of U.S. direct hire employees just this year, which has drastically improved morale. My understanding, talking to Ambassador Higgins and the team at Embassy Bujumbura, is that morale right now is actually very good. If confirmed, I will work hard to keep it that way.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Bujumbura?

Answer. Much of post's prior morale problems came from numerous long-term staffing gaps. By working to attract top talent to Mission Bujumbura, ensuring all positions are filled, and continuing to improve the infrastructure for families at post, I hope to maintain high morale and even improve it.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Bujumbura?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use everything from regular staff meetings and strategic planning processes to off-site sessions to ensure that the Mission is moving forward on its goals in a cohesive and integrated manner.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of Mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I believe firmly in collaboration. I also believe in providing people the space they need to get a job done in the manner that works best for them, with regular check-ins to assess progress or provide guidance. I try to create a safe space for committing errors, as I see these as opportunities to learn. I try not to insert myself into a process unless needed, but I am prepared to make the definitive call on an issue if it cannot be resolved at other levels.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or in private?

Answer. I believe it is never acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates in any setting.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with the Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. My relationship with the Deputy Chief of Mission will be the most important in the Mission. If confirmed, I anticipate daily scheduled check-ins as well as informal consultations as the need arises. I will be counting on the DCM to bring me dissenting opinions, either their own or on behalf of others in the Mission, to ensure that we are considering all possible approaches to a situation.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend for the Deputy Chief of Mission to fill the role of chief operations officer while also keeping abreast of policy priorities. I would expect the DCM to play a critical role in helping me ensure cohesion across offices and agencies in the Mission. I will rely on the DCM to play a leadership role in emergency preparedness in the Mission.

In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking.

Question. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeed in their roles?

Answer. I believe accurate, constructive feedback is important both in regular contact and in the formal evaluation process.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes.

It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and local citizens.

Question. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our Embassy walls enough to fully accomplish their missions?

Answer. In my experience, U.S. diplomats do get out of the Embassy to build the contacts and connections, as well as understand local context, in order to fully accomplish their missions, although local security conditions or specific portfolio requirements (such as visa work) may limit the amount of work officers can conduct outside the Embassy.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. Connecting with local populations is key to the success of overall U.S. engagement. In the time following the 2015–2016 turmoil, security conditions in Burundi had a negative impact on the ability of Mission personnel to access a wide array of local communities. However, improvements in the security situation since 2021 have allowed for greater freedom of movement for diplomatic personnel in Burundi. If confirmed, I will work with the Regional Security Office to continuously assess security conditions, with an eye to further opening areas for Mission travel. I will also encourage all personnel to tap into public diplomacy or other activities that provide the opportunity to engage with populations outside the capital.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. LISA PETERSON BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People’s Republic of China is the “only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it.” The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People’s Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Just this week, reporting indicates that the Chinese are planning a training facility that could put People's Liberation Army troops within 100 miles of the United States. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that “the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Burundi ties.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.”

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party that would constructively work with the United States in good faith? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in the Great Lakes region.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the countries in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Burundi and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address China's efforts to expand its influence in Burundi and the region.

Question. Burundi is one of the poorest countries on the planet and U.S. relations with Burundi have traditionally involved issues regarding political instability, ethnic violence, and human rights abuses. Burundi has garnered new U.S. interest given its strategic value in competition with China and its improved regional relations with Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). What is your characterization of the existing relationship between the U.S. and Burundi?

Answer. The U.S.-Burundi bilateral relationship has improved greatly since President Evariste Ndayishimiye assumed office in June 2020 and began to implement reforms across multiple sectors and reengage with its neighbors, the international community, and financial institutions. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts to support the people of Burundi in their goals of long-term stability, prosperity, economic growth, and the expansion of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. I will relentlessly highlight the benefits of partnering with the United States to my government counterparts.

Question. If confirmed, how will you seek to bolster trade between Burundi and the U.S.?

Answer. Trade is an area with a huge potential for growth between the United States and Burundi with $12.8 million in bilateral trade in 2022. If confirmed, I will advocate for increased commerce between the two nations. The United States primarily exports agricultural products such as rice and flour to Burundi and Burundi exports specialty coffee and metal ores to the United States. The United States is supporting Burundi's coffee sector through a USDA Food for Progress grant, to be implemented over the next five years, which will increase productivity and boost Burundi's coffee exports.

Question. Are there any specific DFC opportunities you would work on with Burundi officials if confirmed?

Answer. Embassy Bujumbura hosted DFC visitors on four separate occasions in the last year. If confirmed, I plan to continue to advocate for DFC opportunities in Burundi, particularly in the sectors of clean energy and entrepreneurship that demonstrate strong corporate social responsibility (CSR), and support for women's empowerment.

Question. Burundi has been identified to contain significant amounts of rare earth critical minerals, but suspended rare earth mining projects with Western companies, including a Florida sub-contractor, over a revenue sharing dispute. Are you aware of this dispute and the companies involved?

Answer. Yes, I am aware of the dispute between the Government of Burundi and Rainbow Rare Earths/Rainbow Mining Burundi.

Question. If so, how will you assist these companies and Burundi to come to an amicable resolution?

Answer. Ambassador Higgins and other Embassy Bujumbura officials have engaged with the Government of Burundi repeatedly over the last few years to encourage them to resolve the mining sector dispute and resume operations. State Department officials have also met with Rainbow Rare Earths executives in Bujumbura and Washington. If confirmed, I will continue to engage the Government of Burundi to eliminate barriers to trade and investment and resolve existing conflicts.

Question. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between China and Burundi?

Answer. The People's Republic of China provides Burundi with significant political support and direct assistance, which was particularly impactful during U.S. and EU sanctions from 2016 - 2021. In turn, Burundi has supported the PRC in international fora, including the United Nations. Although PRC officials state they see limited opportunities for commercial ventures and have noted the difficulties of working in Burundi, economic and political ties are increasing, and PRC companies have completed a number of needed roadworks projects. If confirmed, I will highlight the benefits of partnering with the United States to my government counterparts.

Question. Given China is Burundi's top importer and the CCP has financed a number of projects, including infrastructure, do you believe the CCP controlled entities could supplant Western mining companies for critical minerals in Burundi? If so, how will you prevent that from occurring?

Answer. In May, Burundi's Council of Ministers approved a draft bill revising the mining code, which could soon lead to reopening of the mining sector to private companies after nearly two years. However, the revised code contains provisions that appear difficult or impossible to meet, and it is unclear whether foreign companies, especially U.S. companies, will be interested in pursuing mining opportunities in Burundi going forward. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage the Government of Burundi to adopt a mining code that, in addition to attracting international investors, formalizes artisanal mining, invests in energy infrastructure, and implements good governance and anticorruption measures.

Question. If confirmed, will you promote an LGBT agenda upon Burundi, whose population is overwhelmingly religious?

Answer. The policy of the Biden Administration is to promote respect for the human rights of all individuals, including those of LGBTQI+ persons. Religious communities have long been our partners in advancing human dignity for all. We will work closely with local religious and traditional leaders, community partners, and the LGBTQI+ community to ensure that our messaging and programming advances respect for the human rights of LGBTQI+ persons and is informed by the community's priorities. When the human rights of all persons are respected and protected, everyone is freer.

Question. Should an LGBT agenda come before national security or American prosperity in diplomacy?

Answer. Advancing human rights undergirds our national security and economic prosperity. Democracies are more peaceful, more stable, and more prosperous than their authoritarian counterparts, and the strongest democracies are those that protect the human rights of all their citizens. Promoting respect for the rights of every individual—including LGBTQI+ persons—is critical to promoting American security and prosperity.

RESOLUTION

The Delaware Commission on Italian Heritage and Culture expresses its full and enthusiastic support for President Joseph R. Biden, Jr.'s nomination of former Delaware Governor Jack A. Markell as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Italy.

During his tenure as Governor of Delaware, Gov. Markell enjoyed an outstanding relationship with our state's Italian-American community. His support for our community was exhibited through:

- Regular attendance at major Italian events such as the Vendemmia sponsored by the DaVinci Society and the St. Anthony's Italian Festival; and
- The Markell Administration's support for the Delaware Commission on Italian Heritage and Culture, demonstrated further through –
 - Funding for the Italian Summer Language Camp that is co-sponsored with the Red Clay Consolidated School District and the Delaware Italian-American Education Association;
 - The Italian Cinema series;
 - Scholarships for students engaged in Italian studies at the University of Delaware; and
 - Study-abroad trips to Italy by three separate groups of culinary arts students at the Delcastle High School (New Castle Vocational-Technical School District).

Gov. Markell's time in public office in the State of Delaware, both as Governor and State Treasurer, was characterized by his demonstrated respect for people of other cultures. His tenure as U.S. Ambassador to the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development has deepened this understanding of and respect for cultures around the world.

Through travel to Italy in both official and personal capacities, Gov. Markell has developed the requisite understanding of Italian culture as well as the strong ties, both economically and diplomatically, that exist between Italy and the United States.

NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, JULY 26, 2023

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:36 p.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Tammy Duckworth presiding.

Present: Senators Duckworth [presiding], Menendez, Shaheen, Kaine, Van Hollen, and Hagerty.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. TAMMY DUCKWORTH, U.S. SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

Senator DUCKWORTH. Good afternoon, everyone. The nominations hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

I want to offer my congratulations to each of you on your nominations and express my appreciation for your willingness to serve.

In the interest of time and getting to hearing from each of you and beginning questions quickly I am going to forego an opening statement today.

Senator Hagerty, would you like to make an opening statement before introductions or should we proceed?

Senator HAGERTY. I would make an opening statement, if I might.

Senator DUCKWORTH. You are recognized.

STATEMENT OF HON. BILL HAGERTY, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

Senator HAGERTY. Likewise, I would like to congratulate the nominees. Thank you for being here today. It is an exceptional honor to be in the position that you are in, and for those of you that are going to be confirmed I think you have a unique opportunity ahead of you to serve the most exceptional nation in the world. So I know you will take that to heart.

I would like to start with the nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs. It is going to be a critical role here that you have got in terms of helping the administration navigate the Ukraine crisis.

Russia's invasion of Ukraine spurred the largest conflict in Europe since World War II and it continues to pose an enormous strategic challenge for the United States. Yet, many Americans are weary of our administration's less than clear strategy in Ukraine.

They are concerned about the growing cost of U.S. involvement and they want to see all European nations—not just Britain, not just those that are more proximate to Ukraine—share the burdens of the alliance.

The Biden administration needs to provide the American people a clear, realistic plan for victory in Ukraine—we have asked for it from this committee before—a plan that offers not only lasting solutions to the long-term security problems that we have in the region but also one that protects Americans' interest.

I would like to turn to the nominee to be Ambassador to Croatia. The United States has played a key role in fostering Croatia's growth as a democratic, secure, and market-oriented society. We recognize Croatia is a dependable partner within the Euro-Atlantic institutions and we greatly appreciate its constructive and stabilizing influence in the region.

As a NATO ally since 2009, Croatia has partnered with the United States in operations in Afghanistan, Kosovo, Libya, and elsewhere. Croatia has also played a critical role in energy security through its LNG import terminal, which has helped to minimize Europe's dependence on Russian oil, the dependence that has fueled Russia's war machine.

Next, I would like to turn to the nominee to be the Ambassador to Haiti. Haiti is facing a seemingly intractable political and security crisis. The humanitarian catastrophe there has fueled massive migration from the country.

The Biden administration will have to continue working closely with the international community to support Haitian efforts to restore security, the rule of law, and economic and social stability.

And then last but certainly not least, I would like to focus on the nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Guatemala. From its recognition of Taiwan, its solidarity with Ukraine, its opposition to the Maduro regime in Venezuela, and its close ties to Israel to its cooperation on trade, migration, and security, Guatemala has long been a critical U.S. ally in Latin America and more specifically in the critical Northern Triangle region.

I traveled to Guatemala on my first official trip as a United States Senator and I had the pleasure of meeting Guatemalan President Giammattei. He is a great friend of the United States. President Giammattei noted how waves of illegal migration pose demographic, economic, and social problems within his country. His own nation's sovereignty is under siege.

He told me that thanks to the flood of humanity responding to the open border migration here in the United States he has lost control of his own southern border. His nation's loss of stability is furthering a brain drain. It is disrupting families and local communities and it is depriving his nation of foreign investment, modern infrastructure, and economic growth.

All of this feeds a vicious cycle that engenders yet more mass migration and creates favorable conditions for transnational drug cartels.

It allows them to exploit and traffic vulnerable migrants and smuggle deadly fentanyl and other drugs into our country. While concerns about corruption and election integrity are understandable, if you are confirmed I hope you recognize that Guatemala's critical importance for U.S. interests and work to maintain the United States' longstanding partnership with which whichever candidate wins Guatemala's August presidential runoff election will be important.

Again, to all of our nominees thank you for serving our nation and for answering the questions of the committee today. I look forward to hearing your testimony. Thank you.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you, Senator Hagerty.

Now, I know several of my colleagues wanted to share introductions of some of our panel and, as usual, we have—we all have tricky schedules, given everything that is happening in the Senate today.

Chairman Menendez, I can turn it over to you first.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Madam Chair, to you and Senator Hagerty for conducting the hearing. One of our roles as members of the committee is the responsibility to conduct nomination hearings so I very much appreciate both of your taking time from your incredible schedules to do this.

I want to congratulate all of the nominees and their families and thank you for your willingness to serve our country. I mention the families as well because this is a family affair. The reality is that when you are called to serve abroad, your family has sacrifices as well. So, I want to acknowledge them.

I want to take a moment to say that it is my distinct pleasure to introduce Nathalie Rayes, the nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia. Today, with dictators and autocrats working to undermine peace and freedom around the world, our nation needs to fill our diplomatic posts with leaders who are committed to protecting democracy and human rights.

I believe that Nathalie Rayes' dedication to the defense of these basic universal principles is what the United States needs from our next Ambassador in Zagreb. Nathalie was born in a small town in Venezuela and came to the United States when she was just nine years old.

She did not speak a word of English but her mother, like my own mother, made tremendous sacrifices so that her daughter could get an education and thrive here in America, and with her support Nathalie not only went on to UCLA where she got her bachelor's and master's degree, she built an impressive and distinguished career as a leader, as a consensus builder, and an advocate.

As the president and CEO of Latino Victory, President Biden's appointee to the board of the United States Institute of Peace, she has been an influential voice fighting to make the world a better place.

She is no stranger to public service. She has served as deputy chief of staff of the mayor of Los Angeles where she managed the office of intergovernmental relations, international trade and protocol.

She established L.A.'s first office of immigrant affairs. She formed sister cities with San Salvador, Beirut, and Ischia in Italy, and she served as President Obama's appointee on the board of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

Her experience, her record of leadership, and her strong people-to-people skills makes her the right candidate for this post.

If confirmed, we can rest assured that Nathalie will stand up for her values and be a tireless advocate for democracy and human rights. So it is my pleasure to support the nomination of my good friend, Nathalie Rayes, as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia. I do not always come to the committee to introduce people but in this case it is compelling to do so.

Before I close I would like to note, Madam Chair, that I have received multiple letters in support of Ms. Rayes' nomination including from former Congressman Lincoln Diaz-Balart, the chairman of the Congressional Hispanic Leadership Institute, the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Aspen Institute, Latinos in Society Program, among others. I asked unanimous consent these letters be included in the record.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Without objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Padilla, I will turn it over to you next.

STATEMENT OF HON. ALEX PADILLA, U.S. SENATOR FROM CALIFORNIA

Senator PADILLA. Thank you Madam Chair, Chairman Menendez, and Ranking Member Risch.

Today, I am also proud to introduce my friend, Nathalie Rayes, as President Biden's nominee to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia.

As you heard from Chairman Menendez—I will try not to be too repetitive—but I do think it is important to underscore and emphasize she is the proud daughter of Venezuelan and Lebanese parents as an immigrant herself.

Ms. Rayes' career has been defined by an unwavering commitment to public service, a drive to diversify the highest levels of leadership in our nation, and a fundamental understanding of the hope and stability America's leadership brings to the world stage.

But before it all Ms. Rayes started off as a student in Los Angeles where she earned her bachelor's degree in sociology and a master's degree in public policy with concentrations in international relations and education at UCLA.

Nathalie and I first crossed paths when I served on the Los Angeles City Council and she served as deputy chief of staff for then Los Angeles Mayor James Hahn. There she managed the office of intergovernmental relations, international trade and protocol, and established, as you just heard, Los Angeles' first ever Office of Immigrant Affairs.

Ms. Rayes went on to serve as vice president of public affairs for Grupo Salinas in the United States and as executive director of Fundacion Azteca America. She currently serves as the president and CEO of the Latino Victory Fund where she works to increase Latino representation at every level of government.

Last year the Senate confirmed Ms. Rayes to serve as President Biden's appointee to the board of the United States Institute of Peace. At a time with increased conflict around the world we can assure you somebody who represents, embodies, and advances peace through diplomacy.

In an effort to increase Latina representation in the field of international relations Ms. Rayes founded and now chairs the Hope Binational Advisory Group and created the binational fellowship to train 20 Latinas here in the United States and Mexico.

She has not only brought more opportunities to diverse communities but she has also simultaneously strengthened our foreign policy workforce by bringing new ideas and new perspectives to challenge conventional thought and America today is stronger for her service.

Colleagues, since President Biden first took office so much of the Senate's work to advise and consent to the President's nominees have seen the fundamental shift as we are finally confirming nominees who better reflect the diversity of the country they serve and represent.

But that diversity of backgrounds and of thought should not end with judicial nominees or cabinet officials. It must extend to those representing our nation on the world stage because how we present ourselves to the world and who we entrust with our nation's image and diplomatic duties abroad matters.

I have seen Ms. Rayes' leadership up close from her time with the city of Los Angeles to her work nationally for a more inclusive democracy. She has the intellect, the expertise, and the commitment to do the job, not to mention the fundamental understanding of America's potential that will serve us well as U.S. Ambassador to Croatia.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting her swift confirmation and I thank you.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you, Senator Padilla.

I would also like to briefly introduce the other nominees on the panel today.

Ambassador Dennis Hankins has been nominated to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Haiti. Ambassador Hankins is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service and currently serves as the foreign policy adviser to the National Guard Bureau at the Pentagon.

He has previously served as Ambassador to Guinea and to Mali and he has had a lengthy career in public service at the State Department and has included postings in Brazil, Sudan, Saudi Arabia, Thailand, and Haiti, to name just a few.

Welcome, Ambassador Hankins, and we look forward to your testimony once all of the other introductions are complete.

Next, let me introduce James O'Brien. Mr. O'Brien has been nominated to be Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs. He is currently serving as the head of Office of Sanctions Coordination at the State Department and he has previously served as the Special Presidential Envoy for Hostage Affairs and as Special Presidential Envoy for the Balkans, among many other roles across both public and private sectors.

Mr. O'Brien, welcome, and we look forward to your testimony very shortly.

Finally, I am pleased to introduce Tobin John Bradley, who has been nominated to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Guatemala. Mr. Bradley is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service and currently serves as deputy assistant secretary of state in the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs.

His time in public service has also taken him to posts in Mexico, England, Jordan, and Iraq, in roles supporting our embassies and consulates as well as with the NSC and our mission to NATO. Welcome, Mr. Bradley.

I will now turn it over to each of you to share your testimonies, beginning with Ambassador Hankins.

STATEMENT OF HON. DENNIS B. HANKINS, OF MINNESOTA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI

Mr. HANKINS. Thank you very much.

Madam Chairman, ranking member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am deeply honored to appear before you today and grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me as their nominee for Ambassador to the Republic of Haiti.

I want to thank my wife, Mira, and my son, Navy Lieutenant Commander Danu Hankins, for their encouragement, sacrifice, and support throughout the years.

As diplomacy is inherently about relationships, my wife of more than 40 years has always been my better three-quarters and the reason for whatever success I have had as a diplomat.

I am particularly honored that today's chairwoman and ranking member have separate titles of former public service near and dear to my heart, that of lieutenant colonel in the Army National Guard and of Ambassador to Japan.

It has been an honor to serve in challenging assignments around the world for these last 39 years. Many of these assignments have been in countries in crisis including Haiti. These posts have offered me the opportunity to make real impact on lives.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other members of Congress to advance U.S. American interests in Haiti. If confirmed, I would draw upon my existing and new relationships with key U.S., international, and Haitian interlocutors to deepen the bilateral ties, protect my American and Haitian colleagues who work tirelessly at the U.S. mission in Haiti, to continue our work combating insecurity and lawlessness, restoring stability, fostering inclusive democratic governance, bolstering economic growth, and meeting basic humanitarian needs.

Of course, an Ambassador has no higher responsibility than the safety and security of American citizens abroad and that will always be my top priority.

Haiti faces multiple and competing crises, all of which are exacerbated by gang-led activities in and around Port-au-Prince and other parts of the country. Gang activity has seriously severely impacted the economy and security of the entire country.

Gangs also hamper the Haitian Government's limited ability to provide public services and the ability of international partners to distribute humanitarian assistance.

If confirmed, I am committed to supporting the Haitian National Police, the HNP, and its efforts to combat gang influence, maintain basic security, and institute community-based prevention efforts.

I want to ensure that HNP members receive extensive and practical human rights training to minimize the risk of abuses. In addition to meeting immediate security needs I will work to address the underlying drivers of violence and instability in Haiti through the U.S. strategy to prevent conflict and promote stability.

This 10-year plan will improve coordination between U.S., Haitian, and external partners to build inclusive and sustainable foundations for long-term security, stability, and democratic governance.

In October 2022 Haitian Prime Minister Ariel Henry requested an international force after gangs blocked access to Haiti's port and main fuel terminal, paralyzing the country, including the cholera response.

The United States and our international partners support this request. What other—whatever forms such a force takes it can give Haitians the space they need to address the many challenges they face. But it is incumbent on them to do so.

Organized criminal group activity continues to exacerbate humanitarian needs and displacement throughout Haiti. Approximately 4.9 million people, nearly half the country's population, will likely require emergency food assistance over the summer. If confirmed, I will work to address with national and international partners the urgent needs of the most vulnerable Haitians.

While we fund humanitarian and security efforts to save lives our collective attention must focus on emerging Haitian solutions to Haiti's political crisis.

Since January there have been no elected officials in Haiti with a current mandate. We have seen important steps to enlarge political consensus since then but there is much to be done to help return the country to democratic order.

Neighboring countries through CARICOM are also deeply engaged in promoting a return to uncontested political legitimacy. If confirmed, I will urge all political parties, indeed, all players in Haitian society to come forward, compromise, and create the conditions for a transparent and inclusive electoral process where all parties can compete for Haitian votes.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Hankins follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. DENNIS B. HANKINS

Madam Chairwoman, ranking member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am deeply honored to appear before you today, and grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have placed in me as their nominee for Ambassador to the Republic of Haiti. I want to thank my wife Mira, and my son, Navy Lieutenant Commander Danu Hankins, for their encouragement, sacrifice, and support throughout the years. I am particularly honored that today's Chairwoman and ranking member hold separate titles of former public service near and dear to my heart—that of Lieutenant Colonel in the Army National Guard and of Ambassador to Japan. It has been an honor to serve in challenging assignments around the world for the last thirty-nine years. Many of these assignments have been in countries in crisis—including Haiti. These posts have offered me the opportunity to make a real impact on lives. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress to advance American interests in Haiti.

Of course, an Ambassador has no higher responsibility than the safety and security of American citizens abroad and that will always be my top priority.

Haiti faces multiple and competing crises, all of which are exacerbated by gang-led activities in and around Port-au-Prince. Gangs control approximately 30 percent of the capital and are increasingly able to operate in neighborhoods previously regarded as safe. Gang activity has severely impacted the economy and security of the entire country. Gangs also hamper the Haitian Government's limited ability to deliver public services and the ability of international partner to distribute humanitarian assistance.

If confirmed, I am committed to supporting the Haitian National Police (the HNP) in its efforts to combat gang influence, maintain basic security, and institute community-based prevention efforts. I want to ensure that HNP members receive extensive and practical human rights training to minimize the risk of abuses.

In addition to meeting immediate security needs, I will work to address the underlying drivers of violence and instability in Haiti through the U.S. Strategy to Prevent Conflict and Promote Stability. While we fund humanitarian and security efforts to save lives, our collective attention must focus on emerging Haitian solutions to Haiti's political crisis. Since January, there have been no elected officials in Haiti with a current mandate. We have seen Prime Minister Henry make several significant steps towards creating a path forward for inclusive elections, by installing the High Transition Council, reconstituting the Supreme Court, and holding political roundtables with opposing political parties. Neighboring countries though CARICOM are also deeply engaged in promoting a return to uncontested political legitimacy. If confirmed, I will urge all political parties (indeed, all players in Haitian society) to come forward, compromise, and create a transparent and inclusive electoral process where all parties can compete for Haitian votes.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. Wow. You landed that on a dime to the second.

No pressure, Mr. O'Brien. Your testimony, please.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES C. O'BRIEN, OF NEBRASKA, NOMINATED TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE (EUROPEAN AND EURASIAN AFFAIRS)

Mr. O'BRIEN. Thank you, Madam Chairman, Senator Hagerty, Senator Menendez, other members of the committee. I am honored to have been nominated for this position and that you are considering me for it.

I have submitted written testimony with some extensive remarks on the region. Fundamentally, the job is to promote American security, prosperity, and values by working with, sometimes on, our strongest partners across Europe and Eurasia.

That is the global platform that makes Americans more prosperous and secure. I could do this work only with the support of my family, my wife, Mary, my children, Jamie and Sean, my father-in-law, John O'Donnell, and my sisters Meghan and Nan, and my father, James O'Brien.

I was talking to him this morning and he reminded me of a story that captures the themes in my testimony. A few years ago as my mom was succumbing to the disease that killed her she said she wanted to go see the place where her father died in World War II. He was a private in the U.S. Army in the Hurtgen Forest.

Now, this was the single event in my mom's life. She went from being as, in her words, daddy's girl living a middle class life in the Bay Area and then had to move cross country, kind of live hand to mouth in what she called a house of widows with her grandmother, mother, little sisters, and some aunts.

For the first time she wanted to go here because she knew she was nearing the end. So we drove around Belgium where her father had written extensively, and Western Germany, through as much of the Hurtgen Forest as she could manage and finally to the town that was the object of the campaign where he died.

And as we walked around she looked and she said, this place is beautiful—I had only ever seen it in the black and white photos that showed the battle damage of 1944 and 1945 and I knew it would not be that way but I could not understand how well off and beautiful it is.

And then she got very quiet and then she got mad and she asked us to drive her out of the town. And as we drove her out of town she kept saying, those people have normal lives. I did not get the life that was the normal I thought I was going to get and I just wish they knew.

And then we visited one of the U.S. military cemeteries nearby where many of the soldiers killed with my grandfather had been handled to be brought home. She broke down in tears.

She said, you know, I am so proud of what he gave because this area we drive across borders nobody stops us. It is well off. It is prosperous. People are peaceful. There is no chance of war and so I am so proud of that. I wish I could ask him if he was proud.

Now, why do I talk about this? It is not because it is a unique story but it has been on my mind a lot. Tens of millions of people can tell a similar story and those of you who served as you have,

Madam Chair, can tell much more personalized stories about the trauma of war.

But I think it captures two themes that are very important as we look to go forward. One of them is we are talking about human pain that will live on for decades. What Russia has unleashed in Ukraine is going to stay with us for generations and the same is true of people who have been surviving conflict left over from the Western Balkans in the 1990s where I was proud to serve the country, through those southern Caucasus where several of you, Chairman Menendez, have been very vocal advocates for the victims of those conflicts.

We have to remember that this is not just geopolitics. It is about humans and how they recover.

The second thing we can learn is that we know how to succeed. Senator Hagerty, you asked what is the plan—what is the way forward. I look forward to working with you on that.

But we do have models where we can integrate economies like Ukraine's into more wealthy economies and lift up the people of that region. The same is possible for the people of the southern Caucasus around the Black Sea and through the Western Balkans if we handle the next year or two properly.

We know how to go from the black and white photos of the war damage of 1945 to the beautiful little town that I took my mother to eight years ago.

Now, what do we need in order to do that? I think there are two things I would love to work with this committee on as we go forward. One is a very strong platform in the EUR Bureau. It is 12,000 people, produces almost two-thirds of the action items the secretary operates on. They need the resources and support to be great at their job because they are creative and they are wonderful.

The second thing is cooperation with the committee and I look forward to that on both sides of the aisle. Our opponents say America cannot be relied on. We will have an election and we are going to reverse course.

If we all stand together to say America stands for what works then I know we will succeed, and I look forward to working with you on that and I look forward to answering questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. O'Brien follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES C. O'BRIEN

Chair Duckworth, Ranking Member Hagerty, members of the committee, I am honored to have been nominated to be Assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs. Thank you for the opportunity to appear today.

I am here because of the support of my family—my wife Mary, our children Sean and Jamie, Mary's father John O'Donnell, and my father Jim and sisters Meghan and Nan. I grew up in Nebraska, and my family still live in Omaha. My mother, Jane, who died early in 2021, instilled a love of community and public service that has shaped my life.

The job of our diplomats is to promote American security, prosperity, and values. Today that mission addresses war in Europe and the rise of China.

First, Russia's further invasion of Ukraine touches every aspect of Europe and Eurasia. Ukraine, which continues to fight courageously and successfully, draws on a coalition led by the United States comprising dozens of countries, including most in this region. Together, we provide Ukraine with the security assistance to defend itself and the humanitarian and economic support to respond and rebuild in the face of continuing Russian attacks. We are also working together to restrict the Kremlin's access to resources necessary to wage its unjustified war and diminish Russia's future destabilizing capabilities. The coalition's strength is critical, and we must work to keep it powerful, aligned, and up to date. The number of elections across the coalition in the next 16 months means that this will require active diplomacy.

For many countries in the region the next period will be pivotal. Ukraine knows from this month's Vilnius Summit and announcements by the European Union that its future lies in the transatlantic security and economic space. Moldova, too, has never had a clearer path to its EU future. These European nations need to show their own people, and ours, that their societies will be more prosperous and free—and their democratic and economic institutions stronger—as the region emerges from this hot war. Our assistance and experience—especially that of our private sector—will be essential.

The six states of the western Balkans should be given renewed clear requirements, and incentives, to reform as they make their way toward the European Union. Georgia and countries across the Caucasus to the Caspian will have opportunities to build new relationships to Europe and global trade routes. U.S. engagement will define the choices before each country.

In short, the next year can set the template for a deeper, stronger rules-based community of freedom across this region, touching the Arctic, the Atlantic, the Adriatic, the Black Sea, and the steppes of central Asia. This is the fabric that our citizens depend on every day to keep them safe and create more economic opportunity.

One aspect of this work deserves special focus. The U.S. leads a global alliance network—rooted in Europe and NATO—that no other country can match. We must ensure that this framework is fit for purpose going forward. Next year's 75th anniversary NATO summit here in Washington will let us reinforce key elements: an iron-clad Article 5; our enduring commitment to each other to spend at least 2 percent of GDP on defense investment; a NATO with deeper links to the Indo-Pacific; and growing Alliance of 31—and, with Sweden, 32 members—with an unwavering open-door policy.

We must also work to strengthen the commitment of all countries across the region to democracy and the rule of law.

Third, I will focus on our country's prosperity. Our society is starting to see huge technological leaps in artificial intelligence, energy production, and medicine. Over the next decades, these advances can make us, especially our middle class, richer and more secure or lead to new battles over emerging technology. We should work with our closest partners to share approaches and agree on the risks posed by alternative systems. Wherever possible we should agree on the approaches to critical minerals, supply chains, the uses of new technologies, and the protection of our critical infrastructure including from cyberattacks. Working with the EU is key—including through the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council (TTC) and U.S.-EU China Dialogue. A new European Commission will take office in 2024; the agenda it sets for its five-year term will be important for the next two U.S. administrations.

Madam Chair and ranking member, it would be a privilege to join the 12,000 hard-working, dedicated men and women of our State Department EUR community. This team has done extraordinary work to sustain an America that is more secure and more prosperous because Europe is whole and free. I look forward to working together with them to develop plans of action to realize the objectives laid out here over the next 6, 12, 18 months.

I also look forward to working with the Members of this Committee.

Over the next 18 months, our adversaries will be questioning whether the promises America makes are ones we will keep. Our work will be much more effective when others hear our shared commitment to an America that is stronger with a Europe whole and free.

Thank you and I welcome your questions.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. Very moving and insightful. Thank you, Mr. O'Brien.

Ms. Rayes

STATEMENT OF NATHALIE RAYES, OF MASSACHUSETTS, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF CROATIA

Ms. RAYES. Madam Chair Duckworth, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of this committee, I am honored for the privilege of speaking with you today as the President's nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia.

Thank you, Chairman Menendez and Senator Padilla, for your kind words of introduction. I am grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in my ability to serve in this role and represent the interests of the American people.

If confirmed, serving as Ambassador will be my greatest honor and I pledge to work with this committee and Congress to advance U.S. interests and priorities in Croatia.

I am here today thanks to the love and support of my family and friends. My husband, Tarek Samad, devotes his time to family and finding cures for brain diseases. We are blessed with two boys here with me today, Julian and Alexander. Both are kind and respectful—and they asked me not to cry—and I am proud to be their mother.

I also have my mother and my wise older sister here with me today and my father watching from above. I am also thankful to my friends and family and my friends here and those who are watching from home.

I have dedicated my career to international relations, cultural exchanges, and civic engagement in the public, private, and nonprofit spheres. I have come full circle from a young fellow at the United States Embassy in Cairo where I first was exposed to the world of diplomacy to have proudly served for over six years on the board of the Woodrow Wilson Center and now as of 2022 on the Senate-confirmed board of the U.S. Institute of Peace.

I embody the American dream. Following the footsteps of my immigrant parents, from them I learned discipline, dedication, hard work, and the endless possibilities of our United States of America.

I began my career in Los Angeles, the world's twentieth largest economy and where one of the biggest Croatian diasporas has flourished in San Pedro since the late 1800s.

I created the Law Center's Office of Immigrant Affairs, manage intergovernmental relations, trade, protocol, and champions civic partnerships by establishing international alliances in sister cities with San Salvador, with Ischia, with Beirut and Yerevan.

I also created powerful coalitions in the private sector that improves civil society and strengthened bridges between the United States and Mexico. I am very proud of spearheading several initiatives to promote open and nonpartisan dialogue between the United States and Mexico.

My nonprofit sector experience has cemented my belief that transparency, accountability, and representation safeguard a safe democracy, which we are so fortunate to have in our great nation.

Most importantly, I have learned the power to convene and that success is reached by building trustworthy partnerships. If confirmed, I will use these skills to advance United States interests and values in Croatia.

Croatia and the United States have strong security, economic, and cultural ties. Croatia embraces transatlantic cooperation and shares our commitment to safeguarding democracy, the rule of law, and human rights.

As a close NATO ally Croatia is a strong advocate of many joint issues and, if confirmed, I will work to deepen our defense and security cooperation and continue to build a bilateral relationship based on our common values.

If confirmed, my number-one priority will be the safety and security of Americans in Croatia.

Second, I will work with Croatia to strengthen transatlantic security in countering Russia's war in Ukraine and malign influence in the region.

Third, as Croatia is poised to be an energy exporter I will work with Croatia to expand its role in advancing energy security and diversification.

Fourth, I will leverage our strong partnership to advance EU accession for all Western Balkan countries, which includes promoting respect for democracy and increasing U.S. trade and investment.

Fifth, I will deepen the connection between our two nations by increasing cultural exchanges, youth-focused initiatives, and cooperation between academic institutions to engage scholars, students, and teachers.

In July 2013 Croatia became the latest member of the European Union and at the beginning of this year Croatia adopted the euro and became a member of the border-free Schengen Area.

If confirmed, my goal is to inform the American private that Croatia is open for U.S. business. I will work with Croatia to help advance joint U.S.-EU priorities and encourage Croatia to help its neighbors pursue their own EU accession aspirations.

I believe that accession reforms are as much an economic incentive as a democracy-building project driving prosperity and trade.

If confirmed, I will proudly serve the United States of America with empathy, with humility, and with integrity. Thank you very much for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am happy to answer any of your questions.

I embody the American dream, having followed in the footsteps of my immigrant parents. From them, I learned discipline, dedication, hard work, and the endless possibilities of our United States of America.

I began my career in Los Angeles, the world's 20th largest economy, where one of the biggest Croatian diasporas has flourished in San Pedro since the late 1800s. I created Los Angeles's first Office of Immigrant Affairs, managed intergovernmental relations, trade, and protocol and championed civic partnerships by establishing international alliances and Sister Cities with San Salvador, Ischia, Beirut, and Yerevan.

I also created powerful coalitions in the private sector that improved civil society and strengthened the bridges between the United States and Mexico. I am very proud of spearheading several initiatives to promote open and nonpartisan dialogue between the United States and Mexico.

My nonprofit sector experience has cemented my belief that transparency, accountability, and representation safeguard a stable democracy, which we are fortunate to have in our great nation. Most importantly, I have learned the power to convene, and that success is reached by building trustworthy partnerships. If confirmed, I will use these skills to advance United States interests and values in Croatia.

Croatia and the United States have strong security, economic, and cultural ties. Croatia embraces transatlantic cooperation and shares our commitment to safeguarding democracy, the rule of law, and human rights.

As a close NATO Ally, Croatia is a strong advocate on many joint issues, and if confirmed, I will work to deepen our defense and security cooperation and continue to build a bilateral relationship based on our common values.

If confirmed, my number one priority will be the safety and security of Americans in Croatia. Second, I will work with Croatia to strengthen transatlantic security, counter Russia's war against Ukraine, and combat malign activities and corrosive investment in the region. Third, as Croatia is poised to be an energy exporter, I will work with Croatia to expand its role in advancing energy security and diversification. Fourth, I will leverage our strong partnership to advance EU accession for all Western Balkan countries, which includes promoting respect for democracy and human rights and increasing U.S. trade and investment. Fifth, I will deepen the connection between our two nations by increasing cultural exchanges, youth-focused initiatives, and cooperation between academic institutions to engage scholars, students, and teachers.

In July 2013, Croatia became the latest member of the European Union, and at the beginning of this year, Croatia adopted the euro and became a member of the border-free Schengen Area. If confirmed, my goal is to inform the American private sector that Croatia is open for U.S. business. I will work with Croatia to help advance joint U.S.-EU priorities and encourage Croatia to help its neighbors pursue their own EU accession aspirations. I believe that accession reforms are as much an economic incentive as a democracy-building project, driving prosperity and trade.

If confirmed, I will proudly serve the United States with empathy, humility, and integrity.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am happy to answer your questions.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you, Ms. Rayes.
Mr. Bradley?

STATEMENT OF TOBIN JOHN BRADLEY, OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE REPUBLIC OF GUATEMALA

Mr. BRADLEY. Chairwoman Duckworth, Chairman Menendez, Ranking Member Hagerty, distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Guatemala.

I would like to thank President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have shown in me and the privilege and responsibility to be considered for this position.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and the Congress more broadly to advance U.S. interests in Guatemala.

In over 25 years as a career Foreign Service officer I have had the honor to represent the United States and Latin America, the Near East, Europe, as well as multiple postings here in Washington including service at the National Security Council under two presidents.

Whether supporting the first democratic elections in post-war Iraq, strengthening the NATO alliance, protecting American citizens in Matamoros, or building partner capabilities in dozens of countries to combat drugs and transnational crime I have dedicated my career to advancing U.S. security and democratic values.

I have also sought to cultivate innovation and apply creative problem solving to the challenges that face us and our partners.

I would like to acknowledge my family today. They are here. They have inspired and anchored me on this journey. Following his father's sacrifice in World War II, my father served with distinction as a city manager for 45 years.

My mother was a teacher, a church volunteer, and a medical service provider helping thousands. My partner, a proud immigrant who has stood with me for 25 years through war zones and late night shifts, dedicated years as a D.C. public school teacher.

My sister, who represents all my siblings, is a part of a proud Navy family that has deployed around the world in service to our nation. They have taught me anything is possible with education, determination, and hard work.

Finally, I know my uncle, Charlie Ward, who has served this Senate for 25 years as chief of staff to Speaker Carl Albert and Senator Boren, would be so proud to see me appear before you today.

In addition to its rich culture, significant World Heritage Sites, and abundant biodiversity, Guatemala's role in the region and beyond is vital. Guatemala has the largest economy in Central America. It is a critical transit node for people as well as licit and illicit goods. It has a strong and vibrant civil society.

Guatemala's diplomatic ties with Taiwan, support for Israel, and condemnation of Russia's illegal war in Ukraine provide a foundation to advanced broader strategic interests.

Our geography and strong family bonds between our two countries make our paths inextricably shared. We have much to gain from cooperation that supports our security and regional prosperity. Thanks to strong U.S. congressional support U.S. foreign assistance is advancing that vision. If confirmed, I will be a conscientious steward of U.S. taxpayer money.

I will endeavor with this committee, the current and incoming Guatemalan Government, civil society, and the private sector to address root causes of irregular migration, violence, corruption, poverty, and malnutrition.

I will also promote inclusive economic opportunity and a level playing field for U.S. businesses so that Americans and Guatemalans can prosper together.

The United States and our international partners are closely monitoring Guatemala's runoff presidential election on August 20th. A leader chosen freely and fairly in accordance with Guatemala's constitution would have the mandate of the Guatemalan people and, in turn, be an effective partner to the United States.

While there are many challenges, Guatemala's close cooperation on key issues provides opportunities. Guatemala is implementing the Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection and cooperating to strengthen reintegration services for returned unaccompanied children and families.

Guatemala works with U.S. law enforcement to stem violence, combat transnational crime, and convict human traffickers under new laws.

If confirmed, I will work to help Guatemala strengthen its own border against illicit trafficking and continue to advance safe, lawful, and humane migration management.

I will also support Guatemalan authorities and civil society to strengthen Guatemala's democratic and legal institutions needed to sustain the peace that ended 36 years of conflict.

The embassy in Guatemala is one of the largest in the hemisphere with a talented and committed team of U.S. and local staff. If confirmed, I would be honored to lead them.

My utmost priority will be to protect the safety and security of the embassy team and of U.S. citizens who live in and visit Guatemala. I will be thrilled to return to this vibrant region and to work to harness our collective strengths to advance U.S. interests.

To members of this committee, if confirmed I look forward to partnering with each of you to further strengthen the U.S.-Guatemala relationship.

Thank you for the opportunity and I look forward to your questions.

Chairwoman Duckworth, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of the committee, if confirmed, I look forward to partnering with you to further strengthen the U.S.-Guatemalan relationship. Thank you for the opportunity, and I look forward to your questions.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you, Mr. Bradley, and thank all of you for your testimony. We will start a period of questions now.

First, I have a few questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch. I would ask each of you to provide just a verbal yes or no to this series of questions.

First, do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Senator DUCKWORTH. Do you commit to keeping this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator DUCKWORTH. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notifications after the fact?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. And, finally, do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. Now, on to other questions. Chairman Menendez will be returning but I will begin with the first line of questions.

Mr. O'Brien, you come to this position during the biggest security crisis that Europe has faced in a generation and at a transformative moment in U.S.-Europe relations.

While European unity has shown tremendous resilience in the face of Russian aggression, it remains to be seen how it will weather what increasingly appears to be a years-long fight for Ukrainian sovereignty.

Mr. O'Brien, in the wake of both the aborted mutiny of the Wagner Group and an ongoing Ukrainian counter offensive how do you assess, on the one hand, the ability of Russia to sustain the war effort and maintain the gains it made last year and, on the other, the ability of our NATO allies to maintain the level of support they have been able to provide thus far?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Thank you, Madam Chair.

First, I look forward to working on these issues with all the members who are interested. I think the willingness of our coalition to stay together depends in large part on their sense of the solidity and sustainability of American leadership in the effort and that needs to come from both sides of the aisle.

I feel at this moment I would much rather be in our coalition supporting Ukraine than on the Russian side, largely, alone. On Russia, I will not speculate about what is happening within. Secretary Blinken has spoken about the difficulty of understanding the internal dynamics but, clearly, there has been some fracturing.

But from the posture of my current job managing the sanctions side we do see Russia facing some constraints. It is building its indigenous capacity to create certain weapons but it is less and less able to source key components from many economies abroad.

That puts a limit on its ability to wage a modern war. Instead, you see them waging static warfare, attacking civilian targets including economic targets over the last week or so, not able to work with modern communications, rapid movement, precision munitions, et cetera.

We also see real constraints on the Russian economy. They are—it is a deep economy. It was one of the largest 10 in the world at the start of this war. So they will be able to sustain themselves for quite a while. We do not see a collapse.

But they are going to be forced to make difficult choices. They began the war with probably $850 billion U.S. in sort of ready cash. Now it is probably about $250 billion. We think there will be some choices facing it over the next several years. In the longer term, we think its economy will shrink considerably.

We expect by the end of the decade Russia will be 20 percent smaller than it would have been if it had not waged this war. That makes it a less attractive partner less able to sustain this conflict at the rate that they think that they can.

On the other side, our coalition has been remarkably stable and I think what we are seeing right now is that Russia is committing outrages in order to try to hasten some progress in this war and instead it is isolating itself.

Its attack on the global food system by taking more than 30 million tons of Ukrainian grain out of the global food supply that strips the Global South of about 24 million tons.

That is food for tens of millions of people, and Russia cannot replace that. So now it is facing a lot more isolation. So I would rather be where we are. The work that we do to keep people unified is important.

And I will just close with one last note. Senator Hagerty talked about the importance of burden sharing and I completely agree. We are now in a position where U.S. contributions are largely matched by what is coming from the rest of the coalition. That includes specialized contributions.

We are thirteenth in terms of GDP on the amount of security assistance we are providing. So I think we are in a place now where everyone knows they have to put their shoulder to the wheel in support of this effort because we are all going to benefit when Ukraine wins.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you.

Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Ms. Rayes, I would like to start with you. First, thank you for being here. You have long been a critic of the brutal Chavez-Maduro regimes in Venezuela. I agree with you.

The Maduro regime today has provided a beachhead for malign activity in the Western Hemisphere for China, for Iran, for Russia. They have extended a lifeline to Cuba and, frankly, they support illicit drug smuggling and money laundering throughout the region. Those concerns are very significant.

I understand that you hold dual citizenship as a Venezuelan citizen and as an American citizen, and if you are confirmed I want to ask you on the record for myself and for the committee will you agree to renounce your Venezuelan citizenship?

Ms. RAYES. Well, thank you very much, Senator Hagerty, for that question. Yes, I do also renounce—denounce, I should say—I would denounce my Venezuelan citizenship, yes.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you. I appreciate that.

One of my concerns has been with this administration's foreign policy and its tendency to moralize on issues that may have great political interest but are not directly at our national security and economic interest.

And you have served on the board of Planned Parenthood Action Fund. Planned Parenthood Action Fund advocates for some very divisive policies, for example, expanding the Supreme Court, taking away the Helms Amendment—dispensing with the Helms amendment—even advocating for so-called gender affirming care.

As you mentioned in your opening testimony, if you are confirmed to be U.S. Ambassador it will be your highest honor, but it will also be your great responsibility and I would like to know, first, do you agree with the positions of Planned Parenthood Action Fund?

Ms. RAYES. If confirmed, my sole focus will be representing the American people and the American interests in Croatia.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, you did a good job of articulating your plans there. I want to encourage you strongly to stick to those plans, please, and please commit to us that you will not use this as a platform in any way to advocate for these other policies.

Ms. RAYES. Senator, you have my full assurance that I am there to represent the American people and the American interest.

Senator HAGERTY. Great. Thank you very much.

I would like to turn my next question, if I might, to you, Mr. Bradley.

I appreciate your recognition of Guatemala's strategic importance to the United States. You did a good job of that in your opening statement. As you know, no partner is perfect. Guatemala, though, has long faced difficult challenges of combating public corruption like many nations in the Western region—the Western Hemisphere, I am sorry.

I am concerned, however, that the Biden administration has created the perception that it is picking sides in Guatemala's presidential election, and so my question of you is if you will commit to this committee that you will respect the outcome of Guatemala's August presidential election regardless of who wins.

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes, Senator. Thank you for the question. You have my commitment that I will respect the outcome of the Guatemalan election. That is, we will work with anyone in Guatemala. As I have discussed, our future is shared and there are so many issues that we need to work on together. The Guatemalan people are at a democratic milestone and that they have an opportunity to freely elect a leader. This—

Senator HAGERTY [continuing]. Yeah. My point is that we need to respect that and not be perceived as being in any way meddling with it, and so I hope that you will certainly follow up on that perception.

Mr. BRADLEY. I will work with—

Senator HAGERTY [continuing]. I appreciate that.

When I met with President Giammattei, as I mentioned earlier, he correctly, I think, identified Guatemala as a choke point for illegal migration from Central America.

He talked to me about the national security crisis that presents for his nation as well as for the United States, and during the previous administration Guatemala was a key partner for the United States in countering the crisis. They signed an asylum cooperation agreement that helped stem the flow of illegal immigrants.

But since January of 2021 that flow has exploded, and it has created numerous problems not only here in America but also in Guatemala, and during our meeting President Giammattei advised me that technical assistance—training, equipment—that that type of activity would be far more effective, in his mind, to help counter illegal migration flows, illegal drug flows. He felt that that would be far more effective than increasing funding for nongovernmental organizations. Do you agree with President Giammattei's perspective?

Mr. BRADLEY. Thank you, Senator. I believe that we should use every tool that the embassy has to reduce the pressure on our Southwest border and to support humane and orderly migration and direct—

Senator HAGERTY [continuing]. Would you give some perspective on what you would do—I am sorry.

Mr. BRADLEY [continuing]. And direct support to the Government.

Senator HAGERTY. I am just interested your perspective on what we could do to help support strengthening the rule of law in Guatemala to help them enhance border security and deepen our economic ties.

Mr. BRADLEY. Senator Hagerty, border security has been a focus of my career over 10 years. Through my management of the INL program in Mexico City we incubated new technologies and innovative approaches for the betterment of both of our countries and one of those innovations is actually currently being piloted at the border in Matamoros in Brownsville and I helped to pioneer that with my team.

So we worked with the CBP, Sandia National Laboratories to actually show that you can increase dramatically border security while decreasing wait times for licit travel.

And so I understand the interconnected interdisciplinary nature of the border challenge and I believe I can bring those lessons learned and the things we are actually piloting now to Guatemala to help them protect their own border. They want to protect their own border too, as President Giammattei has said, and that means that Guatemalan border security is our security.

Senator HAGERTY. I agree. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Madam Chair, and congratulations to each of our nominees. Thank you for your willingness to continue to serve the country.

Because I chair the European Affairs Subcommittee I am going to focus my questions on you, Ambassador O'Brien and Ms. Rayes.

And, Ambassador O'Brien, I understand that you were in Tbilisi recently to look at the sanctions implementation. Can you give us an update on what is happening currently in Georgia with respect to the Russia sanctions?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yes, and I look forward to working with you on this issue and other issues in Georgia and around the region. I really appreciate your leadership and it will be very important as we go forward.

I was in Tbilisi along with my EU and U.K. counterparts so we presented a united front. I think there is some very encouraging news in that the Georgian customs authorities are taking real steps to restrict the most battlefield relevant items from being transshipped to Russia.

What we want to do is make sure that they have complete control over movements across the Georgian border whether it is by airfields or by the road border, and so that is continuing work and there is a lot of assistance being provided to that.

But they have been good partners at being transparent about what they see and the question now is can we get better data going forward and can we have a clear eye on what is happening with the air flights that have resumed recently between Georgia and Russia.

Senator SHAHEEN. So the resumption of those flights—are we concerned that that is going to have—provide an ability to evade sanctions?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would not say concerned but it is clearly a possibility and so we want to make sure we know what is going on those planes on their way back to Russia.

Senator SHAHEEN. And ahead of the elections next year what can be done to engage the Georgian Government further to strengthen their institutions?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yeah, it is a great—it is a great question.

So, as you know, the U.S. designated a set of judges who were notorious within Georgia for control of the judicial system. This is one of the first requirements for Georgia to make progress toward its European perspective.

So we are working closely with the European Union and have made clear to the Georgian Government that improvements on the appointment, disciplining, and monitoring of judges is a key area for making progress.

More broadly, I met this week with a group of civil society activists from Georgia. It is one of the most vibrant groups in the world. I am sure you all saw the same set of people. They make—they embody the commitment of the Georgian people. More than 90 percent of the Georgian people say they want to be part of Europe. There is no polarization on that.

And what has to happen is the group of economic interests behind the Government need to be made aware that the reforms necessary to join Europe are in fact where the country is moving.

So we are working with our European colleagues to make clear that the conditions they have set are also reflected in our assistance and in our conditions and that we need to see progress on these over the next month. The fall will be critical because of the report that will come from the European Council.

Senator SHAHEEN. That is a mixed report but has some encouraging news in there.

I want to go—move to the Balkans now because as you pointed out you did a lot of work in Bosnia-Herzegovina in particular and I wonder if, given Milorad Dodik's increased level of rhetoric against a united country, are we concerned that that will endanger the renewal of EUFOR at the United Nations and what more can we do to address what Dodik is doing?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think—and this is something we should discuss in another setting as well—but Milorad Dodik controls the Government in a part of Bosnia. He wants to control the resources and all of the patronage that flow from those resources in that area.

So we have the ability to reduce his control over the money. That is partly what is causing him to challenge the state processes. I think with our European colleagues, with the High Representative for Dayton implementation, we are making clear to him that what he is doing is unacceptable, that there will be clear consequences for it, and that he needs to start stepping back from these postures.

The military force that is there is critical for security. I think we have made clear throughout that it is there under EUFOR or as NATO. It is there in some capacity no matter what and its presence is essential.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. Madam Chair, can I ask one more question of Ms. Rayes?

Croatia is one of the—or is one of three constituent peoples in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia plays an important role, I think, in sustaining peace in the country.

Can you discuss how you would work with the Croatian Government to encourage a continued positive force in terms of what happens in Bosnia-Herzegovina?

Ms. RAYES. Well, I appreciate that question, Senator.

The U.S. remains committed, as you know, to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Bosnia-Herzegovina and, obviously, to the Dayton Accord framework of one country, two entities, and three constituencies and if confirmed I will work with the Croatian Government to engage Bosnian and Croats and their counterparts to support their governance reforms.

So I would be that conduit between the Croatian Government and the Croats in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you.

Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Bradley, I am the chair of the Americas Subcommittee here, and while Guatemala has been a really important partner for us for a long time I have also been very disappointed in recent years with the efforts to chase anti-corruption prosecutors out of the country.

Judges who have focused on corruption have been targeted. Journalists have been targeted. A number of them now live in Virginia. They would rather be back in Guatemala. I was even visiting with some last night.

And so I think the work of the embassy and the work of the Ambassador, should you be confirmed and I am confident you will be, upholding democracy and anti-corruption standards is going to be a really important thing.

I am sure most of you know that we are in the last weeks of a runoff election for president. The two candidates who prevailed in the first round there was an effort by the existing government to block one of the two successful candidates from moving forward in the election.

It is really important—we do not have a favorite in this but it is really important that Guatemala not disable a democracy from working. My understanding is the United States is going to host both of the two finalist candidates here to show that we want to continue to work with whoever the Guatemalan people pick as its next president.

But I just really hope, whether it is press freedom or anti-corruption efforts, our support for NGOs. Guatemala passes an NGO registration law, which we see happening in other nations like Nicaragua, which force NGOs to register or be dissolved. That registration is often a precursor to a shrinking of civilian space.

I hope I have your commitment—from your background I suspect I do—that should you be confirmed you will work very, very hard to encourage progress in these important human rights areas.

Mr. BRADLEY. Absolutely, Senator. You have my commitment, and thank you for your voice and the role of this committee and the bipartisan, bicameral statement on the election issue that—with Chairman McCaul.

I have worked on democracy and human rights for a long time. I helped set up some of the first elections in Iraq and I know firsthand how important it is that the citizenry believe in the election process, that they have faith in the results, and that they have the right to choose their preferred candidate under the law.

And so, Senator, you absolutely have my commitment to do that, and in terms of the anti-corruption side of the house, if confirmed, I support the use of all the tools that Congress has provided us to hold corrupt actors accountable, whether that is the Section 353 of the Engel list or Section 7031(c) for visa restrictions or financial sanctions as appropriate. I will use all of those.

Senator Kaine. Excellent. Excellent. Thank you.

Ambassador Hankins, thank you for your willingness to serve. Service to Haiti is going to be one of the toughest challenges in the world right now, and you have served in Haiti before so you go in with a love for the country and a love for the Haitian people and an understanding for some of the challenges as we—we are going to have a hearing in our committee tomorrow on Haiti where Secretary Nichols and others will be here on behalf of the administration and others who care a lot about Haiti.

The consensus seems to be as I travel in the region that security is the first priority but it is very difficult to assemble a security initiative unless a nation has stepped forward to lead it and there is a whole lot of reasons why the nations that might be asked to lead it—legitimate reasons—why they have been reluctant.

The United States—we have a history with Haiti that might not make us the most credible leader. France has a history that might not make it the most credible leader. Dominican Republic should play a role. They could not be the most credible leader.

We all need to be involved but as of yet we have not found the right lead nation to help us provide security assistance and that is a big, big issue that would be not just the Ambassador's work but I know that is something you would focus on.

Let me ask you this. From your experience in living in Haiti and then you are following it to now, how much of a concern in the Haitian security situation has been the extent of arms trafficking of guns from the United States that are purchased illegally often through straw purchases and then sold in Haiti to kind of back up these gangs and escalate violence?

Mr. HANKINS. Thank you very much, Senator.

And you are correct, the flow of weapons going into Haiti allows a situation where often then the criminal gangs are better armed, outnumber then the Haitian National Police.

The most recent session of the Security Council asked the Secretary General to outline three options: more support to Haitian National Police, a multinational force outside of the U.N. structure, or a new U.N. peacekeeping mission, and we have been working with a number of countries to see if somebody would lead or participate.

Those negotiations—those discussions are ongoing to support the Secretary General's effort. Clearly, what we see in the situation is right now the security situation blocks progress whether it is on humanitarian or political.

To your question, most recently this institution passed the bipartisan Safer Communities Act, which then gave more teeth to the trafficking in weapons and many of these weapons do come.

We have seen Department of Justice has now created a new special prosecutor looking at weapons trafficking towards the Caribbean. So you have, in fact, given us one of the tools that can help us work with that.

We look at trafficking in both directions, whether it be trafficking of human beings to the United States. But, clearly, there is a problem with trafficking of weapons from the United States to Haiti.

Senator KAINE. I have exceeded my time. But if I could just say, Madam Chair, I asked the question about arms because sometimes when we see a situation, particularly in our hemisphere, where there is violence or chaos we kind of wonder, well, what why do we need to get involved in this—why does the United States need to be a problem solver in Haiti or why are folks from Central America coming to our shores as if we are not connected to the misery in those countries.

And there is a pretty significant connection, whether it is U.S. arms trafficking into Haiti that increase violence or whether it is the demand for illegal drugs in the United States that send cash and guns south that turn neighborhoods in Honduras and Guatemala or Salvador into dangerous places that people then want to flee.

We often find that our miseries are very connected and that makes the work of this committee and the work of Congress in diplomacy and stronger international relations so very important.

It is not just about others. It is about others and the lives they lead, which are often very connected to some of the challenges we ourselves have.

Thank you, and I yield back.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Senator Van Hollen?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Madam Chair. Congratulations to all of you on your nominations.

Ambassador O'Brien, a couple questions about Turkey. I think all of us here in the Senate were pleased to see President Erdogan finally drop his opposition to Sweden's entry into NATO, although we are still monitoring the situation closely regarding the ratification.

But beyond the fact that President Erdogan was blocking Turkey's entry—excuse me, Sweden's entry into NATO a number of us had other concerns. Did you see a report last Friday about Turkish F-16s violating Greek airspace?

Mr. O'BRIEN. No.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. There was—there were some reports just—and we are trying to verify them but last Thursday or Friday—about an incursion, which was a little surprising since there has been a period of relative quiet and calm. So we would like to get back to—

Mr. O'BRIEN. I will look into this and come back to you with what I find.

Senator VAN HOLLEN [continuing]. Right. Because, I mean, you would agree, would you not, that as a NATO ally Turkey should not be using its F-16s to violate the airspace of Greece or any other NATO ally, right?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yes, and, I mean, as you pointed out, I think we are at a moment when—the two leaders met just last month. They have set up a regular cycle of their meetings.

The foreign ministers—I know their advisors are often in contact. So I think we are in a place where the two governments can manage the relationship well. But let me look into this incident and come back to you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. No, I am—I have been also heartened by some of the change there, a lot less so with respect to Turkey's conduct vis-a-vis our Syrian Kurdish allies, which has been another concern many of us have voiced for a long time. You would agree, would you not, that the Syrian Kurds were really the tip of our spear in the fight against ISIS?

Mr. O'BRIEN. And I know a number of my colleagues have—not on this panel but elsewhere were intimately involved in that, so yes.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Yes, indeed, and ISIS, as a large-scale institution it has clearly been somewhat quashed but it is not altogether gone. There was—I am just reading "U.S. airstrike targets ISIS leader in eastern Syria." This was July 9th so just a little while ago.

And yet, Turkey continues to target Syrian Kurdish leaders who are with us in the fight against ISIS. You would agree, would you not, that it is against U.S. national security interests for Turkey to be targeting our Syrian Kurdish allies?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yes, and I think this is a topic that will be a regular focus of discussion and I look forward to working with you as well to make sure that you see where we are going on the issues.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Good. Well, I appreciate that because obviously Turkey has requested a fresh round of upgraded F-16s and we are, again, watching the ratification of Sweden's admission into NATO by Turkey.

But these other issues are really important and it seems to me there are only two ways to get at them. One is to get assurances—U.S. Government getting assurances from Turkey that it will not use these F-16s in violation of the airspace of Greece or any NATO—other NATO ally, and that they will not use them to attack our Syrian Kurdish partners. Would you agree those are reasonable requests to make of Turkey?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think—I think, Senator, the clarity of views coming from the Congress has been very helpful as we navigate these issues with our Turkish allies. So I think if we can continue in communication on this we can make sure that the points are raised.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. I appreciate that because I think you will continue to see that reinforcement from the Congress and there are two ways to do it. I would like to see both ways.

One is some assurances from Turkey in some form. The other, of course, is the Biden administration giving members of Congress assurances that if Turkey were to violate those conditions that there would be consequences.

Mr. O'BRIEN. So let us find a way to keep working on it together. Thank you.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

Ambassador Hankins, let me just follow up briefly on Senator Kaine's question. I want to thank Senator Kaine for his longtime and deep interest both in Haiti and Central and Latin America more broadly.

I know one of you mentioned a couple of countries we have been approaching regarding providing a role as some kind of guarantor of support in Haiti. One of them, I know, was Canada. Are those conversations still ongoing or what is—what is your sense of where we are there?

Mr. HANKINS. Thank you, Senator. I know we have approached some of the larger countries that would have the normal military capability and previous history with Haiti that could be logical players.

So far none of them have come forward wanting to be the lead. Does not mean they might not support some future operation but not wanting to be the lead for their own domestic reasons.

We do look far afield. There are a number of countries that have very strong histories in international peacekeeping, whether they be in Asia or Africa. We are looking at some of those options and also looking at what kind of support the United States would have to provide if you find a country willing to lead that may not necessarily have the wherewithal to do that.

It is not yet determined on which option one might go with. We noted in the most recent Security Council resolution it was unanimous. So both Russia and China were willing to at least discuss the possibility of a peacekeeping operation, which previously was not understood.

But I think it is clear without some kind of international force it is very difficult to look at how Haitians can regain control of their country in the short term.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. I appreciate that. Look, it is a desperate situation which has dragged on for a long, long time and we look forward to working with you, if confirmed, on these issues and I do support the nominations of this entire impressive roster.

So I look forward to working with you. Thank you.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Chairman Menendez?

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Ambassador Hankins, let me ask you a few questions because I think we have really not engaged in Haiti the way we need to.

I had the Secretary General of the United Nations in a meeting with me and I said to him unless we have a multinational force to ultimately provide for security we cannot do all the rest.

We cannot have a political development unless there is security. We cannot make economic development which Haiti desperately needs unless we have security. We—and we cannot have security for so long as the gangs are the ones controlling it as well as the fact that the elite that uses the gangs to perpetuate their interests.

So I would just like to get your sense—I may have missed it because I had a markup in the Finance Committee. But is that something that—am I off base here? Is that something we are in comity with? What can you speak to me on that?

Mr. HANKINS. Haiti is—by its nature it is a complicated country where lots of crises affects everyone else. We have a very dedicated team and we have a great deal of, whether it be from the Senate, the House, or from the administration, a lot of engagement. But it is hard to find good lasting solutions.

I agree with you, Senator, that without some kind of force, whether that be a multinational force or a U.N. peacekeeping mission, it is very difficult for basic human security to be guaranteed for the Haitians to have the space they need to proceed on political resolution or to ensure the security of Haitians as well as the many American citizens who live in Haiti.

I would be engaged with all partners, whether it be then major countries like Canada and France, which have long-lasting history, but as well with the bordering countries whether it be Dominican Republic, Jamaica, the countries that also see the impact of the instability in terms of irregular migration for their countries.

The CHAIRMAN. Yeah, and that is a challenge. I was with the president of the Dominican Republic and he said to me, we are trying to be good neighbors. But when 50 or 60 percent of the hospital beds in the maternity ward are delivering babies of Haitian mothers and Dominican mothers cannot get in to go ahead and deliver their babies that is a problem and that is one of the many dimensional elements of the Haiti problem.

Next thing is we will see people on boats to the shores of the United States. We talk about migration. So this is a cauldron ready to explode and I am—I am hopeful that your presence there will help us find a pathway forward.

On a specific thing, I introduced bipartisan legislation, Haiti Criminal Collusion and Transparency Act, which has the support of over a dozen Haitian civil society diaspora groups to expose the links between the elites and the Haitian gangs and sponsors that—and sponsors and target them for economic sanctions and visa restrictions. Is that something I can get your commitment to work with us on if you are confirmed?

Mr. HANKINS. Absolutely, sir. Again, it is another tool it gives us in our diplomacy of dealing with then corrupt links between political and gangs.

I do not have my experience on the ground to understand whether the causality is politicians who control criminal gangs or criminal gangs that control politicians. But, obviously, we see that there are linkages between the two.

So it is important to break those linkages so that violence is not used as a way of avoiding a political and social process.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. O'Brien, I want to echo what Senator Van Hollen said about our—the administration's consideration of F-16s to Turkey. It is not surprising Sweden still has not received a vote from Turkey even though Erdogan said yes, okay, Sweden should be in.

He could have called the parliament. He could have had the vote. He has not had it, and we cannot have belligerence in the eastern Mediterranean. We have another NATO ally, Greece, for which we not only have Souda Bay long-standing, but we have Alexandropoulos, which has become the Souda Bay of the north and a major energy center and a NATO center for transshipment.

Now, how does it work for us to have one NATO ally be belligerent to another and somehow sell them F-16s? So I hope that this will be one of the things that if this is still pending upon your confirmation that you will be focused on and I hope that we can be an advocate for greater stability in the eastern Mediterranean because it is incredibly important.

I hope that we will work on the 3+1 process in a way that will strengthen the relationships between Israel, Cyprus, Greece, and the United States.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Absolutely, and, Mr. Chairman, I think the clear messages coming from this committee are incredibly helpful as we try to navigate through the relations.

The CHAIRMAN. And I have one specific thing and then I will submit the rest of my questions in writing so that the committee can move on.

On June the 20th the Albanian Government rated Camp Ashraf 3 where they have been hosting Iranian refugees for many years. I salute the Albanians for doing that.

However, there was a recent raid and there are differing accounts. It seems that one person died during or after the raid and that both residents of the camp and police officers were injured. Can you commit to advocating for the fundamental rights and freedoms of the residents of Camp Ashraf?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. It is important because if you seek refuge you ultimately have to be in a position to know that that refuge is secure, and we moved these residents into Camp Ashraf from their previous location and I support the—I appreciate the Albanians having made that possible. We need a continuing guarantee of security.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I join you in the appreciation of Albania, which has been a very important place of refuge for a number of people seeking asylum. I will look into this incident. I am very sorry for the family of the person who died. I will report to you what I find out—

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. O'BRIEN [continuing]. And we will work together, going forward.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, and I will submit the rest of my questions for the record.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Thank you.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you.

I am going to begin a second round of questions. I just have another additional question and I know Senator Hagerty has indicated he wants to do a little follow-up as well.

With that, Mr. O'Brien, the NATO pivot towards a more cautious approach to the PRC in recent years has been a welcome change. At the same time, we have seen a reluctance by some partners to set up a more formal presence in the Indo-Pacific.

How do you assess Europe's current postures towards Asia and the PRC in particular and what role should our Indo-Pacific strategy play into our outreach to our European allies?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Thank you for the question and, obviously, it is an essay question in itself. I think our—a lot of our work over the last year or two, some of which I have seen in the sanctions discussion, has led to a convergence of views between our European allies and ourself about the importance of having a united approach to China.

I think at the recent Vilnius Summit there were several of our most important Asian allies there and were as honored guests.

Although some of the formal mechanisms may not have been established I think what we are on now is a track for great communication and security channels as well the work that is being done across the Indo-Pacific to beef up the U.S. presence and our allied presence, I think, sends a very strong message that we are working to create a global rule-abiding community.

The goal of that community is security and prosperity for our citizens as well as the citizens of our partners. So it is an ongoing very important topic and we will keep working it in every channel that we have.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you.

Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. If I might, Madam Chair, can stay on this topic. I appreciate your raising it.

But I would like to come to the other side of it, too, and I share your concerns about having deeper involvement in the Indo-Pacific and anything that we can do to be helpful and supportive there, Mr. O'Brien, we want to do that.

I would also be very interested in your perspective on how we work toward a unified approach with our allies in the EU to push back against the intellectual property theft, the forced technology transfer, and basically the predatory behavior of China as they look at the EU.

The EU is wide open and vulnerable, and I feel like there is much more that we could be doing together. I would be interested in your thoughts on how we move forward there.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yeah. Thank you for that and thank you for the intellectual leadership on the issues.

I know Under Secretary Fernandez testified this morning—I believe, Chairman Menendez, you were there—about the measures we are taking to enhance our economic resilience along with our partners on issues like critical minerals, broader supply chains, also to address Chinese coercion.

So where China attempted to intimidate Lithuania we were able to step in and provide alternative financing, find markets for Lithuanian goods, and otherwise work to demonstrate that coherence within our alliance lets each one of us stand up for what we know to be right.

We have active discussions with our European colleagues and one point on which I really look forward to working with the committee is through the mechanisms that have been established like the Trade and Technology Council, the EU-U.S. Dialogue.

Those sound like boring bureaucratic measures but they are where we are going to start establishing the rules of the road for technologies like artificial intelligence, like many of the technologies emerging from the energy transition—biomedical innovation.

These are the things that will help make our people richer over the next generation. We need to do those in a way that is aligned with our European allies, not allow China to set the rules of the road, not allow China to steal the technology. By laying this groundwork together now we will be much better suited for addressing the challenges in the——

Senator HAGERTY. I would just interject that our national security interests need to be first and foremost in your mind as you think about this——

Mr. O'BRIEN [continuing]. Absolutely.

Senator HAGERTY [continuing]. Sort of cooperative approach. And I want to key off of something that you said about China's coercion, turning back to you, Mr. Bradley.

As you know, Guatemala remains an ally of Taiwan. They are under a great deal of pressure from the CCP as a result of that.

I have met on multiple occasions with the U.S.-Guatemala Business Council. They would love to work with us on nearshoring opportunities, ways to make our supply chains more secure and I think that from the perspective of an American businessman, which is what I have done my entire life before coming here, it should be a great opportunity for us as well to de-risk our supply chains and bring them closer to home.

I am fighting hard to get every job I can back to Tennessee. Please understand that. But to the extent they do not come back to Tennessee, partnering with countries like Guatemala with businesses there should be a great opportunity.

I would look forward to introducing you to some of the people that I have met. McKinsey has done a great study there talking about where these opportunities exist but I see a huge opportunity there and I would be interested in your thoughts.

Mr. BRADLEY. Thank you, Senator, for your question and offering to connect me to some of your colleagues.

Taiwan has been a reliable partner to Guatemala and—since 1933 and Guatemalan people have had sustainable benefits because of it.

So I will certainly want to raise with an incoming administration, whether that is with Sandra Torres of the UNE Party or Bernardo Arevalo of the Semilla Party, that it is very important that they maintain this close relationship with Taiwan and there is representation of the Taiwanese in Guatemala, and I look forward to working with the colleagues there as well on these ideas.

It will not only potentially provide opportunities to U.S. businesses but also help us provide job opportunities and attack some of the root causes of irregular migration that puts the pressure on our border.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Well, thank you again to all the nominees for your willingness to serve and your answers today.

The record for this hearing will remain open until close of business on Thursday, July 27th, 2023. Please ensure that questions for the record are submitted by no later than close of business Thursday.

With that, the hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:55 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

From: Damian Rivera, President and CEO, Association of Latino Professionals For America (ALPFA)
Re: Nathalie Rayes, Nominee for Ambassador to Croatia

Dear Senator Menendez,

I am writing to offer the highest level of support to the nomination of Nathalie Rayes to become the U.S. Ambassador to Croatia.

ALPFA is the country's largest Latino professional association, with a mission to empower and develop Latino men and women as leaders of character. When I first started in the role of CEO in 2018, I went on a "tour" across the country to connect with our over 100K professional and college student members to listen to the needs of the community as well as meet other leaders in the community. A name that continued to come up in my travels as a leader, collaborator and advocate for the community is Nathalie Rayes.

In 2019 I finally had the pleasure of meeting her for the first time and immediately I understood why she was admired within the community. Nathalie has a unique leadership style and ability to bring people together from varying social circles and make everyone feel valued and inspired to action. I have seen her energize a room to action in her role as the President and CEO of Latino Victory.

On a more personal note, even with her extremely busy schedule, she has always made time to provide me with mentoring advise over the years. As the CEO of a nonpartisan nonprofit organization, I work with the American public representing every state and demographic across the country and I have been able to trust in Nathalie to give me advise and coaching based on a nonpartisan view with an ethical lens and a focus on doing what is right.

Additional evidence of Nathalie's significant positive influence and impact across the country is in 2021 she was nominated by my members and selected as one of ALPFA's 50 Most Powerful Latinas in America.

Nathalie's dedication to America throughout her career, in addition to her public affairs experience, perseverance, leadership abilities and love of the United States will allow her to represent American interests at the highest level.

With her remarkable qualifications, Nathalie Rayes is unquestionably well-suited to become the U.S. Ambassador to Croatia

Honorable Members of the Committee on Foreign Relations
 Senate of the United States
 Dirksen Senate Office Building, Room 423
 Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Honorable Members:

It is with great pleasure that I would offer my support of the nomination of Nathalie Reyes as United States Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia.

Nathalie Reyes is a true naturalized American success story. From humble beginnings in Venezuela, arriving in our country in 1984 at the age of 9, struggling with family hardship, her hard work, dedication and perseverance graduating high school, receiving her Bachelor of Science Degree from the University of California Los Angeles (UCLA) and serving in many prestigious capacities in public service makes her well qualified to represent our country abroad.

Nathalie proudly and admirably served as the Deputy Chief of Staff to former Los Angeles City Mayor James Hahn and her leadership, love of our city and its people were extremely commendable. As the San Pedro community of the City of Los Angeles is home to one of the largest concentrations of persons of Croatian ancestry (approximately 30,000) in the United States, she is uniquely aware of the Croatian people, our culture, and the important relationship that bonds the peoples of our two countries.

As an American of Croatian descent, the former President Pro Tempore of the Los Angeles City Council, Harbor District Councilman (which includes San Pedro), President of the ninety-seven year old Dalmatian-American Club of San Pedro – one of the oldest, largest and most prominent domestic Croatian social benefit non-profit organizations, as Republican Party nominee for the California State Legislature's former 54th Assembly District and as a Republican candidate for the United States House of Representatives' former 36th District, I wholeheartedly support Nathalie's appointment in the hope that bipartisan support is the order of the day regarding her nomination's approval.

Nathalie Reyes truly deserves support from both sides of the aisle, and it would be my sincerely hope and desire that your committee unanimously forwards her nomination to the full Senate and that the Senate, in turn, supports her confirmation without dissent. She will do our country proud as our next Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia.

In the spirit of bipartisan cooperation, which is one of the finest American attributes, I remain,

Very Truly Yours,

HONORABLE RUDY SVORINICH, JR.

Re: Support for Ms. Nathalie Rayes, nominee for Ambassador to Croatia

Dear Senators Menendez and Risch:

On behalf of the National Hispanic Leadership Agenda (NHLA) we write to urge the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Senate as a whole, to vote to confirm Ms. Nathalie Rayes to serve as United States Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia.

NHLA is the premier coalition of more than 40 leading national Hispanic civil rights and public policy organizations. Collectively, NHLA leads the advocacy behind the pressing civil rights and policy issues affecting the 62 million U.S. Latinos, including improving the representation of Hispanics in political appointments. NHLA strives to increase Latino visibility and leverages our country's diversity to build a stronger Latino influence in our national affairs.

Nathalie Rayes is a good fit for Croatia. One of the largest Croatian diasporas in the United States has flourished since the late 1800's in the San Pedro neighborhood of Los Angeles, a city where Nathalie served as Deputy Chief of Staff to then-Mayor James K. Hahn, managing intergovernmental relations, international trade, and protocol, thus becoming very familiar with the Croatian community. Los Angeles is also the heart of our film industry and, as more American productions film in Croatia's unique historic locales, Nathalie's intrinsic familiarity with Hollywood's needs will help her champion those American businesses to improve their commercial opportunities in Croatia.

As a native of Venezuela who lived there till the age of nine, Nathalie understands the importance of real democracy and the need to help Croatians repel authoritarian influences. Because she's a Latina immigrant, Nathalie's appointment will also help highlight America's true diversity and opportunity in a country where views about the United States were historically skewed by propaganda and still tend to be colored by narrow media portrayals, even in good faith. Nathalie's story is the intrinsically American story that Croatians and the neighboring Balkans need to see as their region and Europe are, once again, embroiled in turmoil related to migration and xenophobia.

NHLA Support Ms. Nathalie Rayes, nominee for Ambassador to Croatia

Nathalie has a long-standing interest in foreign relations, including a master's in public policy in the field. She currently serves on the Board of the United States Institute of Peace and served on the Board of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars from 2014-2020. In 2016, trying to address the lack of Latinas in international relations, she created and currently chairs a unique US-Mexico bipartisan effort, the Hispanas Organized for Political Equality (HOPE) Binational Fellowship to annually prepare 20 Latina professionals and executives from both countries to lead in addressing their country's most critical issues with a global perspective. In 1998, she was a fellow in the Economic Political Section at the U.S. Embassy in Egypt.

The NHLA member organizations, with one voice, urge you to vote in favor of confirming Ms. Nathalie Rayes to serve as United States Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia.

Dear Chairman Menendez and Ranking Member Risch:

As national Latino organizations who have worked together to increase Hispanic representation in the federal government, we write to offer our strong support for Nathalie Rayes to Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Croatia.

Nathalie Rayes has had a distinguished career in public service as a leader, consensus builder, and advocate. She has devoted her career to advancing and empowering the Latino community through advocacy and education. Rayes has served as the President and CEO of Latino Victory since 2020. Before joining Latino Victory, Rayes was Vice President of Public Affairs for Grupo Salinas in the United States and Executive Director of Fundación Azteca America.

In 2022, Rayes was confirmed by the U.S. Senate to serve as President Joe Biden's appointee to the board of the United States Institute of Peace. Currently, she also serves as secretary of the board of directors of Hispanic Federation, vice chair of the board of Planned Parenthood Action Fund, chair of the Hispanas Organized for Political Equality (HOPE) Binational Advisory Group, and advisory board member of the Aspen Institute Latinos and Society Program. Rayes was appointed during the Obama-Biden Administration to serve on the Board of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars from 2014 to 2020. She was a fellow in the Economic Political Section at the U.S. Embassy in Cairo and was selected as an Asia 21 Fellow of the Asia Society.

Re: Nomination of Nathalie Rayes as United States Ambassador to Croatia

Dear Senator Menendez,

The Croatian-American community has been steadfast in its dedication toward building bridges between the United States and Croatia. With this in mind, I am pleased to offer my endorsement of support for Nathalie Rayes to be the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia.

As an American citizen, who herself is an immigrant from Venezuela, Nathalie has personal knowledge of the unique perspectives that immigrant communities can provide in building mutually beneficial partnerships between the United States and other nations around the world. Nathalie not only brings a keen understanding of the value immigrants can bring in developing strong global relations, she has firsthand practice in making those connections.

In her role as executive director of Fundacion Azteca America, Nathalie created a program to help resolve the lack of Latinas in international relations positions. The binational, bipartisan program selects twenty Latina executives a year in Mexico and the United States to provide leadership training that addresses their nations' most critical issues with a global perspective. In this role she also worked with Aspen Institute Mexico to promote plural and bipartisan dialogue between the United States and Mexico.

As the Deputy Chief of Staff to Los Angeles Mayor James Hahn, Nathalie created sister city programs with various cities around the world. In addition, as Mayor Hahn resided in the LA suburb of San Pedro, which has nearly 30,000 residents of Croatian heritage, Nathalie had numerous encounters with the Croatian-American community in Los Angeles, which gave her the opportunity to learn about the strong United States to Croatia connections they had made, especially during the period when Croatia broke the shackles of communism to become an independent democratic nation.

In closing, I hope you will agree that Nathalie Rayes has the qualifications and experiences for the position of United States Ambassador to Croatia.

Re: Nathalie Rayes, Nominee for Ambassador to Croatia

Dear Senator Menendez,

I am writing to offer support for the nomination of Nathalie Rayes to become the U.S. Ambassador to Croatia.

Throughout her distinguished career, Nathalie has demonstrated a profound commitment to public service and international relations. She has spent over two decades building and strengthening relationships among vastly different organizations with a consistent thread of building consensus and being a facilitator of goodwill. Her work as the President and CEO of the Latino Victory Project, as well as her involvement in various community-based organizations, highlights her ability to foster inclusive and collaborative environments. Nathalie's strong leadership qualities, strategic vision, and diplomatic acumen will undoubtedly enable her to forge and maintain fruitful relationships with key stakeholders in Croatia.

In 2015, Nathalie was a driving force in establishing a program at the Aspen Institute to support and advance the Latino community. With Nathalie's vision, support, and diligence, the Latinos and Society program was born. The Aspen Institute Executive Vice President Elliot Gerson and key Trustee members worked alongside Nathalie to launch this transformative program. Nathalie will bring the same passion, intelligence, and judgment to her new and important role.

Nathalie's extensive corporate career and binational role as Vice President of Public Affairs at Grupo Salinas in the United States and Executive Director of Fundación Azteca America in Mexico gives her added insight to establishing public-private partnerships to benefit diverse communities. Earlier in her career, she served as Deputy Chief of Staff for Los Angeles Mayor James K. Hahn, where she created and directed the city's first-ever Office of Immigrant Affairs and managed the Mayor's Office of Intergovernmental Relations, International Trade, and Protocol.

Nathalie is a values-based leader and an embodiment of the American Dream. Her own immigrant narrative has made her a steadfast advocate of empowering diverse communities through education and civic engagement. She has dedicated herself to public service and was confirmed by the U.S. Senate to serve as President Joe Biden's appointee on the United States Institute of Peace board. She also served six years as President Barack Obama's appointee to the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. Currently, Nathalie also serves on the Aspen Latinos and Society Board of Advisors, the Hispanic Federation and Planned Parenthood Action Fund board, and chairs the Binational Advisory Group for the Hispanics Organized for Political Equality (HOPE).

With her impressive qualifications, Nathalie Rayes is fully capable of assuming the role of U.S. Ambassador to Croatia. Her resilience, adaptability, and determination will enable her to overcome any challenges the role may face and put her on track to significantly contribute to strengthening the bilateral relationship. Nathalie's keen understanding of global affairs and her ability to engage with diverse perspectives will enable her to foster dialogue and collaboration between our nations. In conclusion, I wholeheartedly support Nathalie's selection as the United States Ambassador to Croatia. Your exceptional qualifications, dedication to public service, and deep-rooted commitment to fostering strong international relationships make her an outstanding candidate for this position. I have every confidence that Nathalie will represent the United States with distinction and make a meaningful impact in advancing shared goals.

If I can be of further assistance during this process, please do not hesitate to reach out to me.

Dear Senate Leaders,

I write in support of the nomination of Nathalie Rayes to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia. As an executive of Grupo Salinas, Nathalie represented that major global business in the Partnership for New York City. She demonstrated significant knowledge of international business issues and a commitment to building global trade relationships. I introduced Natalie to the nonprofit Hispanic Federation, where she stepped up to become the Chairman of the Board of this important civic organization. In that role she was effective in fostering bipartisan, public policy discussions related to immigration and combatting poverty.

In the two decades that I have known Nathalie, I have found her to be a consummate diplomat, a savvy advocate, and a thoughtful leader. Her career and her personal commitments have consistently focused on building consensus among people of all backgrounds and points of view. She is an excellent listener and has all the qualities that would make her an effective representative of the United States in Croatia. I hope the Senate will move quickly to confirm her nomination for this important position, for which she is eminently qualified.

Re: Support for Nathalie Rayes as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Croatia

Dear Senate Leaders,

It is with great joy and pride that I respectfully address you on the occasion of supporting the nomination of Mrs. Nathalie Rayes as the next Ambassador of the United States to the Republic of Croatia. I have known Mrs. Rayes for many years now, and have had the opportunity to work with her on various projects. I can attest first-hand to her ability, her talent, her leadership, her integrity, and above all, her absolute commitment to America. She is always guided by the highest ethical principles and by the love and respect for the values that built our great nation.

I have seen her lead solutions in a bipartisan way many times. She has also played the role of the liaison necessary to reach agreements on both sides of the aisle, from the leadership shown on the occasion of leading boards of non-profit organizations to having under her direction the necessary help in regions such as Mexico and the Caribbean. Mrs. Rayes has also been a fundamental support of the Venezuelan community in its quest to achieve the return of democracy to Venezuela. The Venezuelan American Caucus, the organization that I am honored to lead, would not exist without Nathalie, she has been a tireless advocate and a great leader for our community. This is a historic nomination as Nathalie is the first Venezuelan American to be nominated for ambassadorship, and her confirmation will undoubtedly lead the way for our community and join our growing Hispanic representation in our government.

As evidenced by decades of her work in various organizations and boards, Mrs. Rayes has always been known for being and for promoting plurality, understanding, and dialogue without partisanship.

Nathalie is qualified and prepared to fill this position. Without a doubt, she will represent the best interests of the United States in Croatia. For all these reasons and after reviewing all of her qualifications, I respectfully ask you to confirm Ms. Rayes. She will represent the best of our great, diverse and loved America, while serving our country with the respect, values and leadership we need.

Sincerely,

Adelys Ferro
Executive Director
Venezuelan American Caucus

TO HON. DENNIS B. HANKINS BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Diaspora Community

As you know, we have a vibrant Haitian diaspora community in our country closely attuned to developments affecting their loved ones in Haiti, including in my home state of New Jersey. Over the past two years, members of this community have tirelessly sounded the alarm about the political, security, and humanitarian crises facing the Haitian people. I hear from them on a regular basis, and know that they seek greater engagement with the Biden administration on the development of policy towards Haiti:

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to regularly consult and engage with members of the Haitian American diaspora as an essential stakeholder in regards to the stability and future well-being of Haiti?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to regularly consult and engage with the Haitian-American diaspora regarding the stability and future well-being of Haiti. I confirm my oral commitment to your staff to, if confirmed, visit Haitian diaspora representatives in New Jersey within four months of my arrival in Haiti.

Multinational Force

For almost a year, the Biden administration has been in discussions with partner countries to rally support for a multinational force to address the security crisis engulfing one of our closest neighbors. I strongly believe that the gravity of the security challenges facing the Haitian people, and the extent to which such challenges have hindered the distribution of humanitarian assistance, urgently warrants an international response to help stabilize the country. The international community has failed to come to Haiti's aid in the past. We cannot afford to fail again.

Question. If such a force comes to fruition, how will you work to ensure it has broad credibility and support among the Haitian people and leads to sustainable peace and security in the country?

Answer. I am very encouraged that Kenya is “positively considering” leading a multinational force to support the Haitian National Police (HNP), responding directly to Haitian requests. The vast majority of Haitians support multinational assistance to the HNP. This sentiment is conveyed in Haitian television, radio, and media stories; social media commentaries; and individual conversations. Few public opinion polls exist in Haiti, but in polls taken in January 2023, approximately 70 percent of the Haitian population said that they did not believe the Haitian police had the capacity to tackle Haiti’s severe gang problem on their own. An equal number supported international assistance to the HNP. Haitian public support for international security assistance has grown since that time as the security situation has continued to decline. While there have been a few public statements against multinational support to the police, these tend to come from a small number of vocal, well-connected individuals whose positions on a potential MNF are motivated more by their political positions than by the extreme security needs of everyday Haitians.

To maximize the ability of an MNF to pave the way towards sustainable peace and security and in order to maintain credibility and popular support, we are drawing from lessons from prior international efforts in Haiti to avoid repeating mistakes. In addition, we will also use the upcoming United Nations Secretary General’s report outlining the full range of support options the United Nations can provide to enhance the security situation to help guide development of the MNF.

Like the Administration, I believe an MNF could assist the HNP in securing critical infrastructure sites and better enable it to curtail lawlessness and stop rampant gang violence. Continuing to support the growth of the HNP also will play a critical role in ensuring a positive outcome in Haiti.

Democracy Speech

Given the current challenges of democratic backsliding and rising authoritarianism occurring around the world, it is imperative that U.S. representatives shine a public light on these issues:

Question. To that end, can I get your commitment that you will deliver a public speech open to the press at a venue in Haiti within your first six months on the importance of democracy and human rights in the Caribbean and that you will specifically raise democracy and human rights in your interactions with the Haitian Government?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to spread awareness on the importance of democracy and human rights in both my public comments and private interactions with the Haitian Government. I will call on all players in Haitian society to come together to build a sustainable, long-lasting democratic government. I will urge stakeholders from all sectors of society, including the Haitian Government, to foster a broad and inclusive leadership infrastructure that will serve as a foundation for the rule of law and the protection of human rights.

TO HON. DENNIS B. HANKINS BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Is Haiti a failed state? Please explain.

Answer. Haiti is not a failed state, although the Government's ability to provide security and governance for all its citizens is highly strained. Haiti faces multiple and competing crises, all of which are exacerbated by gang violence in and around the capital city of Port-au-Prince. Gangs control a significant part of metropolitan Port-au-Prince and are increasingly able to operate in neighborhoods previously regarded as safe. Port-au-Prince's gang activity has severely impacted the entire country, exacerbating challenges in transporting goods throughout the country, shortages of key fuel, and dwindling access to medical care. Gang activity also hampers the Haitian Government's limited ability to deliver public services and limits our ability—and the ability of our international partners—to distribute humanitarian assistance. It is my understanding that INL and USAID work closely with the Haitian National Police and civil society organizations, respectively, to build institutional police capacity and provide humanitarian relief. Nonetheless, the Government still provides services within its limited capacity throughout much of the country and has, for instance, made progress in financial management as recently acknowledged by the International Monetary Fund.

Question. In your opinion, are the security, humanitarian, and governability conditions in Haiti today better than they were in January 2021? Please explain.

Answer. Haiti has suffered immensely since January 2021; the positive effects of U.S. and international disaster and humanitarian support are offset by the increasing influence of armed gangs. Already in a political impasse and suffering from poverty and gang violence, the July 7, 2021, assassination of President Moïse and August 14, 2021, earthquake worsened already difficult conditions in Haiti. Since those events, the United States increased its critical efforts across Haiti to improve the humanitarian, security, political, and economic situation and to help prevent further deterioration. Thanks to USAID support, under-five mortality rates have decreased by 20 percent in the last ten years. USAID's food assistance reaches hundreds of thousands of people per month and has helped to bring nearly 20,000 people out of famine-like conditions. USAID funding supports over 160 health clinics located throughout Haiti; one in every two fully vaccinated children in Haiti were vaccinated with USAID support. In addition, the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs' critical support is helping the Haitian National Police address gang violence to reduce insecurity, which is needed to help Haiti move toward democratic elections. It is my understanding that Prime Minister Henry has made several significant steps towards creating a path forward for inclusive elections, including installing the High Transition Council, reconstituting the supreme court, and holding political roundtables with opposing political parties.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. In your opinion, are the security, humanitarian, and governability conditions in Haiti today better than they were in January 2021?

Answer. No, while we can point to a few positive developments, any objective analysis of the situation in Haiti would have to see conditions as worse than they were in January 2021.

Haiti has suffered immensely since January 2021; the positive effects of U.S. and international disaster and humanitarian support are offset by the increasing influence of armed gangs. Already in a political impasse and suffering from poverty and gang violence, the July 7, 2021, assassination of President Moïse and August 14, 2021, earthquake worsened already difficult conditions in Haiti. Since those events, the United States increased its critical efforts across Haiti to improve the humanitarian, security, political, and economic situation and to help prevent further deterioration. Thanks to USAID support, under-five mortality rates have decreased by 20 percent in the last ten years. USAID's food assistance reaches hundreds of thousands of people per month and has helped to bring nearly 20,000 people out of famine-like conditions. USAID funding supports over 160 health clinics located throughout Haiti; one in every two fully vaccinated children in Haiti were vaccinated with USAID support. In addition, the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs' critical support is helping the Haitian National Police address gang violence to reduce insecurity, which is needed to help Haiti move toward democratic elections. It is my understanding that Prime Minister Henry has made several significant steps towards creating a path forward for inclusive elections, including installing the High Transition Council, reconstituting the supreme court, and holding political roundtables with opposing political parties.

Question. How confident are you that current U.S. policies will improve security, humanitarian, and governability conditions in Haiti in the next 120 days?

Answer. I believe U.S. leadership and collaboration with Haitian stakeholders and the international community has set in motion a number of positive initiatives that are bearing fruit in Haiti and will continue to do so. Haiti's security situation remains dire and is a top priority for the Department of State. Following my hearing, I learned Kenya is "positively considering" leading a multinational force to support the Haitian National Police (HNP), which responds to requests directly from the Haitian Government. Upcoming deliberations within the United Nations Security Council and coordination among potential contributors for a security force for Haiti will determine how quickly security support can be fielded and begin to have a positive impact. In addition, on a bilateral basis, the Department has allocated $122 million to strengthen HNP capacity since July 2021.

The United States remains closely engaged in ongoing dialogue between the Haitian Government, opposition political parties, and civil society that show some signs of progress in reaching a consensus leading to new interim governance mechanisms and new elections.

The United States' financial sanctions and visa restrictions—rolled out at an unprecedented pace—have placed significant pressure on political and economic elites who finance gang leaders and foment the ongoing crises in Haiti. Since October 2022, the United States has designated more than 50 individuals involved in street gangs, other Haitian criminal organizations, drug trafficking, significant corruption, or gross violations of human rights. In fall 2022, the United States also secured unanimous approval for the first ever U.N. sanctions regime in the Western Hemisphere and persuaded partners like Canada and—following my hearing—the EU to create their own Haiti sanctions program.

The United States also supports the Haitian people as they forge a path forward for their country's democratic governance and development, including through the Global Fragility Act. The act allows us to build long term solutions with Haitians while we address today's acute, multidimensional crises. We encourage Haiti's political, economic, religious, and civil society actors to work together to resolve Haiti's political and security challenges.

Question. Please provide your assessment of the current security situation in Haiti.

Answer. Haiti faces multiple and competing crises, all of which are exacerbated by gang violence in and around the capital city of Port-au-Prince. Gangs control significant portions of greater Port-au-Prince and are increasingly able to operate in neighborhoods previously regarded as safe. With most national highways passing through the city, Port-au-Prince's gang activity has severely impacted the entire country, exacerbating challenges in transporting goods throughout the country, shortages of key fuel, and dwindling access to medical care. Gang activity also hampers the Haitian Government's ability to deliver public services and limits our ability—and the ability of our international partners—to distribute humanitarian assistance.

Previously, gangs were largely dependent on relationships with corrupt political and economic elites and often received payment from them, for example, in exchange for mobilizing paid protesters against political opponents. Today, gangs are much more independent, deriving much of their income from kidnappings for ransom and sometimes even challenging political figures for political power.

Question. Please explain your views on whether a multinational specialized force in Haiti should include a peacekeeping process.

Answer. My understanding is that the tasks of the multinational force will initially be limited to static security for critical infrastructure points. However, given the multiplicity of security challenges in Haiti, it is critical to keep our options open for future security support. In this context, the re-authorization of the United Nations Integrated Office in Haiti includes a tasking to the United Nations Secretary-General to submit a written report to the Security Council, in consultation with Haiti, outlining the full range of support options the United Nations can provide to enhance the security situation, including a possible peacekeeping operation.

Question. Should a multinational force be deployed, what type of training, equipment, and logistical support would the United States provide for that force?

Answer. I am encouraged that, following my hearing, Kenya announced its intention to “positively consider” leading a multinational force. The United States welcomes this announcement and eagerly awaits the results of Kenya’s August assessment visit. I understand the United States stands ready to provide support to an MNF where it would be most effective, potentially including funding, training, logistics, and equipment. If confirmed, I will also work closely with Haiti as well as Department of State and interagency colleagues to engage the international community to fund and equip such a force.

Question. Should this multinational force be approved by a U.N. Security Council Resolution?

Answer. As I understand it, we would plan to pursue a U.N. Security Council Resolution authorizing the multinational force.

Question. Should this multinational force use assessed contributions from the U.N. Peacekeeping Budget?

Answer. Discussions in New York are trending towards a non-U.N. multinational force. Such a non-U.N. force would not be funded through U.N. assessed contributions. It is my understanding that countries not contributing personnel or equipment to this effort could contribute funds voluntarily.

Question. How should the United States and the international community respond to vigilante violence?

Answer. Vigilante violence is a serious concern for the Department of State. Vigilantism occurs when local citizens do not believe that their police forces have the capacity to protect them or hold alleged criminals accountable. The vigilante movement expresses the depth of Haitian public resistance to the criminal gangs that have made daily life unbearable. Therefore, the United States and the international community should continue to their bilateral support to the Haitian National Police (HNP) including efforts to enhance community policing. Since July 2021, the Department of State has allocated $122 million to strengthen HNP capacity through recruitment and training, technical assistance, and equipment. This funding also supports community policing programs to build the community’s trust in the HNP so reports of criminal activity can be handled in a lawful manner.

Additionally, a multinational force—which Kenya has since my hearing said it was “positively considering” leading—would also help support the HNP, thereby increasing the confidence of Haitians in official security services and reducing vigilantism.

Question. As you may know, a number of Haiti-specific trade preference programs are set to expire in 2025. The political situation in Haiti is causing U.S. companies difficulty in meeting the requirement to obtain a visa for their products to receive duty-free treatment in the United States. Please explain your views on whether Congress should re-evaluate the need for the visa as it considers the expiring Haiti-specific trade preference programs.

Answer. I defer to Customs and Border Protection on questions regarding the visa requirements for products made in Haiti and eligible for Haiti-specific trade preference programs. Like the Administration, I strongly support the extension of the HOPE, HOPE II, and HELP trade preferences program for Haiti. At this critical time, it is important that producers and investors in Haiti, those they do business with, and the workers upon whom they rely, have certainty about the uninterrupted continuation of the Haiti-specific trade preference programs. In 2022, the garment sector—created largely thanks to the HOPE and HELP Acts—accounted for approximately 90 percent of Haiti’s exports, employed more than 34,000 Haitians, and financially supported more than 200,000 Haitians. But in the past year, some garment manufacturers have closed their factories and laid off workers—decisions made in part because of uncertainty about whether Haiti will continue to enjoy those preferences. We must continue to support economic growth, job creation, and investment where possible to maintain those investment gains and job growth.

Question. According to the World Food Programme, Haiti currently faces the second worst food emergency crisis in the world, second only to South Sudan. WFP was unable to feed 100,000 people this month due to insufficient funding and the deteriorating security situation across the country. In your opinion, are current U.S. efforts to improve the capacity of the Haitian National Police likely to improve security conditions in the next 90 to 120 days?

Answer. I believe U.S. leadership and collaboration with Haitian stakeholders and the international community has set in motion a number of positive initiatives that are bearing fruit in Haiti and will continue to do so. Haiti's security situation remains dire and is a top priority for the Department of State. I am very encouraged that Kenya is "positively considering" leading a multinational force to support the Haitian National Police (HNP), which would respond directly to requests from the Haitian Government. We believe that such a force would help to free critical infrastructure and intersections from gang control, thereby facilitating the flow of food, water, humanitarian supplies, other goods, and people throughout the country.

The United States will continue current efforts to support the Haitian National Police including through the more than $122 million allocated to strengthen police capacity since July 2021. This funding will strengthen the Haitian National Police's counter-gang capacity through recruitment and training, technical assistance, and equipment. The Department of State is also working with DHS to establish a Transnational Criminal Investigative Unit within the police to partner better with Haiti to investigate and prosecute transnational crimes with a U.S. nexus.

Finally, the United States is the largest humanitarian aid donor to Haiti. USAID's food assistance reaches hundreds of thousands of people per month and has helped to bring nearly 20,000 people out of famine-like conditions. One of USAID's major partners is the U.N. World Food Programme. The United States will continue our work to reduce food insecurity in Haiti and will continue to call on the international community to increase their contributions to this effort.

Question. What is your assessment of the implementation of the National Consensus for an Inclusive Transition and Transparent Elections in Haiti?

Answer. The National Consensus for an Inclusive Transition and Transparent Elections, also known as the December 21st accord, is a positive step towards resolving Haiti's political impasse. This accord has broader support than previous efforts. Since the signing of the December 21st accord, Prime Minister Henry has taken several significant steps towards creating a path forward for inclusive elections, including by installing the High Transition Council, reconstituting the supreme court, and holding political roundtables with opposing political parties. More must be done and urgently. A broader and more inclusive leadership structure will provide greater confidence to all Haitians.

Question. What actions are needed to reestablish and maintain security and stability in Haiti to allow the conduct of free and fair presidential and legislative elections in 2024?

Answer. The first and most urgent action needed is to improve security, especially in Port-au-Prince. I am very encouraged that Kenya is "positively considering" leading a multinational force to support the Haitian National Police (HNP), which responds directly to Haitian requests. Creating a multinational force, in combination with the United States' substantial on-going capacity building support to the HNP, will improve security. Improved security is a pre-condition for elections and necessary for election officials to make logistical arrangements, candidates to campaign, and citizens to vote.

Haitian stakeholders have also made important progress on the political processes necessary for elections. The National Consensus for an Inclusive Transition and Transparent Elections in Haiti, also known as the December 21st accord, is a positive step towards resolving Haiti's political impasse and has broader support than other efforts. The installation of the High Transition Council, reconstitution of the supreme court, and political roundtables with opposing political parties have been key milestones in the path towards elections. Now Haitian stakeholders must reach a compromise on remaining steps towards elections, which will include naming members of the Provisional Electoral Council, logistics around identifying polling places, updating voter lists, and issuing voter registration cards.

Question. Please provide an assessment of the most promising areas in which the United States can cooperate with Taiwan to improve conditions in Haiti.

Answer. The United States has a robust unofficial relationship with Taiwan. As a leading democracy and technological powerhouse, Taiwan is a key U.S. partner and a reliable partner to countries in the Americas, including in Haiti. I understand Taiwan maintains several initiatives in Haiti, including infrastructure construction, scholarship programs, as well as a key role in Haiti's garment manufacturing sector. I would seek opportunities to align Taiwanese efforts with our own in Haiti.

Question. Please explain how you intend to engage with the Haitian people and government about the concerns regarding PRC practices.

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Haitian people and government, as well as Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress, to address the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in Haiti and the region. If confirmed, I will prioritize advancing U.S. national security interests in Haiti and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partnerships in the region.

Question. How will your experiences with the Wagner Group in Mali inform your work in Haiti?

Answer. Over the past several years, we have seen Russia—including through the Kremlin-backed Wagner Group and other Yevgeniy Prigozhin-linked entities—exploit insecurity as a catalyst to expand its destabilizing presence and profiteering on the African continent.

Wagner serves as one of Moscow's most prominent tools to gain influence. It is a transnational criminal organization that exploits African mineral wealth and weakens governance institutions by undermining accountability and rule of law as well as co-opting ministries for its own illicit ends.

If confirmed, I will use my experience countering these threats in Mali to be alert for any potential Wagner activity in Haiti and, more broadly, to support U.S. objectives in Haiti.

Question. How will your experiences with Russian activities in Africa inform your work in Haiti?

Answer. Disinformation is one of the Kremlin's most important and far-reaching tools to destabilize and influence other countries, including in Africa. The Kremlin creates and spreads disinformation in attempts to sway public opinion, create political instability, undermine democratic values, discredit the West, meddle in elections, and influence people to support the Kremlin's objectives in Africa. This includes attempts to spread lies, use social media platforms via fake and compromised accounts, while also soliciting content from local journalists, to meddle in African elections, and influence African politics with false and biased narratives.

While Russia is not very active in Haiti, if confirmed, I will apply my experience countering Russian disinformation in Mali, whenever possible, to advance U.S. policy objectives in Haiti.

Question. Please provide your assessment of current U.S.-Haiti cooperation to curb illegal migration and steps that you would take to support these efforts if confirmed.

Answer. The United States works closely with the Government of Haiti to curb irregular migration. If confirmed, I would support these efforts by continuing engagement with the Haitian Government and other countries in the region to address the root causes of migration.

On January 5, 2023, the Department of Homeland Security announced the extension of the Venezuela parole process and its expansion to nationals of Nicaragua, Haiti, and Cuba. Through this safe and lawful migration pathway, up to a total of 30,000 individuals per month from these four countries, can come to the United States for a period of two years and apply for work authorization. Individuals must demonstrate that they who have an eligible supporter in the United States and pass vetting and background checks before they are admitted to the United States.

This process has significantly reduced irregular entries at our border, showing that when there is a lawful and orderly migration pathway, people will be less inclined to put their lives in the hands of smugglers. The Department of State proactively informs potential migrants throughout the region of relevant U.S. policy. Mission Port-au-Prince engages with the Haitian Government and media to highlight opportunities for safe, orderly, and humane migration, while cautioning against the dangers and consequences of irregular migration.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Haiti operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Haitian Government to continue to make progress on the prioritized recommendations in the areas of prosecution, protection, and prevention. We remain very concerned by the overall trafficking situation in Haiti, hence its ranking as a Tier 2 watch list country. Nonetheless, we are encouraged by efforts the Haitian Government has made over the past year, including creating a written plan to address recommendations in the most recent TIP report. If confirmed, I will work with my Embassy team and DC-based interagency colleagues to facilitate Haitian Government implementation of this plan. For example, we have already invited Haitian officials to participate in a U.S.-funded September 2023 regional training for police on investigative techniques and prosecutors on elements of a successful prosecution.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to reporting the reality of the trafficking situation on the ground in Haiti in the annual trafficking in persons report?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to continuing the Embassy's accurate and thorough reporting regarding human trafficking in Haiti via the annual trafficking in persons report.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador at large for international religious freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. Haiti's 1987 constitution provides for the free exercise of all religions within Haiti, the certification of clergy credentials all denominations, and authorizes religious operations in the country. As described in the latest State Department report on international religious freedom, leaders representing the Catholic, Protestant, Muslim, Vodou, and Jewish communities reported that the Government did not restrict their religious freedom. However, government's inability to maintain security and order hampered their communities' abilities to practice their religions freely.

If confirmed, I will work with the Ambassador at large for international religious freedom to protect and support the right of all individuals within Haiti to exercise their freedom of religion or belief; change their faith as they choose; express their religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship, and observation; or practice no faith at all. I recognize the critical role that religious organizations play in peacebuilding, conflict prevention, and mitigation in Haiti and look forward to productive dialogues with diverse religious groups.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to engaging personally with civil society on any concerns regarding religious freedom in Haiti.

In the past several months, religious organizations in Haiti have started playing ever-more important roles in negotiating a way out of political gridlock, building peace in gang-controlled communities, and spreading lifesaving public health messaging across Haiti. Haitian civil society actors and religious leaders remain some of our most effective partners globally across a variety of diplomatic and foreign policy objectives, and if confirmed, I commit to working alongside them at the crossroads of religious freedom, security, and other key issues.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Haiti increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. As described previous answers and in the latest State Department report on international religious freedom, leaders representing the Catholic, Protestant, Muslim, Vodou, and Jewish communities reported that the Government did not restrict their religious freedom. However, government's inability to maintain security and order hampered their communities' abilities to practice their religions freely.

Given this feedback directly from religious leaders, I believe support for an MNF and continued support for the Haitian National Police will be a critical component creating more space for religious groups throughout Haiti to practice their religions freely. If confirmed, my team and I would work closely with civil society, Haitian political leaders, diaspora communities, U.S. leaders, and multilateral institutions to address laws and policies that impact Haitians' religious freedom. I believe engaging religious organizations across all faith backgrounds, including often stigmatized groups like Vodou, is of particular importance to ensure religious freedom for all Haitians.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue to support and facilitate these important relationships. Through our regular outreach to civil society groups, including specifically those specializing in human rights, and also through the U.S. Strategy to Prevent Conflict and Promote Stability and the 10-year plan for Haiti, I will work to build inclusive and sustainable foundations for long-term security, stability, and democratic governance, including ensuring the protection and promotion of human rights. We will utilize our strong existing relationships with civil society organizations, local governments, and community leaders to implement the plan.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will engage personally with Haitian civil society on human rights issues.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize working with all stakeholders to promote the employment of U.S. citizens in the U.N. system to help advance American priorities such as innovation, ethical standards, transparency, and accountability at international organizations, while bringing important skills and specializations. I would also support our continued collaboration with stakeholders to develop and execute strategies for high-priority electoral campaigns for U.S. officials in multilateral agencies and coordinate with partners on likeminded, qualified, and independent candidates.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with USUN and IO colleagues to advance the United States' affirmative agenda for the U.N. and strengthen partnerships with traditional and non-traditional partners, including in specialized and technical agencies. U.S. engagement at the U.N. system is critical to asserting U.S. leadership, including by working with our partners and allies to promote initiatives that advance shared priorities on technical matters.

Question. How will you engage with the Haitian Government to ensure that perpetrators of sexual exploitation and abuse (SEA) from U.N. personnel are held accountable?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure our Embassy regularly engages with the Haitian Government on SEA accountability as well as demand strong action on SEA prevention and accountability throughout all U.N. fora.

The United States endorses measures by the U.N. Secretary-General to prevent and combat SEA consistent with U.N. Security Council Resolution 2272. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for the Secretary-General's zero tolerance policy and accountability by urging the Special Coordinator for Improving Response to SEA to share more information through the "Conduct in U.N. Field Missions" database and to expand prevention and accountability efforts.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. DENNIS B. HANKINS BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. This week was yet another reminder of the pervasive power the CCP wields over Chinese society, as all evidence of former Foreign Minister Qin Gang's career and presence are being wiped from the Chinese ministry's webpage. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that “the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Haiti ties.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence’s 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.”

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment’s notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State’s new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in Haiti.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People’s Republic of China in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Haiti and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address China’s efforts to expand its influence in Haiti and the region.

Question. Despite substantial international support for Haiti, its institutions remain crippled, poverty is widespread, large economic disparities exist, and both human-made and natural disasters compound the country’s miserable situation. Haiti lacks any elected officials while organized gangs and associated violence and kidnapping have skyrocketed. As the security and humanitarian situation continue to worsen, we are seeing increased illegal immigration to Florida via dangerous sea voyages. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between the U.S. and Haiti?

Answer. The United States works closely with many Haitian interlocutors—government officials; political and economic stakeholders; and religious and civil society leaders. The United States is committed to helping the Haitian people build a better future, and this support makes a real difference in the lives of Haitians every day. When Haiti is more prosperous, secure, and firmly rooted in democracy, both Haitians and Americans benefit. The United States is the single largest donor of humanitarian assistance to Haiti and provides long-term development and support to strengthen Haitian institutions. With a large Haitian diaspora in communities throughout the United States, millions of individual bonds unite our populations.

The United States works closely with the Government of Haiti to curb irregular migration. On January 5, 2023, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) announced the extension of the Venezuela parole process and its expansion to nationals of Nicaragua, Haiti, and Cuba. Through this safe and lawful migration pathway, up to a total of 30,000 individuals per month from these four countries can come to the United States for a period of two years and apply for work authorization. Individuals must demonstrate that they have an eligible supporter in the United States and pass vetting and background checks before they are admitted to the United States. This process has significantly reduced irregular entries at our border, showing that when there is a lawful and orderly migration pathway, people will be less inclined to put their lives in the hands of smugglers.

Question. If confirmed, what will your policy priorities be?

Answer. Given the dire security situation in Haiti, strengthening the Haitian National Police (HNP) would be a top priority, so that the state has a monopoly on the use of force. Supporting the Haitian people in developing an inclusive, broad-based consensus on a way forward for democratic governance and development is also of paramount importance. If confirmed, I would work with a broad group of Haitian leaders, partners in the United States, and international stakeholders to ensure Haiti has a path toward greater security, stability, and free and fair elections. Finally, if confirmed, I would work with Haitian and international partners to help meet the humanitarian needs of the most vulnerable Haitians.

All of these efforts would be in addition to my primary responsibility, if confirmed, which is the safety of mission personnel as well as the welfare of American citizen residents of Haiti.

Question. Why have past international aid and U.S. support been unable to improve the situation of Haitian citizens or governance capabilities?

Answer. Past international aid and U.S. support have achieved successes and sometimes encountered difficulties. U.S. assistance—and trade preference legislation—helped to create a new garment industry in Haiti. The garment sector accounts for approximately 90 percent of Haiti's exports, employs more than 34,000 Haitians, and financially supports more than 200,000 Haitians. After the 2010 earthquake in Port-au-Prince, emergency medical assistance saved countless Haitian lives. In 2022, expert advice from on-the-ground INL police experts—plus air transportation provided by the U.S. and Canadian militaries—brought expertise and equipment together to support the HNP in ending a two-month-long gang seizure of Haiti's principal fuel terminal and port.

At the same time, the United States and the international community have learned important lessons from past assistance efforts, and we apply these to our current planning. For example, while the MINUSTAH U.N. peacekeeping operation restored stability in Haiti, public support for the mission waned after Nepali peacekeepers inadvertently introduced cholera into the country and allegations of sexual assault committed by Sri Lankan peacekeepers emerged. As a result, current discussions about future international engagement in Haiti include training for foreign personnel to prevent sexual assault or other human rights abuses, plans for wastewater treatment and sanitation, and accountability mechanisms. Similarly, we have also learned that reconstruction assistance following the post-2010 earthquake relied too heavily on U.S. and other foreign-based organizations, and Haitian stakeholders did not have enough input into decisions. Thus, in our planning for a multinational force and other international engagement in Haiti we prioritize Haitian leadership and input and look to include local organizations as much as possible.

Question. Have U.S. immigration parole programs for Haitians impacted emigration from Haiti?

Answer. On January 5, 2023, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) announced the extension of the Venezuela parole process and its expansion to nationals of Nicaragua, Haiti, and Cuba. Through this safe and lawful migration pathway, up to a total of 30,000 individuals total per month from these four countries can come to the United States for a period of two years and apply for work authorization. Individuals must demonstrate that they have an eligible supporter in the United States and pass vetting and background checks before they are admitted to the United States.

This process has significantly reduced irregular entries at our border, showing that when there is a lawful and orderly migration pathway, people will be less inclined to put their lives in the hands of smugglers. The Department of State proactively informs potential migrants throughout the region of relevant U.S. policy. Mission Port-au-Prince engages with the Haitian Government and media to highlight opportunities for safe, orderly, and humane migration, while cautioning against the dangers and consequences of irregular migration.

Question. For more than twelve years in the early 2000s, the U.N. provided a peacekeeping force whose mission was to restore order, improve the capabilities of the Haitian National Police and helped with earthquake recovery. Not only was their mission a failure, the peacekeeping force introduced cholera to the country and committed human rights and sexual abuses which has sullied the view by some Haitians regarding foreign peacekeeping forces. If confirmed, what immediate security assistance is needed to provide stability?

Answer. Continued support to the HNP, in combination with a multinational force, is essential to provide stability in Haiti. If confirmed, I will remain fully committed to supporting the HNP in its efforts to combat gang influence, maintain basic security, support repatriation operations, and institute longer-term community violence prevention efforts. I look forward to supporting my colleagues in our Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs (INL), who have allocated $122 million since July 2021 to equip, train, and support programs that develop the HNP counter-gang intervention unit, specialized border unit, counternarcotics unit, and overall institutional capacity.

The security and humanitarian situation in Haiti deteriorates daily. The conditions on the ground will not improve without significant security support from international partners. Gang violence has led to large-scale internal displacement in gang-controlled areas and hampers Haiti's ability to address continuing food insecurity. An MNF would prioritize security at key sites in Port-au-Prince, thus enabling the HNP to focus on combatting serious gang violence, which includes kidnapping, hijacking, extortion, murders, and sexual assault.

Question. Given past international interventions in Haiti, what lessons should inform another multinational force deployment?

Answer. We will draw lessons from the past, including MINUSTAH, as well as from a forthcoming report by the U.N. Secretary General that will outline the full range of support options the U.N. can provide to enhance the security situation in Haiti. Like the Administration, I believe an MNF with a narrow security scope and a small footprint would assist the HNP to secure critical infrastructure sites and enable the HNP to focus on curtailing gangs' use of kidnapping, hijacking, extortion, murder, and sexual violence.

Question. How would the type of training and equipment provided vary from failed past efforts by multinational forces?

Answer. It is my understanding that the proposed MNF will be narrow in scope, coordinated with the HNP, and focus on static security operations at key infrastructure sites. A small footprint is a different approach from previous engagements by the international community. Training and equipment will be tailored to this new, narrower scope.

Question. What makes you believe the outcomes will be different?

Answer. As discussed in other responses, the MNF will occur in combination with continued INL assistance to the HNP and will benefit from lessons learned from prior international engagement in Haiti. Lessons learned include the importance of Haitian input and consultation; working through local organizations as much as possible; human rights training and accountability mechanisms for foreign personnel; and the need to address sanitation and wastewater treatment.

A small footprint with greater Haitian buy-in is a different approach than previous engagements by the international community. It is my understanding that the proposed MNF will provide static security at key infrastructure sites, better enabling and empowering the HNP to focus on anti-gang operations.

SUBMITTED TO HON. JAMES C. O'BRIEN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Degrading Russia's War Machine

You have been at the helm of implementing sanctions to target Russia's war machine.

Question. Have we been effective?

Answer. Sanctions and export controls are one component of our strategy to deny Russia benefit from its aggression. Sanctions impede Russia's military campaign and deny resources used to fuel that campaign. Sanctions and export controls reduce Russia's access to the electronics and other components it needs to run its war machine. There is much more to do in reducing Russian access to these materials, and we work every day with our coalition partners to deny Russia items useful for its military. Combined with military support, sanctions and export controls provide Ukraine with a qualitative edge on the battlefield.

In 2023, Russia's export earnings are approximately half what they were in 2022. Due to sanctions and trade measures, more than half the savings it had on hand at the start of the war are immobilized, spent, or in currency or gold not widely able to finance the trade it needs for military and civilian purposes. Sanctions and import bans have cost Russia its most lucrative trading partners, especially in energy markets.

As a result, Russia will face financial constraints over the next several years and will need to make choices between civilian and military needs. Over the long term, Russia's economy will be less resilient and smaller than it would have been, perhaps as much as 20 percent smaller by 2030, making it less able to threaten its neighbors or to influence global markets.

Question. What more do we need to do to most effectively cut off Putin's access to resources that are fueling his brutal assault on Ukraine?

Answer. We are continually seeking opportunities to tighten our sanctions and export controls in order to restrict further Russia's ability to wage war. With our G7 partners we are reducing Russia's access to G7 components that might be useful on the battlefield. This involves intensifying our work with countries that have been transit points for goods entering Russia. We are also reducing Russia's trading opportunities and access to lucrative markets.

Black Sea Grain Initiative

Russia's refusal to extend the Black Sea Grain Initiative and recent attacks on Ukraine's grain infrastructure have made it very clear that Putin aims to cause a renewed global food crisis in order to extract concessions from the international community.

Question. How do you propose we address this latest atrocity and get Russia to re-enter the grain deal?

Answer. The United States condemns Russia's attacks on critical Ukrainian infrastructure, its unilateral withdrawal from the Black Sea Grain Initiative (BSGI), and its plans to blockade Ukraine's Black Sea ports, which are responsible for exporting 95% of Ukraine's grain. Countries throughout the world without regard to geography have condemned Russia's unilateral withdrawal and demanded that Russia stop using food as a weapon and return to the BSGI. With our allies and partners, we are developing alternative export routes for Ukrainian grain, supplying global markets and reducing Russia's leverage. The United States will continue to work with the United Nations, Turkey, and affected countries so that Russia stops attacking global food supplies.

Question. Will you commit to supporting the people of Ukraine as they continue to fight against Putin's invasion, and will you commit to working with Congress and international partners to continue planning for Ukraine's reconstruction?

Answer. Yes. As the President and Secretary have stated, the United States will continue to support Ukraine for as long as it takes. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress and international partners as we continue planning for Ukraine's reconstruction.

Question. Will you commit to working with the committee to find ways to continue supporting Cyprus' further integration into security agreements in the Eastern Mediterranean?

Answer. Yes, the United States is committed to working with our partner the Republic of Cyprus toward an Eastern Mediterranean region that is free, peaceful, prosperous, and stable. Since signing the Statement of Intent on Bilateral Security Cooperation in 2018, our bilateral security cooperation has expanded significantly. In April 2022 we jointly established the Cyprus Center for Land, Open-seas, and Post Security (CYCLOPS), a state-of-the-art training facility that serves as a regional hub for building border and maritime security training and targeting capabilities. In September 2022 the United States, for the first time, lifted the defense trade restrictions under the ITAR for the Republic of Cyprus, and most recently in July 2023 the New Jersey National Guard hosted the Republic of Cyprus National Guard for an orientation program to begin to operationalize their new State Partnership relationship.

Question. I'm also, as you probably know, an enthusiast of the 3+1 Format—how can we better leverage that format to advance our interests and those of Cyprus, Greece, and Israel?

Answer. Our cooperation in multilateral fora, including the 3+1 format, plays an important role in promoting regional cooperation on a broad range of issues. In order to build momentum and support U.S. policy in the Eastern Mediterranean, the Department has sent a set of proposals for 3+1 engagement to the three partners, and they are currently reviewing. The Department of State continues to see the 3+1 as a valuable format and welcomes the opportunity to work with the three partners to engage in future discussions, workshops, exchanges, and meetings on energy, economic issues, and other topics of mutual consensus and concern. If confirmed, I will work to deepen our efforts in these fields and seek opportunities to expand it into others.

Question. I've been disappointed in the U.S.'s disproportionate pressure on Kosovo as we continue to support efforts to find a long-term peace between Kosovo and Serbia. Kosovo is a democratic ally, while earlier this year we all read detailed reporting on Vucic [VOO-chich]'s connection to hooligans and autocratic tendencies. How do we change the calculus in the minds of the leaders of these countries so that they behave in ways that promote long-term stability?

Answer. Together with European partners, we will continue to urge the leaders of both Serbia and Kosovo to implement the normalization agreement in order to unlock its benefits, including regional stability and security and durable economic growth. Kosovo is an independent, sovereign state, and we will continue to support Kosovo's full international integration. We want Serbia to be a constructive regional and trans-Atlantic partner. It is incumbent upon the leaders of the two countries to take actions that demonstrate their stated desire to pursue a European future for their people. As we engage leaders, we will also continue to encourage democratic reforms and improvements to the rule of law, both of which will help limit foreign harmful influence and will contribute to these countries' advancement on their European paths.

Question. What role will you play in countering Dodik's destabilizing actions?

Answer. Mr. Dodik's secessionist rhetoric and attacks on human rights and fundamental freedoms lead down a dangerous, authoritarian path toward isolation. Mr. Dodik says that he supports the Dayton Constitution but misinterprets it for his partisan purposes, something I know and can speak credibly to as a result of my role at Dayton. More broadly, we are pursuing a strategy to deter and constrain Dodik's destabilizing actions through the proper interpretation of Dayton, U.S. sanctions designations, support for the High Representative and his use of the Bonn Powers, strengthening the international military presence in Bosnia and Herzegovina (now EUFOR Althea), enhancing U.S. mil-to-mil engagements, and working with our international partners.

Question. How would you engage to get Bosnia to move toward greater stability?

Answer. The United States is committed to the sovereignty, territorial integrity, and multiethnic character of BiH and supports BiH's integration into Euro-Atlantic institutions. We are working in BiH to strengthen the country's democracy, enhance the rule of law and the fight against corruption, support civil society, advance reforms necessary for private sector-led economic growth, and strengthen the country's multiethnic armed forces. As I said in my testimony, some of BiH's political leaders have found ways to support their political networks through the misuse of public resources; this impedes democratic competition and prevents public institutions from working well. These patronage systems will be a major point of focus, as they were in my time as US special envoy. When appropriate, we will act to hold accountable individuals who undermine the Dayton Peace Agreement or threaten BiH's democracy.

Question. Will you commit to seriously reviewing the Department's habit of renewing the waiver of Section 907 of the FREEDOM Support Act and providing security assistance to Azerbaijan even as Aliyev continues to threaten Armenia?

Answer. Administrations of both parties have renewed the section 907 waiver of the FREEDOM Support Act annually since 2002 to enable U.S. security assistance to Azerbaijan that promotes U.S. national security interests, including counterterrorism, combating the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, securing critical energy infrastructure, addressing the 475-mile border with Iran, and combating narcotics trafficking and human trafficking. If confirmed, I commit to closely reviewing the Department's process for determining whether to recommend a waiver of section 907 to ensure it meets the interests and goals of the United States in Azerbaijan and in the region - and that it would have no negative effect on efforts to find a durable and dignified settlement in the conflict between Azerbaijan and Armenia.

Question. Will you commit to prioritizing the safety and security of all Armenians and ethnic Armenians in Nagorno-Karabakh as negotiations continue?

Answer. Yes. As Armenia and Azerbaijan work to conclude a peace agreement, I know the State Department prioritizes the rights and security for the residents of Nagorno-Karabakh at every level of engagement with the Azerbaijan Government—including with President Aliyev. If confirmed, I will reinforce our focus on this critical aspect of a just and durable peace.

Question. Though there has been a bit of movement forward in the recent past, I am very concerned that China will be able to successfully play on divisions in Europe to continue on its path of undermining international norms and institutions. The stark differences between the treatment of Emmanuel Macron and Ursula Van der Leyen during their visits to Beijing point to this strategy. What would you do, concretely, to ensure China cannot divide and conquer our European partners as we seek to limit China's malign behavior?

Answer. As I said in my hearing, U.S. and European views on China are converging. This reflects continual efforts across the Administration and Congress to engage our European partners on China.

If confirmed, I will emphasize that the United States and Europe share common values; a realization that the standards and materials central to future economic growth are being decided soon; and a willingness to work together in new structures, such as the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council (TTC); in existing institutions that set global standards; and through the many channels of communication where we take up issues related to China.

For instance, in the U.S.-EU Dialogue on China, we are working with our European partners to strengthen our economic resilience, diversify our supply chains, and de-risk our economies, including by pressing China and working with our Allies and partners to ensure a level-playing field for U.S. trade and investment. We also discuss the risks of global stability posed by China's trade that supports Russia's war against Ukraine. We are also working with European allies to reduce risks of excessive dependence on China in key sectors such as critical minerals. Similarly, working through the TTC, we are developing secure and resilient supply chains in semiconductors, countering the PRC's use of non-market policies and economic coercion, and expanding U.S.-EU cooperation on cyber, digital, and emerging technology issues.

Question. Do you think sanctions would be impactful to support Georgia's process of de-oligarchization, a priority identified by the European Union?

Answer. Sanctions remain one of the key foreign policy tools we have at our disposal, among others. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Department and interagency colleagues, as well as foreign partners, including the European Union, to utilize all tools at our disposal to promote accountability and support democratic renewal and rule of law efforts globally. The United States continues to promote accountability for those who abuse public power for personal gain.

Question. Will you commit to assessing whether economic actors in Georgia are using their influence to re-orient Georgia's foreign policy, and whether these actors have committed sanctionable conduct?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to evaluate Georgia's cooperation on implementing Western sanctions and export controls. This includes reviewing the conduct of specific economic actors as well. This is a priority issue for our Embassy, the Department, and for me in my current role as Special Coordinator for Sanctions. I have worked closely with both the EU and G7 partners on ensuring cooperation with our sanctions in countries like Georgia, and I visited Georgia in June with my UK and EU counterparts to reinforce this message to the Government.

Question. Will you commit to raising the importance of regional stability—specifically not threatening other NATO allied countries and other neighbors like Greece? Will you raise serious concerns about democratic values, human rights, and our own embassy staff?

Answer. Yes. The current positive atmosphere between Greece and Turkey is deeply beneficial to NATO and broader U.S. interests in the region. If I am confirmed, I will continue the bureau's efforts to encourage further productive engagement and dialogue between our NATO Allies in Greece and Turkey.

Yes. Though Turkey is a longstanding NATO Ally with which we cooperate on shared interests, we have concerns regarding democratic backsliding and human rights in the country. If confirmed, I will make all appropriate efforts to address these important issues with Turkey and in the region.

Question. Given the current challenges of democratic backsliding and rising authoritarianism occurring around the world, it is imperative that U.S. representatives shine a public light on these issues.

To that end, can I get your commitment that you will deliver a public speech open to the press within your first six months on the importance of democracy and human rights in Europe and that you will specifically raise democracy and human rights in your interactions with European partners?

Answer. With some exceptions, the Europe and Eurasia region has experienced democratic backsliding for well over a decade. Particularly in the wake of Russia's full-scale invasion of Ukraine, the protection and promotion of human rights and democratic institutions in the region is critical. If confirmed, I will ensure that upholding human rights and democratic governance is an important part of our bilateral interactions and policy agenda, consistent with the President's commitment to putting these issues at the center of U.S. foreign policy. If confirmed, I also commit to publicly raising human rights and democratic backsliding at appropriate times and venues.

SUBMITTED TO HON. JAMES C. O'BRIEN BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. This week was yet another reminder of the pervasive power the CCP wields over Chinese society, as all evidence of former Foreign Minister Qin Gang's career and presence are being wiped from the Chinese ministry's webpage. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its malign influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-European and Eurasian ties.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system."

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment's notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, we seek to manage this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, counternarcotics, and public health, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles. If confirmed, I will work with Departments and Agencies across the U.S. Government as well as with Congress to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in Europe.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be to advance U.S. interests in the European and Eurasian regions and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partnerships in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department and interagency colleagues across the U.S. Government, as well as Congress to counter the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in Europe and the Eurasian region.

The U.S. has supported and enjoyed a close transatlantic relationship with Europe since the end of World War II. The relationship, anchored by NATO and EU cooperation, has helped European allies as much as it has advanced U.S. foreign and security policies. However, it is clear that since the end of the Cold War, many of our European allies have not stepped up to the plate in terms of adequately shoring up their own defense.

Question. Successive administrations have voiced criticism that European burden sharing of NATO has been insufficient, even after Moscow invaded Ukraine. What is your characterization of the existing transatlantic relationship?

Answer. The Biden administration has prioritized placing our alliances, especially NATO, at the center of U.S. foreign policy. NATO, and the existing transatlantic relationship, is stronger and more united than it has been in decades. NATO is as critical to ensuring the security of our citizens today as at any time since its founding nearly 75 years ago, including as Russia continues its unprovoked and unjustified war against Ukraine.

Question. Only seven allies met NATO's 2 percent GDP target in 2022. If confirmed, how will you convince the other NATO partners to meet the 2 percent GDP defense spending?

Answer. At the Vilnius Summit July 11–12, Allies built on the Wales Defense Investment Pledge by making 2 percent of GDP a floor for defense spending and by affirming that in many cases, expenditure beyond 2 percent of GDP will be needed. Eighteen Allies will exceed, or have a credible plan to meet, 2 percent by next year. The Administration is committed to ensuring Allies equitably share the responsibility of NATO's collective security by investing in the capabilities, readiness, and force-generation needed to maintain a credible deterrence and defense posture and fulfill NATO missions and operations. We will continue consulting with Allies and with Congress to ensure NATO has sufficient, capable, and ready forces required to realize these commitments.

Question. Should U.S. assistance through Foreign Military Financing or prioritization in the U.S. foreign military sales process be conditioned upon a country meeting its 2 percent threshold? If not, why?

Answer. NATO Allies agreed at the Vilnius Summit this July that in the current contested global environment the 2 percent target should be a floor, not a goal. Eighteen Allies will exceed, or have a credible plan to meet, 2 percent by next year, already up from the seven mentioned in the question. If confirmed, I will work to see that every Ally meets or exceeds the 2 percent level or has a plan to do so.

Foreign Military Financing (FMF) is only one part of our relationship with our Allies, and it serves our security interests now even while countries work on the agreed timeline and independently of the broader goals. Our ability to meet those goals should not be limited by a condition tied to NATO's Defense Investment Pledge. FMF serves security goals critical for U.S. interests that complement but are independent of the threshold. FMF strengthens self-defense capabilities, enhances standardization and interoperability, and allows burden-sharing, all of which deter Russian aggression. By increasing demand for U.S. systems, FMF also contributes to a strong U.S. defense industrial base, reducing costs for Department of Defense acquisitions and securing more jobs for American workers. Allied purchases through Foreign Military Sales also contribute to Allied defense spending in support of Defense Investment Pledge commitments.

Question. There is bipartisan agreement in this country on the need to address the threat of the Chinese Communist Party, though we may debate on how we do so and to what extent. Europe, on the contrary, is still far behind on coming to a consensus on China. Some countries, like Lithuania, have not been shy about the threat posed by an authoritarian communist regime to the free and open system enjoyed by democratic governments and free. Others, like Hungary and Serbia, champion the CCP's talking points. What is your assessment of the scope of China's economic and other ties to European countries?

Answer. The United States and our European partners share concerns about the threat posed by a range of non-market policies and practices of third countries. We have seen Beijing move to weaponize economic dependencies with European countries and to deter countries from taking actions in their own best interests. The United States has an interest in ensuring countries make their own sovereign decisions free from coercion and work with our Allies and partners to offer concrete economic alternatives for these countries. Since 2021, we have engaged with the European Union through U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council (TTC) to partner on trade, technology, and innovation, while advancing our shared values and promoting shared approaches to strengthen our collective economic security. We have also engaged European countries bilaterally and through the U.S.-EU China Dialogue on the need to strengthen economic resilience, including through work on de-risking, establishing a level-playing field for trade and investment, and efforts to reduce risks from excessive dependencies in sectors such as critical minerals needed for secure energy transition.

Question. How can the U.S. assist European partners in building the political will to decouple their supply chains and critical industries from the CCP?

Answer. We are supporting our European partners through strategic dialogue and our commitment to sharing our assessments on the risks posed by the PRC's use of economic coercion, nonmarket policies and practices, and dominance of certain critical supply chains vital to our economic security. European Union leaders, along with an increasing number of EU member states, have publicly pledged to reduce their critical dependencies and vulnerabilities, including in supply chains, and to de-risk and diversify where necessary and appropriate. At the recent U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council ministerial meeting in Sweden, we reiterated our commitment to secure our high technology and critical minerals supply chains, address non-market policies and practices designed to reinforce dependencies, and increase our mutual collective preparedness, resilience, and deterrence to economic coercion.

Question. Should an LGBT agenda come before national security or American prosperity when engaging with European partners?

Answer. Euro-Atlantic treaty alliances and partnerships are the bedrock of our national security. President Biden directed all agencies engaged abroad to ensure U.S. diplomacy promotes and protects human rights of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer, Intersex, plus (LGBTQI+) persons. It is a U.S. foreign policy priority and EUR, like other bureaus, advances this policy. Helping to ensure everyone has a voice in their democratic society and governance—promotes global peace, security, and prosperity.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JAMES C. O'BRIEN BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER A. COONS

Question. Earlier this month, five former U.S. Ambassadors to Georgia urged that former president Saakashvili be released from prison to receive critical medical care. Do you believe such action would be appropriate?

Answer. We have carefully reviewed the assessments of the Public Defender's Office from December of last year and more recent statements, which indicated that former President Saakashvili was not receiving the treatment he needs. If confirmed, I will continue to monitor the treatment of former president Mikheil Saakashvili very closely. I will stress it is the responsibility of the Georgian Government to ensure Mr. Saakashvili's medical and psychological health is protected and his human rights are respected. We will continue to press for the authorities to take appropriate steps to ensure he receives the care that he needs for his health, dignity, and wellbeing, based on the recommendations of the Public Defender's medical experts.

Question. As head of the State Department Office of Sanctions, you oversaw the implementation of sanctions against four Georgian judges. Do you believe that those sanctions have proven effective, and would additional sanctions incentivize further reforms?

Answer. Sanctions remain one of the key foreign policy tools we have at our disposal, among others. Georgia's adherence to international sanctions and export controls against Russia is a priority issue for our Embassy, the Department, and for me in my role as Special Coordinator for Sanctions. I have worked closely with both the EU and G7 partners on enforcement of our sanctions in countries like Georgia, and I visited Georgia in June with my UK and EU counterparts to reinforce this message to the Government.

While these judges were designated under Section 7031(c) of the FY 2023 Department of State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, and not a financial sanctions authority, these visa restrictions demonstrate the importance of accountability tools. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Department and interagency colleagues, as well as foreign partners, to utilize all tools at our disposal to promote accountability for corruption across the region. The United States continues to stand with all Georgians in support of democracy and the rule of law and will continue to promote accountability for those who abuse public power for personal gain. We stand with all judges who have the integrity and courage to act impartially and independently.

Question. In recent months, there has been an increase in violent attacks against members of the Georgian media and other critical voices of the Government. What can the State Department do to protect democratic institutions in Georgia and support freedom of the press and an independent media?

Answer. I share your concerns about political violence against journalists and other critical voices in Georgia, and I agree this is a critical issue moving forward to safeguard Georgia's Euro-Atlantic future.

On June 23, 2022, the EU identified 12 priority areas for reform for Georgia to implement before receiving candidate status. One of these was to improve the environment for media freedom, notably by "ensuring that criminal procedures brought against media owners fulfill the highest legal standards." Achieving candidate status is a top priority for the Georgian Government and the people of Georgia. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Government to help strengthen its democratic institutions and media environment in line with its own aspirations and goals.

The people of Georgia have shown time and time again their commitment to the principles of democracy and the rule of law, and their conviction that Georgia's future is with the West and Europe. The United States will continue to stand with them in pursuit of this vision.

Question. How do you assess the increasing anti-western rhetoric by leaders of the Georgian Government, as well as moves to criminalize civil society organization through legislation such as the "Foreign Agents" bill that sparked mass protests in the spring?

Answer. Georgia's proposed Kremlin-inspired "Foreign Agents" law was designed to stigmatize and silence independent voices and citizens of Georgia who are dedicated to building a better future for their own communities; if passed, it would have jeopardized Georgia's Euro-Atlantic future. With the protests against the draft law in March, led by students and other young people, the people of Georgia once again spoke clearly that the only choice for Georgia is a secure and prosperous European future. We welcomed Georgian Dream's decision to withdraw both draft laws on "foreign influence," which are incompatible with Georgian and European values and the protection of fundamental freedoms.

Now is a time when we should all be working to strengthen the resilience of our democracies, embrace rule of law, and combat corruption, especially as Russia wages its unprovoked war against Ukraine and occupies 20 percent of Georgia's territory. If confirmed, I would focus on helping Georgia strengthen the independence of its institutions as a bulwark against malign Russian influence.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO NATHALIE RAYES BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Priorities

Croatia occupies a critical space in the Western Balkans as both a NATO and EU member.

Question. How do you assess current U.S.-Croatia relations? As Ambassador, what would be your priorities for the relationship?

Answer. Croatia is a close NATO Ally and like-minded partner, and our bilateral relationship has yielded many recent successes. Croatia entered the Visa Waiver Program in 2021; we concluded negotiations on a double taxation avoidance treaty in 2022; Croatia entered the Global Entry program in 2023; and our bilateral Extradition Treaty and Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty recently entered into force. If confirmed, I pledge to deepen and expand our close partnership with Croatia.

If confirmed, my number one priority will be the safety and security of Americans in Croatia. Second, I will work with Croatia to strengthen Transatlantic security in countering Russia's war against Ukraine and malign influence in the region. Third, as Croatia is poised to be an energy exporter, I will work with Croatia to expand its role in advancing energy security and diversification. Fourth, I will leverage our strong partnership to support EU accession for all Western Balkan countries, promoting respect for democracy, advancing transparency and anti-corruption measures, and increasing U.S. trade and investment. Fifth, I will deepen the connection between our two nations by increasing cultural exchanges, youth-focused initiatives, and cooperation between academic institutions to engage scholars, students, and teachers.

Chinese Influence

As you know, China is increasingly seeking to integrate itself within European markets.

Question. How can we effectively ensure that Croatia remains economically oriented toward the United States despite China's deceptively cheap infrastructure projects?

Answer. The Government of Croatia understands the importance of ensuring national assets and critical industries are not vulnerable to malign actors. If confirmed, I will engage U.S. investors and partners to make concrete deals with long-term value to Croatia and the region. The United States also supports Croatia's ongoing efforts to adopt rigorous investment screening and public procurement reform, which protects against malign actors that pursue policies counter to U.S. and Croatian interests including unfair economic practices, human rights abuses, disregard for international law, aggressive and coercive behavior, and political intimidation.

Ukraine

Russia's war on Ukraine has posed challenges for countries across Europe.

Question. How do you assess Croatia's response to Russia's ongoing war on Ukraine?

Answer. Croatia has been an ardent, steadfast supporter of Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Croatia has provided €190 million in humanitarian and security assistance. Croatia is the second largest donor of military helicopters to Ukraine. Croatia hosts more than 23,000 Ukrainian refugees. Croatia is providing expert guidance on demining, veteran trauma treatment, cultural preservation in war torn areas, and two prosecutors are helping to guide Ukraine's war crimes prosecutions. Croatia co-hosted the First Parliamentary Summit of the International Crimea Platform.

Trade and Investment

Croatia's Government hopes to attract greater foreign direct investment.

Question. As Ambassador, how would you support Croatia as it addresses these challenges such as higher energy prices that have stemmed from the war?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Croatia to expand its role in advancing energy security and diversification in the region. In 2021, Croatia launched the Krk LNG terminal, replacing Russian gas on Croatia's domestic market with U.S. LNG. Croatia is doubling Krk's capacity to 6.1 billion cubic meters, allowing future exports to the region. Croatia can be a clean net energy exporter. It also has significant geothermal energy resources and is pursuing hydrogen and carbon capture and storage.

Question. As Ambassador, how would you promote U.S. investment and business in the country?

Answer. U.S.-Croatia bilateral trade continues to grow. Bilateral goods trade in 2022 totaled more than $2.5 billion; U.S. exports to Croatia amounted to $1.77 billion; and U.S. imports from Croatia totaled $861 million. If confirmed, I will work with other EU partners to upgrade Croatia's energy infrastructure and accelerate clean energy production, providing more opportunities for U.S. energy companies, particularly as Croatia becomes a regional energy hub and net energy exporter to its neighbors. In July 2013, Croatia became the latest member of the European Union and at the beginning of this year, Croatia adopted the euro and became a member of the border-free Schengen area. Croatia entered the Visa Waiver Program in 2021, entered the Global Entry Program in 2023 and we concluded negotiations on a Double Taxation Avoidance Treaty in 2022. All good news for American business and investment. If confirmed, my goal is to inform the American private sector that Croatia is open for U.S. business and expand our close partnership.

Democracy Speech

Given the current challenges of democratic backsliding and rising authoritarianism occurring around the world, it is imperative that U.S. representatives shine a public light on these issues.

Question. To that end, can I get your commitment that you will deliver a public speech open to the press at a venue in Croatia within your first six months on the importance of democracy and human rights in the Balkans and that you will specifically raise democracy and human rights in your interactions with the Croatian Government?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will deliver a public speech open to the press on the importance of democracy and human rights in the Balkans within my first six months. I will leverage our strong partnership to advance shared priorities including strengthening democratic institutions and promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. I will work publicly and privately with Croatia to ensure continued commitment to its Summit for Democracy goal to advance human rights by eliminating sexual violence and harassment and promoting full and equitable access, safety, and equal participation of all persons, including members of marginalized and underrepresented populations in Croatia. If confirmed, I would regularly and consistently engage media to communicate the importance of a strong democracy and respect for human rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO NATHALIA RAYES BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Croatia and Ukraine

Question. Do you believe that Croatia has done all it can to help Ukraine and participate in the international coalition to support Ukraine against Russia's invasion? If no, what else do you believe that Croatia could do to support Ukraine?

Answer. Croatia has been an ardent, steadfast supporter of Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Croatia has provided €190 million in humanitarian and security assistance. For example, Croatia is the second largest donor of military helicopters to Ukraine. Croatia hosts more than 23,000 Ukrainian refugees. Croatia is providing expert guidance on demining, veteran trauma treatment, cultural preservation in war torn areas, and two Croatian prosecutors are helping to guide Ukraine's war crimes prosecutions. Further, Croatia co-hosted the First Parliamentary Summit of the International Crimea Platform.

REVISED RESPONSE

Answer. No. However, Croatia has done a lot to support Ukraine. We are continuously working with our European partners and NATO Allies to contribute more to Ukraine and there is always more to be done. Croatia is already making significant contributions to Ukraine given its relative size and GDP, but the Croatian Government could still do more to provide timely lethal support that meets the requirements of an evolving operational environment in Ukraine. We will continue to push our Croatian partners to increase their security and humanitarian contributions to Ukraine. One specific area where Croatia could do more is in de-mining, and Croatia plans to co-host the International Donors' Conference on Humanitarian Demining in Ukraine this October.

Croatia has provided €256 million in humanitarian and security assistance to Ukraine thus far. Croatia is the second largest donor of military helicopters to Ukraine. Croatia also hosts more than 23,000 Ukrainian refugees and provides free medical support to 19 wounded Ukrainian soldiers. Croatia is providing expert guidance on demining, veteran trauma treatment, and cultural preservation in war torn areas. Notably, Croatia, as the only other country to have gone through the EU accession process while prosecuting war crimes, is providing pertinent training to Ukraine's Ministry of Justice on the investigation and prosecution of war crimes. In June, Croatia hosted a workshop on war crimes prosecutions for 30 prosecutors, the Prosecutor General, and the Minister of Justice from Ukraine. The trainings will continue this fall, and Croatia also contributes two prosecutors to the Atrocities and Crimes Advisory Group in Ukraine. Further, Croatia co-hosted the First Parliamentary Summit of the International Crimea Platform last October.

Croatia and NATO

Question. Croatia has never attained its stated goal of spending 2 percent of its GDP on defense. All NATO members have pledged to reach that number, but Croatia in 2023 will spend only 1.79 percent. If confirmed, do you commit to continuing to urge the Government of Croatia to fulfill its pledge?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press the Government of Croatia to reach its Vilnius Defense Investment Pledge commitments. Croatia currently spends 1.82 percent of GDP on defense. Planned acquisitions and defense budget increases next year should put Croatia over the 2 percent mark. The Administration is committed to ensuring Allies equitably share the responsibility of NATO's collective security by investing in the capabilities, readiness, and force-generation needed to maintain a credible deterrence and defense posture and fulfill NATO missions and operations.

Energy

Question. What more do you believe that Croatia needs to do to diversify its energy mix? Do you believe that the United States can help Croatia diversify its energy mix? If so, what mechanisms would you use to do that?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Croatia to help it completely phase out coal and diversify its clean energy sources. The United States supports public-private clean energy investments working closely with international financial institutions to catalyze the Western Balkans' energy transition. The Department supports the EU's Green Agenda for the Western Balkans, welcomes the EU's deployment of its Global Gateway, further financing through RepowerEU, and efforts that accelerate U.S. private sector financing for clean energy developments in Croatia.

Balkans

Question. Croatia is one of the most stable nations in the Balkans, and the only country that was involved in the Balkan Wars of the 1990s that has succeeded in joining the European Union. What lessons do you think other Balkan nations could draw from Croatia's experience? How will you help Croatia use its role in the EU to encourage progress toward broader transatlantic integration in the region?

Answer. Stability and economic progress in the region directly benefit Croatia. As the most recent country to join the European Union and Western Balkan neighbor, Croatia plays an important role supporting the region, especially its aspirations to join the EU. Croatia can support EU enlargement goals through political support for the aspirants within the EU and providing technical and policy expertise to Western Balkan aspirants.

Question. Next door in Bosnia & Herzegovina the situation remains volatile. Ethnic Croats make up around 15 percent of the total population of Bosnia, and the Government of Croatia is often accused of meddling in Bosnian politics by influencing that group. Do you believe that Croatia's influence in Bosnia is productive? Why or why not? If confirmed as Ambassador, how would you confront instances where Croatia's actions in Bosnia harmed the goals of US policy in Bosnia & Herzegovina?

Answer. Croatia has an enduring interest in Bosnia and Herzegovina's security, stability and Euro-Atlantic integration. The best counter to secessionist efforts is a functional Federation. BiH Croats play a key role in the Federation's governance, and Croatia can support these efforts. If confirmed, I would engage Croatia's Government to urge constructive cooperation among BiH officials to advance reforms that benefit all BiH citizens, including the construction of the Southern Gas Interconnection that would reduce dependence on Russian energy.

China

Question. Every summer, the Government of Croatia allows China to send Chinese police officers to major tourist hubs to help police Chinese tourists. What is your opinion of such programs? Do you think their expansion in Croatia would be a good or bad idea?

Answer. The United States will continue to voice concerns regarding the PRC's reach outside its borders to harass, intimidate, and threaten into silence individuals who are critical of the PRC Government. The Department remains concerned about the PRC's use of transnational repression, including through overseas police service stations. There is a robust bilateral partnership between the United States and Croatia's police forces on a broad range of long-term law enforcement cooperation. If confirmed, I will continue close work with our partners and Allies to address and counter the PRC's transnational repression efforts.

Question. China and Chinese-owned entities have been buying up ports and related infrastructure throughout the Mediterranean. It has been reported that the United States pressured Croatia to not allow a Chinese consortium to win the tender to build a new container terminal at the Port of Rijeka. Instead, the contract was cancelled and a new group, with European participants, will undertake the project instead. If confirmed, do you commit to encouraging the Croatian Government to reject Chinese proposals and instead work with companies and contractors that meet EU and NATO standards for security?

Answer. The Government of Croatia understands the importance of ensuring national assets and critical industries are not vulnerable to malign actors. If confirmed, I will engage U.S. investors and partners to make concrete deals with long-term value that meet EU and international standards for Croatia and the region. The United States also supports Croatia's ongoing efforts to adopt rigorous investment screening and public procurement reform, which protects against malign actors working counter to shared U.S. and Croatian interests.

Question. Despite the European Union having called upon its members to implement a Foreign Investment Screening regimen, Croatia has not yet done so. If confirmed, will you pledge to encourage and assist the Government of Croatia in creating a strong system for screening out foreign investments that may pose a threat to the security of Croatia, as well as to the European Union and NATO?

Answer. Croatia understands the importance of establishing a national security screening mechanism for high-risk investments - not only to protect its own national security, but also the security of NATO and EU partners. The United States and Croatia are cooperating closely with the EU and OECD on best practices, standards, and model legislation to bring this priority to reality in the near future. If confirmed, I will encourage Croatia to adopt legislation and implement a mechanism to evaluate foreign direct investments on the basis of national security concerns.

Trafficking in Persons

In the State Department's 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report, Croatia was listed as Tier 2 for convicting more traffickers but gaps still remain in its anti-trafficking work.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Croatia operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Croatia to strengthen training for judges and prosecutors on trafficking, victim rights, and victim-centered approaches. I will encourage the Government of Croatia to make significant efforts to convict more traffickers and identify more victims.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to reporting the reality of the trafficking situation on the ground in Croatia through the annual Trafficking in Persons report?

Answer. I do.

Religious Freedom

In the State Department's 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Croatia generally lacks respect for religious freedom.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. The State Department and U.S. Embassy Zagreb has strongly promoted religious freedom in Croatia, and Croatia has made strong progress. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts by urging the Government's further progress on resolving Holocaust and post Holocaust-era legacy issues, such as the restitution of private, heirless, and communal property and fostering Holocaust remembrance. I will raise with representatives of the Croatian Government and civil society the status and treatment of religious or belief minorities, antisemitism, and Holocaust revisionism. I will encourage Croatia's continued involvement in the International Religious Freedom or Belief Alliance. I will dedicate Embassy resources to attending, supporting, and organizing events on Holocaust remembrance, tolerance, diversity, and interreligious dialogue, including through Public Affairs' small grants programs.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will raise with representatives of the Croatian Government and civil society the status and treatment of religious or belief minorities, antisemitism, and Holocaust revisionism. I will encourage Croatia's continued involvement in the International Religious Freedom or Belief Alliance.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Croatia increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. If confirmed, I will dedicate Embassy resources to attending, supporting, and organizing events on Holocaust remembrance, tolerance, diversity, and interreligious dialogue, including through Public Affairs' small grants programs.

Human Rights

In the State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report, Croatia was noted as having government censorship and intimidation of reporters, among other human rights issues.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will leverage our strong partnership to advance shared priorities - including promoting respect for democracy and human rights, including related to media freedom. I will work publicly and privately with Croatia to ensure continued commitment to its Summit for Democracy goal to advance human rights by eliminating sexual violence and harassment and to promote full and equitable access, safety, and equal participation of all persons, including members of marginalized and underrepresented populations in Croatia.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will personally and regularly engage civil society organizations to strengthen democracy and human rights.

Question. Croatia has been criticized for its regular efforts to push back and expel migrants, refugees and asylum seekers at its borders. How will you work with Croatia to address the increasing migration flows coming into Europe?

Answer. The European Commission, UNHCR, and others in the international community (including the United States) pushed Croatia to establish an Independent Monitoring Mechanism (IMM) for border police. The Ministry of Interior established the mechanism in June 2021, and evaluations of the mechanism have included recommendations to strengthen the border police and improve accountability using GPS tracking of police patrols to inform after-action investigations; consolidating case files; collecting biometrics from all border crossers, whether applying for asylum or not; and improving information sharing between police stations. If confirmed, I will continue the work with the Croatian Government to strengthen the IMM and to partner with the United States and EU to share best practices to ensure lawful treatment of migrants, refugees, and asylum seekers.

International Organizations

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to find, recruit, and retain qualified Americans in the U.N. system.

Answer. Ensuring that the United States and our like-minded allies and partners do not cede influence in the U.N. system to those who do not share our values and who are not committed to the foundational principles of the U.N. is of vital importance to U.S. foreign policy and national security interests. If confirmed, I will work directly with the International Organizations Bureau, the Government of Croatia, and other stakeholders to augment the number of Americans while also encouraging citizens of likeminded nations to work throughout the U.N. system.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you can work with USUN and IO colleagues to promote American or likeminded initiatives within the U.N. system, including on technical matters at specialized bodies.

Answer. Croatia is closely aligned with the United States across the spectrum of foreign policy, national security, and economic issues, and if confirmed, I will take full advantage of this close alignment to advance U.S. and shared interests. I will ensure that my team and I maintain regular contact with host government counterparts to ensure maximum coordination on upcoming U.N. votes and other actions in the U.N. and other multilateral bodies, including actions to support Ukraine and further isolate Russia in the international system.

Question. How will you engage with the Croatian Government to ensure that perpetrators of sexual exploitation and abuse from U.N. missions and U.N. peacekeeping missions are held accountable?

Answer. The United States remains a strong supporter of holding U.N. peacekeepers accountable for SEA to include advocacy to end impunity for the commission of SEA-related crimes both by troops and U.N. personnel working in overseas missions. In 2022, we strongly supported the U.N. General Assembly's annual resolution on "Criminal Accountability of United Nations Officials and Experts on Mission," which urges all member states to consider establishing jurisdiction over crimes committed by their nationals while serving abroad with the U.N. We further urged the Special Coordinator for Improving Response to SEA to share more information through the "Conduct in U.N. Field Missions" database and to expand prevention and accountability efforts. If confirmed, I will ensure Embassy Zagreb continues to engage the Croatian Government on SEA accountability as well as demand strong action on SEA prevention and accountability throughout all peacekeeping mandate renewals, annual mission monitoring and evaluation visits, and peacekeeping-related U.N. Security Council products.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO NATHALIE RAYES BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. This week was yet another reminder of the pervasive power the CCP wields over Chinese society, as all evidence of former Foreign Minister Qin Gang's career and presence are being wiped from the Chinese ministry's webpage. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose.

Question. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Croatia ties.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system."

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment's notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is in our national interest. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in Croatia and the region.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Croatia and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to counter China's efforts to expand its influence in Croatia and the region.

U.S.-Croatia relations have been described as positive since Croatia gained independence in 1991. Croatia sought, and quickly gained, accession to NATO and the EU after independence and consistently maintained defense spending close to or over NATO's 2 percent spending target. They are also a party to the U.S. Visa Waiver and Global Entry programs which expedite international travel between our countries.

Question. What is your characterization of the existing relationship between the U.S. and Croatia?

Answer. Croatia is a close NATO Ally and like-minded partner. The bilateral relationship is built on common values and shared priorities. These strong ties have produced a range of recent successes: Croatia entered the Visa Waiver Program in 2021, we signed an income tax treaty in 2022, and Croatia entered the Global Entry program in 2023—all good news for American business and investment. Further, the Senate recently gave its advice and consent to an Extradition Treaty and a Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty to bring our law enforcement partnership into the 21st century. If confirmed, I pledge to deepen and expand our close partnership with Croatia.

Question. If confirmed, how would you support Croatia as it addresses energy and security issues?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Croatia to expand its role in advancing energy security and diversification in the region. In 2021 Croatia launched the Krk LNG terminal, replacing Russian gas with largely U.S. LNG. Croatia is doubling Krk's capacity to 6.1 billion cubic meters, allowing future exports. Croatia, with its significant geothermal energy resources, can also be a clean energy net exporter. Croatia is a member of NATO and the Adriatic Five (A5) Charter, a forum to prepare regional partners for NATO membership. If confirmed, I will encourage Croatia to continue its contributions to international peace and security.

Question. If confirmed, which specific programs and offices of the State Department would you utilize to combat corruption and rule-of-law concerns that remain in Croatia?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work with the State Department's Bureaus of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs and Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor to help Croatia combat corruption and strengthen the rule of law. Croatia remains committed to its Summit for Democracy goal to advance human rights. I will work with Croatia on its National Plan for the Elimination of Sexual Violence, which includes law enforcement training. I will also work with Croatia to promote full and equitable access, safety, and equal participation for national minorities, and I will support Croatia's Anti-Corruption Action Plan to increase government and legislative transparency and improve public procurement oversight.

The CIA World Factbook notes that over 86 percent of Croatian citizens identify as Roman Catholic. I note that you have limited overseas experience leading diplomatic engagements, are the President and CEO of a progressive Democrat party advocacy group, and a Board Member of Planned Parenthood.

Question. If confirmed, can you assure this committee that you will actively oppose all efforts to advance a pro-abortion policy in Croatia?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to upholding all provisions of law, including those restricting the use of Department of State funds to lobby for or against abortion. My intention is to focus on the mandate and priorities of the Embassy to support women's and girls' economic security, prevention and protection from gender-based violence, and their meaningful participation in political and security decision-making in Croatia.

Question. Will you promote a change to Croatia's constitution to allow marriage between same-sex couples?

Answer. If confirmed, I will follow State Department policy and U.S. law. The United States will continue to promote respect for the human rights of all persons, including LGBTQI+ persons, globally.

Question. Should the United States promote an interpretation of transgenderism—that is only supported by a small minority of Americans—in Croatia at the risk of alienating socially conservative Croatians?

Answer. If confirmed, I will follow State Department policy and U.S. law. The Department's actions bolster inclusive democracy, advance human rights, and promote global peace, security, and prosperity by helping ensure everyone has a voice in their democratic society and governance. The United States will continue to promote respect for the human rights of all persons, including LGBTQI+ persons, globally.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO NATHALIE RAYES BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

On Sept. 20, 2022, I spoke on the Senate floor about my opposition to the President's nomination of Leopoldo Martínez Nucete to be United States executive director of the Inter-American Development Bank. I said that Mr. Martínez Nucete was "socialist congressman in Venezuela" during the Venezuelan regime of Hugo Chávez and that he had expressed hostility to the role played in international development by faith-based organizations. I specifically cited answers by Mr. Martínez Nucete to questions I had asked, in which he said that "the key to development" was "not faith" and that the role of faith-based organizations should be limited because "there should be no entanglement between government and religion." You subsequently told reporters that "Senator Ted Cruz's mischaracterization of Leopoldo Martínez is nothing but an outright lie." In your testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, you "pledge[d] to work with this committee and Congress to advance U.S. interests." I am concerned that your comments are in tension with this commitment.

Question. Which characterizations in my speech do you believe to have been mischaracterizations?

Answer. I regret the tone of my statement. It was a poor choice of words and I have relayed the sentiment to your staff. The advice and consent power of the U.S. Senate underpins American representative democracy, and if confirmed I commit to working closely and transparently with you and all members of Congress to ensure U.S. policy toward Croatia reflects Administration priorities and the will of Congress.

I have known Leopoldo Martínez for eleven years and can say with confidence that he, along with many other migrants like myself, share a deep and abiding love and respect for the democratic principles enshrined in the Constitution of the United States. Unfortunately, the rights and freedoms to which all Americans are entitled are not afforded to the people of Venezuela, who under Nicolas Maduro face political oppression, the closure of the democratic space, and one of the hemisphere's worst humanitarian crises. Venezuela's democratic opposition, among them Acción Democrática, stand in defiance of Maduro and are working in unity toward the restoration of free and fair elections that will allow the people of Venezuela to determine their own futures.

Question. Do you acknowledge that Mr. Martínez Nucete was a member of Acción Democrática (AD), a political party that is an affiliate of Socialist International?

Answer. Yes, I acknowledge that Mr. Martínez Nucete was a member of Acción Democrática, a center-left political party that has been a member of the Socialist International since the 1980s. It should also be noted that AD opposed communist Cuba, Hugo Chávez, and Nicolas Maduro, and currently holds membership in the Venezuelan opposition's Unitary Platform seeking a democratic solution.

In your testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on July 26, you committed to renounce your Venezuelan citizenship should you be confirmed. The process for doing so is outlined in the Venezuelan constitution. I would like to ask you to clarify the process you envision implementing should be you confirmed.

Question. What type of consular services will you use, in what country, and in what timeline?

Answer. The United States does not recognize the regime of Nicolas Maduro, but instead recognizes the 2015 National Assembly as the Government of Venezuela. I have, therefore, provided my petition of renunciation of citizenship to the recognized Presidential Commissioner for Foreign Relations of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela resident in Washington, DC.

Question. Do you anticipate providing the committee with the Certificate of Renunciation of Venezuelan Nationality, issued by Venezuelan authorities pursuant to the Venezuelan constitution?

Answer. I will provide the committee with any documentation readily available to me associated with my petition for renunciation of my Venezuelan citizenship.

NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18, 2023

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:33 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Benjamin L. Cardin, Chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Cardin [presiding], Menendez, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Merkley, Booker, Schatz, Van Hollen, Duckworth, Risch, Rubio, Romney, Young, Barrasso, Cruz, Hagerty, and Scott.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN, U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

The CHAIRMAN. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

Today's hearing carries great importance for the United States, for Israel, and the region. The attacks by Hamas just over ten days ago in Israel mark the deadliest day for Jews since the Holocaust.

Abducting elderly in wheelchairs, burning people alive, killing babies in front of parents—it was not only horrific and barbaric but methodically planned and carried out.

Hamas has started a war. Given the dangerous state of emergency that Israel faces the United States needs a confirmed U.S. Ambassador in Jerusalem.

We need someone there to reinforce the message that the United States stands shoulder to shoulder with the state of Israel as a response to the unprecedented terrorist attack.

We need someone to lead the remarkable, selfless U.S. personnel who have been working nonstop at mission Israel. We need an Ambassador who can work with our Israeli partners and help provide services to over 600,000 American citizens here.

So, Secretary Lew, it was with great urgency that we hold this nomination hearing today. I am committed to getting you in place in Israel as soon as possible. I want to thank Senator Risch for working with me so we could expedite this hearing today. I thank him for that.

I think we both agree that speed is of the essence in having a confirmed Ambassador to Israel. So I am going to ask the cooperation of our colleagues.

I am going to ask that questions for the record be submitted by close of business today and we will make every effort to make sure we get those responses to you by this weekend.

We have scheduled a business meeting for next week for the vote on this nomination. I ask the committee's cooperation because of the urgency of voting on a confirmed Ambassador for the state of Israel.

Since October 7th Hamas has killed more than 1,000 innocent people and injured thousands more. They have viciously killed hostages and are still holding others, including American citizens.

I cannot overstate the urgency for the United States to have a confirmed Ambassador on the ground to help deliver U.S. support for Israel, to deal with the hostage situation, to deal with the humanitarian needs that we know exist.

We need an Ambassador who at this critical and delicate time can speak with authority and engage diplomatically in the region at the highest level.

Secretary Lew's experience, gravitas, and political acumen makes him eminently qualified to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Israel. I have seen firsthand Jack Lew's commitment to public service, his integrity, his dedication to American values, his understanding of the United States' national security needs, and his deep understanding and respect for the legislative branch of government. I also know his effectiveness in crafting solutions to very difficult problems.

I want to thank Secretary Lew for his service to our country and your willingness to continue that service in this critically important position as Ambassador to Israel and I want to thank your family because we know this is a family sacrifice. Thank you once again for understanding the need for Jack's service to our nation.

The last time Secretary Lew was before the Senate as a nominee he was confirmed by an overwhelming majority of 71 to 26.

Now is not the time to play political games. We need to make sure that the other nations and terrorist groups do not—

[Disturbance in hearing room.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

As I said, now is not the time to play political games. We need to make sure that other nations and terrorist groups do not exploit the crisis and open new fronts in the conflict.

We need to be clear with everyone from Hezbollah in Lebanon to the regime in Iran, to Assad in Syria, and even Putin in Russia: Do not even think about joining or expanding the war.

To that end, we also need to confirm Ambassadors to other critical posts in the region. Doing so would allow Ambassador Lew to work with Senate-confirmed counterparts in Oman, Beirut, and Cairo to make sure Americans throughout the region are safe and our interests are represented to the fullest extent.

Secretary Lew, there is clearly no shortages of challenges facing you in this post. I look forward to hearing how you plan to address them and what Congress can do to support that. We need your eyes and ears to better understand what is going on in Jerusalem and Ramallah.

We need you to keep pushing forward on normalization agreements between Israel and Saudi Arabia. We need you to make it clear to our allies and enemies that when our friends are in trouble the United States has their back. But most importantly of all we need you confirmed.

Without objection I will enter into the record the letters of support for Secretary Lew including from the American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League.

Without objection.

The CHAIRMAN. At this time let me turn to our very distinguished ranking member, Senator Risch.

STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for consulting with me as we have over the past week to get to where we are today. We are here today to support Israel by filling a vacancy in the position for Ambassador to Israel.

We have an acting charge there in Stephanie Hallett. She is doing a great job. When I visited with the prime minister earlier this year she was very helpful to me, meeting that—many other officials I met with. So we do have things being done there on the ground.

I agree with you. We need this thing filled. The problem I have is it needs to be filled with the right person.

The only thing worse than having it empty would be having the wrong person there and I have some issues in that regard which we are going to talk about and hopefully clear the air today one way or another.

Eighteen years ago Israel took the brave step of dismantling Israeli settlements in Gaza and—

[Disturbance in hearing room.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

[Disturbance in hearing room.]

Senator RISCH [continuing]. Eighteen years ago Israel took the brave step of dismantling Israeli settlements in Gaza, handing the territory over to the Palestinian Authority.

This good faith effort has been a disaster for the people of Gaza and for Israel as well. Now Israel faces an unprecedented crisis on the scale of the September 11th attacks against the United States.

Masked gunmen killed entire families in their homes, massacred babies, beheaded some and the elderly, and dragged hostages across the border to Gaza. These attacks were brutal and horrific. We mourn the loss of over 1,400 Israelis and 31 Americans and people from numerous other countries.

As Israel rightly responds to safeguard its citizens it is absolutely imperative that Israel has the freedom to act until they get the job done. This happened to us in—and to Europe in World War II.

The Nazis had taken over Germany and were marching across Europe. We made the decision, our allies made the decision, that the organization—the Nazis—could not exist any further, and we did not just go to battle to defeat Germany on the battlefield. We went to war to defeat and dismantle and eliminate the Nazis.

We did that. It was difficult. We eliminated the Nazis as a military, as a political force, as a cultural force, and everything else. The Israelis are attempting to do the same thing now with Hamas, who richly deserve it.

Almost immediately after——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Let me make it clear we will not tolerate interruptions in our hearing. You see what is going to be happening. We ask that those that have strong views there is a place to express but it is not to disrupt this hearing. I will not tolerate that.

Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH [continuing]. Almost immediately after the attacks on Israel we saw calls for a ceasefire and mediation. These calls are misguided, dangerous, and fail to recognize Israel's legitimate right to protect its people and restore deterrence.

What happened in Gaza is directly linked to Iran. That is so important. What happened in Gaza is directly linked to Iran.

The Biden administration cannot wish away the Iranian threat or appease the Iranian regime with promises of unfrozen funds and sanctions relief. The attacks in Israel and reoccurring attacks against our partners, troops, and diplomats are proof of a failed Iran policy.

Iran is the supporter of Hamas, which is impotent without Iran. Unfortunately, the fact of the matter is that Iran has more resources to support terrorism today than it did in 2019. U.S. sanctions enforcement under this administration have been utterly lacking.

Iran has earned a shocking $80 billion in oil revenue since the Biden administration took office. Iran's oil economy, once hobbled at 250,000 barrels a day, is now selling almost 2 million barrels of oil every day, mostly to China. We know where that money is going.

Iran's Ghost Fleet used to evade U.S. sanctions has grown from 70 vessels to over 300 during the Biden administration. The unfreezing of funds first in Iraq and now the whopping $6 billion from South Korea are completely unacceptable and it makes Americans and our partners less safe.

It should come as no surprise that these attacks occurred immediately after the Biden administration unfroze the $6 billion and also gave $75 million directly to UNRWA, over my strenuous objections, by the way.

On Palestinian policy the Biden administration argued that restoring funding, that I objected to, would give the Palestinian Authority the leverage to promote moderate Palestinian voices and reform organizations like UNRWA. Two years later we have seen no reform.

Violence is at record levels, pay for slay is active, and many Palestinians identify with terror groups to meet their aspirations. Like Iran policy, it is time for a wholesale reevaluation of Palestinian policy.

So today we are here to help Israel. We are here to look at the vacancy that exists, the nominee that has been put before us. We are here to help Israel, to not hurt it.

Secretary Lew, I have reservations on your appointment as America's Ambassador to Israel. Not only will you need to support Israel as it responds to these attacks but also as it contends with the enduring and, indeed, existential Iranian threat, which I think is an underlying and foundational issue here.

I have reservations about your ability to do that. You played a key role in supporting the Obama administration's nuclear negotiations and I have had long-standing concerns over a lack of transparency before Congress on the transfers of cash to the regime.

You have publicly insisted that transfers of cash do not free up Iranian resources for terror activities. I fundamentally agree with that assessment. Really importantly, it is alleged that you lied or at least misled us, this very committee.

On that I have three items I want to insert in the record and I will, Mr. Chairman. Two of them are opinion pieces from the Washington Post and the third one is a report by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations which has been authored and I would like to enter those at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection they will be included in the record.

Senator RISCH. So I am going to have some questions for you about the—your activities in what I think was a backhanded way of supporting Iran, and with that I am going to yield back.

I am here to support Israel today, help every way I can. But I said it is important we get the right person in this position.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch.

We will now hear from Secretary Lew. Your full statement will be made part of the record and you may proceed as you wish.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. JACOB J. LEW, OF NEW YORK, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE STATE OF ISRAEL

Mr. LEW. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman Cardin, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, I am honored to appear as the President's nominee to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the state of Israel.

I am grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for the trust and confidence that they have shown in me at this critical moment. If confirmed I look forward to working closely with you and other members of Congress to advance U.S. and Israeli interests.

Joining me today are my wife, Ruth, and our children. They supported this mission when the immediate focus was to expand the Abraham Accords by further integrating Israel into the Middle East region and they remain supportive as Israel in the midst of a war with the dream of working towards more peaceful days.

As always, knowing that they are behind me is at the core of my ability to serve. I cannot remember a time when Israel's struggle for security was not at the forefront of my mind. I came of age in a family that combined belief in religious Zionism and labor Zionism.

When I was 12, the age of my oldest grandchild now, we followed daily reports of the Six-Day War as closely as you could with four daily newspapers and broadcast news. In 1973, the year I came to Washington as a young man, I learned of the Yom Kippur War at synagogue on our most solemn day of prayer and I worried deeply about the survival of the state of Israel.

The horrific and murderous terrorist attacks just days ago shattered another holy day, and learning again of an attack on Israel at a prayer service was an experience that I had hoped never to repeat.

At this moment there is no greater mission than to be asked to strengthen the ties between the United States and Israel, to work toward peace in a region that has known so much war and destruction.

The savage attack demands the condemnation of the world and President Biden has made clear that the United States stands with Israel in its efforts to defend itself. I will do my utmost to end the horrific attacks by Hamas and ensure that Israel has what it needs to defend itself and I will spare no effort in working to help American citizens now captive to return home safely, and I will work to root out payments to terrorists and their families as rewards for their heinous crimes.

If confirmed I will work to prevent other state or nonstate actors from expanding this conflict to new fronts and I will coordinate with the international community to address the humanitarian crisis facing innocent civilians in Gaza who are being used as human shields by Hamas.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I want to be clear. Iran is a threat to regional stability and to Israel's existence.

If confirmed, I will uphold President Biden's commitment to deny Iran a nuclear weapon and warning to the region that anyone who is thinking of taking advantage of the current crisis do not.

I will work to strengthen Israel's security. Israel is our closest partner in the region and its security is paramount. The President has been clear. The U.S. commitment to Israel is ironclad, demonstrated in part by our $38 billion memorandum of understanding.

In the midst of war our long-term strategic objectives must also remain clear. If confirmed, I will work to advance comprehensive and lasting peace through a negotiated two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and more broadly to build upon the Abraham Accords and promote more integration, normalization, and cooperation across the region with Israel as a fully recognized partner.

I look forward to deepening economic and commercial relationships, enhancing cooperation and economic security in sectors such as cybersecurity, artificial intelligence, transportation, smart agricultural technologies, and clean energy. And as Israel's economy grows and diversifies the U.S. and Israel must enhance our close cooperation on foreign investment risk management.

If confirmed, I will continue to oppose all efforts to isolate and delegitimize Israel internationally and support the global fight against anti-Semitism. I will advance the tireless work of this administration to firmly reject the boycott, divestment, and sanctions movement while respecting the rights of all Americans to free speech.

I will work to reinforce collective efforts to combat anti-Semitism, building on President Biden's national strategy to counter anti-Semitism including the abhorrent incidents in the wake of the Hamas attacks on October 7th.

More broadly, if confirmed I will work to further strengthen our 75-year-old partnership with Israel and deepen the bonds between our people.

Finally, as someone who has dedicated much of my life to public service I want to thank the talented and committed Foreign Service officers, civil services, and foreign nationals who are doing an extraordinary job at a time of violence and war representing the United States in Washington and abroad.

Just watching this morning our able DCM standing beside the President knowing that her family and the families of all of our people who are over there have been shaken by the last 10 days.

As a citizen I have personal appreciation for their dedication, courage, and I think that their service deserves the admiration and respect of all of us and all of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, thank you for the opportunity to testify here today and I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Lew follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. JACOB J. LEW

Chairman Cardin, Ranking Member Risch, members of the committee, I am honored to appear as the President's nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the State of Israel, and grateful to President Biden and Secretary Blinken for their trust and confidence at this critical moment. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with you and other members of Congress to advance U.S. and Israeli interests.

As always, knowing they are behind me is at the core of my ability to serve.

I cannot remember a time when Israel's struggle for security was not at the forefront of my mind. I came of age in a family that combined belief in religious Zionism and labor Zionism. When I was 12, the age of my oldest grandchild today, we followed daily reports of the Six-Day War with as close to real-time information as four daily papers and broadcast news would provide. In 1973, the year I came to Washington as a young man, I learned of the Yom Kippur War at synagogue on our most solemn day of prayer, and I worried deeply about the survival of the State of Israel. The horrific and murderous terrorist attacks just days ago shattered another holy day, and learning again of an attack on Israel while at a prayer service was an experience I had hoped never to repeat.

ican citizens now captive to return home safely. And I will work to root out payments to terrorists and their families as rewards for their heinous crimes.

If confirmed, I will work to prevent other state or non-state actors from expanding this conflict to new fronts. And I will coordinate with the international community to address the humanitarian crisis facing innocent civilians in Gaza who are being used as human shields by Hamas.

And Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I want to be clear: Iran is a threat to regional stability and to Israel's existence. If confirmed, I will uphold President Biden's warning to anyone in the region who might try to take advantage of the current crisis: Don't.

I will work to strengthen Israel's security. Israel is our closest partner in the region, and its security is paramount. The President has been clear, the U.S. commitment to Israel is ironclad, demonstrated, in part, by our 38-billion-dollar Memorandum of Understanding covering FY 2019–FY 2028.

In the midst of war, our long-term strategic objectives must also remain clear. If confirmed, I will work to advance comprehensive and lasting peace through a negotiated two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and, more broadly, to build upon the Abraham Accords and promote more integration, normalization, and cooperation across the region, with Israel as a fully recognized partner.

Their dedication and courage deserve our admiration and appreciation.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, thank you for the opportunity to testify and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Secretary Lew.

Before we start the five-minute rounds I have the obligatory questions that we ask all nominees that should be answered by either a yes or no.

Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Mr. LEW. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to keep this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Mr. LEW. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

Mr. LEW. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Mr. LEW. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You answered all of those questions correctly. Thank you very much.

Mr. LEW. I have done it before, Mr. Chairman.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. We are off to a good start. We will now start five-minute rounds.

Let me ask you a question about your view of the U.S.-Israel relations. In 1948 President Truman did something that the State Department quite frankly did not recommend that he do.

He did that because of his belief that Israel shared the same values of the United States in a part of the world where we had no other country that shared those values, and that relationship has grown over that period of time, as you pointed out, including the memorandum of understanding, the billions of dollars of aid, the development of Iron Dome, and the list goes on and on—shared intelligence information and technology.

So I would just like to get your view as to that relationship, why it is special and what you have done in your public life to help strengthen the ties between Israel and the United States.

Mr. LEW. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

It will come as no surprise to you that I grew up believing Harry Truman was a hero, that he did not have to do what he did and the state of Israel may not have come into existence and lasted had he not done that.

I think the relationship between the United States and Israel is special because we share values and because, as the President said as recently as this morning, the United States understands that without the state of Israel it is not just the people of Israel who are not safe but Jews around the world are not safe without a state of Israel.

So the relationship between the United States and Israel is at the core of who I am and what I believe is important for us, having an ally in the region that we can count on.

And while my career has not for the most part been in foreign policy, foreign policy has been integrated into many of the roles I have played, as the director of OMB, as the chief of staff, as the Secretary of the Treasury.

I was the OMB director who helped design the first MOU to make a multi-year commitment of security assistance to Israel. I was the Deputy Secretary of State who helped Israel become a member of the OECD, which is the membership organization of the developed nations of the world that Israel desperately wanted at a time when it was being marginalized and being thrown out of some international bodies.

I was the OMB director who helped fund Israel's missile defense on multiple occasions and not without concerns about its cost and some concerns about the scope of our commitments, and I have not shied away from expressing my views when the position of the United States and the position of Israel require public officials who represent our government to do so.

I am happy to discuss those matters. But I believe that my reputation as somebody who stands with Israel is beyond question. I think the Government of Israel has made that clear in things that they have said, even since my nomination.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the immediate need for the United States is to help Israel deal with this war, providing the support it needs, dealing with hostage relief, dealing with the potential escalation and preventing that from happening. That is going to be the immediate concern.

But looking beyond that—and you mentioned the Abraham Accords and normalization—one of Hamas' objectives was to derail the normalization discussions that are taking place in the Middle East with the most visible being between the United States, Israel, and Saudi Arabia.

So tell me a little bit about your view as to how you keep these normalization discussions alive during a time of war.

Mr. LEW. Mr. Chairman, it is going to be challenge until this war ends for people there or here to focus on the day after. But I deeply believe that those of us who have responsibility in this area if I—as I will if I am confirmed have to keep our eye on the strategic objectives.

Because you look at the question of negotiations between Israel and Saudi Arabia—if it was in the national interest of Israel and Saudi Arabia two weeks ago it is in the interest of Israel and Saudi Arabia when this war ends, and we are a critical part of that conversation.

I have had extensive dealings with many of the governments in the region. I would pledge my utmost support to making that conversation one that can get back on track. As I said in my opening remarks, it was the mission I thought I was going over to start with. I dearly pray that we get back to that mission soon.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Risch?

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And first of all, let me say that I agree with virtually everything that you have said, particularly as the underlying issue here, which I think is the warming relations that were happening between Saudi Arabia and Israel.

I think those were probably the precipitating factor that caused Iran to pull the trigger, and Iran did pull the trigger, in my judgment, got the people who are Arabs to rise up against Israel, knowing exactly what the consequences would be and then attempting to, and successfully in many instances, turn the world against Israel for responding as they did.

I think you have got that called just right. I think that that is what has happened. Like you I pray that when this is over that we can continue on, and a number of us are meeting with the Saudi officials to urge that.

My problem, of course, goes back to your performance previously, and to quote from the Washington Post opinion piece, it says “Lew must explain why in 2015 he promised the same committee that he would not allow Iran access to the U.S. financial system under the recently announced nuclear deal with Iran, yet secretly tried to do just that by working to turn $5.7 billion in Iranian assets into easily-convertible currency via U.S. banks.”

So I am going to pursue that line at this point. I want to ask you, first of all, if you recall sitting in that very chair in July of 2015 and stating, quote, “We will continue—under the JCPOA Iran will continue to be denied access to U.S. financial and commercial markets.”

Do you recall stating—

Mr. LEW. Mr. Chairman, I remember that testimony well and I believe that we kept Iran from becoming part of the U.S. financial system, and I am happy to discuss the implementation of the JCPOA.

I know you and I may not agree on the policy of—

Senator RISCH. That is an understatement.

Mr. LEW [continuing]. The JCPOA, but what we did was we implemented a policy that was transparent that I testified before this committee on in terms of what was being done.

We negotiated with Iran to have them roll back their nuclear program in exchange for which they would get access to money that was their money that we had frozen. All we did was facilitate that transaction. So we did not welcome them back into the U.S. financial system.

Senator RISCH. Did you on February 24th, 2016, issue a specific license to Bank Muscat authorizing Iranian assets worth roughly $5.7 billion to flow through the United States financial system?

Mr. LEW. We did issue licenses. I do not recall—

Senator RISCH. That is a yes?

Mr. LEW [continuing]. I do not recall whether those licenses were the vehicle through which funds moved. I do not believe they were. But the concern was we had made an agreement to return money transparently in this committee and returning that money was the bargain for our nuclear deal. That is all we did.

Senator RISCH. Are you telling us you notified us that on February 24th, 2016, you had authorized that specific license to Bank Muscat?

Mr. LEW. Mr. Chairman, that was a specific license and there is not a practice of notifying specific licenses. General licenses are published. Specific licenses are not.

Senator RISCH. I want to quote one of the executives from Bank Muscat when they said there was a gigantic breakthrough which has assured Iran of almost full global financial inclusion, and that was in response to the license that you issued on February 24th, 2016.

Mr. LEW. Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot speak to what someone at the Bank of Muscat said. What I can tell you is the Government of Iran believed that we did not give them what they expected, which was full access to the world financial system.

They complained that my actions were what kept them from getting full access to the world financial system. I know that some of you are going to ask me questions about what my team said when they went around the world.

My team went around the world telling banks all over the world we did not lift the sanctions on terrorism, we did not lift the sanctions on human rights violations, we did not lift the sanctions on regional destabilization.

Be careful, and Iran thought that kept them from getting what they thought they should get. We did the letter of the agreement, gave them what was agreed to in the JCPOA. Nothing more.

Senator RISCH. Well, my time is almost up. I have to tell you that this is something we knew nothing about at the time that you issued that license and we believe that that was a direct contravention of what you told us here in this committee in July of 2015, and to be honest with you I am deeply disappointed with that.

As I said, to me this whole thing is about Iran and holding hands with Iran under the table does not work for me, and I am deeply disappointed that you issued that license, deeply disappointed that you did not tell us about it, deeply disappointed that you misled us in July when you—when we had that meeting.

My time is up, Mr. Chairman. I yield, underwhelmed and unpersuaded. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Secretary, congratulations on your nomination. It comes at an incredibly critical time in the U.S.-Israel relationship.

I want to try to go through some—a few things in the five minutes I have. Do you agree with me that Iran is an existential threat to the state of Israel?

Mr. LEW. Yes, I do, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. And do you agree with me that their nuclear program, where their enrichment is beyond any commercial grade purpose, if continued is an existential threat to the state of Israel?

Mr. LEW. I have believed that the enrichment of uranium in Iran is a threat to Israel in the world and that was why I supported the JCPOA because it created a bigger wall of time.

I think we are closer to that now because since the JCPOA has been ended in terms of our participation they have enriched more.

Senator MENENDEZ. You are aware that there are many efforts to delegitimize the state of Israel, particularly at the United Nations.

In 2016 the Obama administration, to my disappointment which I expressed at the time, failed to veto a resolution that did, from my perspective, exactly that, make an attempt to delegitimize the state of Israel at the United Nations.

If you were to be confirmed under these present circumstances and assuming that it was such a resolution, would you recommend that the President veto similar resolutions that single out Israel, delegitimizes actions of self-defense, and play down the role of Hamas and other organizations that undermine the prospects for peace?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I believe deeply that the U.N. needs to be fair and not condemn Israel and ignore the actions of terrorist organizations like Hamas.

I do not believe it is right for the U.N. to adopt resolutions that single Israel out, and I have always believed that the U.N. needs to be more even handed.

I cannot comment on a hypothetical resolution. I would only note that when that decision was made it was made by President Obama after a very, very much worse resolution had been substantially modified and that was the—

Senator MENENDEZ. A worse resolution does not make a bad resolution any better.

Mr. LEW. No. No. I understand that. But there is always a dynamic in the United Nations on that support.

Senator MENENDEZ. The point is that at the U.N., Israel is constantly vilified. It is constantly made the central focus when other countries in the world who have significant human rights violations go untouched.

And so you are not going to be at the U.N.

Mr. LEW. No, I—

Senator MENENDEZ. But you are going to be part of a national security team as the Ambassador to Israel that is going to have input in an administration and so I am trying to understand where you will come from at that point.

Mr. LEW. Well, I can say that if I am confirmed to be Ambassador to Israel I will have a single focus on how I approach these questions that is different from the focus that you have in other roles.

I will be an advocate for doing the things the United States should do to protect Israel including at the U.N.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you. Let me ask you, what do you see your role, if confirmed, as it relates to the challenges of the Palestinian people?

Hamas is a terrorist organization. They are barbaric. There is no question about that. And Israel must do what is necessary to wipe them off the face of the earth.

Having said that, the Palestinian people in and of themselves are not Hamas. So what do you see your role as the U.S. Ambassador as it relates to finding a better future for them?

Mr. LEW. Senator, as I said in my opening remarks, I am keeping focused not just on today but on where we go after the conflict—the war ends and I think we have to be back in a place where questions are being asked about how do you have a sustainable peace, how do you have security for Israeli and Palestinian citizens.

My heart goes out to innocent civilians who were injured, whether it was the gruesome atrocities on that Saturday or innocent civilians who were living in areas where Hamas is hiding and they get killed because of collateral damage.

This has to end, but it has to end with Israel's security being guaranteed, and it is a very difficult moment to remember that we are going to get beyond this current state of affairs and hopefully, hopefully, coming out of this there will be some more willingness and parties able to have conversations about building a better future.

We need to worry about refugees. I have been heartened by some of the progress I have read about in the last 24 hours on humanitarian corridors, on getting food and water to people.

I think Hamas is using Palestinian citizens to make their cause public but they are hurting those people.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you for your responses.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Rubio?

Senator RUBIO. Thank you for being here today, for your willingness to serve but I do need to touch on this.

You said, and the testimony is now on the record, you have acknowledged that in your testimony both written and verbal in this committee in 2015 in July you said that Iran would not have access to U.S. financial institutions.

You have also said that there was a special license, which I think is well documented in the report that is now in the record, to allow Iran access to U.S. financial institutions.

In particular was a specific license to a bank in Oman allowing access to U.S. dollars in New York to convert about $5.7 billion worth of Omani rials into Iranian accounts and into euros.

The report that is also on the record also found that OFAC under your leadership the Treasury instituted about 200 road shows. Well, first of all, OFAC actually encouraged U.S. banks to convert these funds. That is what the report found.

The two banks decided not to do so. But, nonetheless, the U.S. Treasury actively encouraged two banks to do this. Then Treasury, through OFAC, put on over 200 road shows across the world encouraging U.S. banks to do business with Iran and also telling members of the international banking community not to—downplaying basically potential future penalties or fines, stating that 95 percent of the time OFAC sends a warning letter or takes no action.

In fact, there is one—the report found that at least one European regulator who attended one of these road shows commented that foreign financial institutions felt political pressure to conduct business with Iran and Iranian companies and, in fact, the report also found that Treasury Department officials—while you were Secretary of the Treasury officials proactively contacted foreign financial institutions to provide information about the JCPOA sanction relief.

In one example a compliance officer proactively contacted a foreign financial institution to make sure they understood Iran sanctions relief and this left the foreign financial institution confused since they had no business with Iran up until that point.

So we send you a letter Senator—then-Senator Kirk and I on March 30th, 2016—asking you about all this. We asked you about specific licenses and U-turn transactions and we also asked assurances that the United States will not work on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system including assisting them to gain access to dollar payments outside the U.S.

We asked you this in a letter on March 30th, 2016, and which I ask that be entered into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

Senator RUBIO. You responded on May 11th of 2016 in which you said we are not planning to reinstate U-turn and we will continue to vigorously enforce the many sanctions that remain against Iran including our primary sanctions that generally prohibit Iranian banks from clearing U.S. dollars through the U.S. financial system or holding correspondent account relations in the U.S.

That was your response, and I ask that the May 11th, 2016, letter be entered.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it will be included in the record.

Senator RUBIO. So we wrote you back in May I guess three—two or three days later after this letter, a week after.

We said, we are disappointed that you ignored the request in our March 30th letter providing assurances that the United States will not work on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international system, et cetera, and you responded on June 7th of that year.

I ask that that June 7th response be entered into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

Senator RUBIO. And this is what it says: “To be clear, the Department of Treasury is not working on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system nor are we assisting Iran in gaining access to dollar payment assistance outside the U.S. financial system. The administration has not been and is not planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system.”

So basically the way I would describe this is your testimony is we were not providing them access to the U.S. financial system. You then issued a special license which is not published—maybe no one was supposed to find out about it—to help them gain access to the U.S. financial system, then asked two banks to help convert the funds. They chose not to do so.

You then put on 200 road shows around the world encouraging banks around the world to be a part of this and telling them—this is to your OFAC director—do not worry about sanctions. Do not worry about penalties. Ninety-five percent of the time it is just a warning letter or no action at all, and actually proactively reached out, according to the report, unless you dispute the report—proactively reached out to a bank and which said we do not do any business with Iran—I do not know why they are contacting us. And then when we write you about it not once but twice you deny or mislead that any of this was happening.

So these are the facts as I have outlined it. Do you dispute any of these facts as they are outlined? And I understand your point that general licenses, specific licenses—the bottom line is this license was issued.

It did exactly what you said we are not supposed to do. Then you guys did the road show. You even had people in the State Department saying—and the report found this too.

This is not a partisan report. This report was put together by that—by the Oversight Committee. It found these facts including emails from people at State Department saying, we are concerned that this exceeds our power under the deal.

So how are we supposed to see all of that and then somehow confirm you to this very important post when you deliberately, in my view, misled me, misled Senator Kirk, misled the Congress on what was happening behind the scenes with regards to all of this?

Mr. LEW. Mr. Chairman, may I have a moment just to respond?

Senator RUBIO. You may.

Mr. LEW. Senator, I do not think the facts are exactly the way you describe them and I think it is important to distinguish between the technical details to facilitate implementation of JCPOA and more broadly welcoming Iran into the U.S. financial community.

We did not, and I took no actions that would do that. I do not think your description of what U.S. and OFAC officials were doing is the same as my memory of what I had people out there doing.

I had banks and governments coming to me saying, we want you to do exactly what you described. We did not do that. What we did was we said exactly what I said in response to the ranking member.

We told them what sanctions were lifted, what sanctions remained in place, and we told them to be careful, and Iran got from that the message that we were telling people not to do business with them.

That is why they sanctioned me. That is why I have been sanctioned for human rights violations in Iran, and I am proud of it. We gave them nothing more than we promised in the JCPOA.

We can agree or disagree whether that was good policy. But there are other members of this committee who have been sanctioned by Iran. I am proud to be among them.

Senator RUBIO. Well, I know I am out of time but just for the record, that is not my allegations of the facts. I am reading out of the report by the Senate Subcommittee on Investigations, and I do think this needs to be answered.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Secretary Lew, congratulations on this nomination. It is very important. I want to read some quotes that I found interesting, reactions from Israeli officials and others to the news of your nomination.

The current foreign minister Cohen in early September tweeted out, "Welcome, Ambassador designee Jacob Lew, as you have been nominated U.S. Ambassador to Israel, a country you know so well. We look forward to working with you in the spirit of our close cooperation and alliance."

In a follow-up interview he said about you, "He is a true friend of Israel and we expect him to work—and we expect to work with him in the spirit of our alliance that is based on shared values."

Many of us know former Ambassador Michael Oren, the Israeli Ambassador to the United States. When you were being rumored as a potential nominee he said, "Jack Lew is reportedly a lead candidate to be U.S. Ambassador to Israel. He is a true statesman and a passionate Jew. As Israel's Ambassador to the U.S. I greatly valued his friendship and his outstanding defense of the U.S.-Israel alliance, a mensch in every sense of the word."

Human rights activist Natan Sharansky in 2015 said this, "Lew worked days and nights taking families of prisoners of Zion through all the corridors of power to make sure the Jews would be released. Many Soviet refuseniks owe their lives to him and others for the successful efforts to release them."

Israeli official Yuval Steinitz also in 2015 recalled that without Lew's help Israel would never have been accepted into the OECD.

These are comments that are powerful. There is a need for speed in acting on this nomination. I encourage my colleagues to do all we can to get it to the floor quickly so that we can have a confirmed Ambassador to Israel at this most important moment.

The news this morning is also that the Biden administration is sending to us a supplemental package that has aid for Ukraine, aid for Israel, border aid, and also disaster assistance for states hit by weather emergencies.

I would hope that the Senate could show in a bipartisan manner that we would support this. I think that would send a powerful message to Israel as well.

I want to ask about Iran. Look, the most controversial issue on this committee—I have been on the committee the whole time—since I came in 2013—was the JCPOA. There are people in this body, Mr. Lew, who—they are not going to let you out of the penalty box over that.

There are some who were opposed who can separate their feeling about the JCPOA from whether you would be a good Ambassador but there are some—you are not going to get out of the penalty box with them.

But I do notice something that you just mentioned. I think four of the members of this committee have been sanctioned by Iran. Not all of us have been, but you have been sanctioned by Iran. Tell the committee why Iran sanctioned you.

Mr. LEW. Senator, at the end of the JCPOA negotiation I think it was Iran's hope that they would get exactly what has been described here, that they would be welcomed into the world of nations, and they were profoundly disappointed when that did not happen.

And they did not think that I kept the bargain. One thing I will say is a deal is a deal. We made a deal with Iran, if you want sanctions to work to get sovereign powers to change their policy, which Iran did in rolling back its nuclear program, you have to keep your side of the bargain. I did not think we had to do any more than that.

Senator KAINE. Right. And so the sanctions that were lifted in that deal were sanctions pertaining to Iran's nuclear program but we never agreed to lift any other sanction about human rights problems, development of missile systems, violation of other U.N. resolutions.

We lifted none of those sanctions and you went around the world reminding banks and financial institutions if those sanctions were still in place and if they acted contrary to them there were negative consequences that they would receive.

Mr. LEW. And we did tell banks that if it is a nuclear sanction those have been lifted because that is what the deal was.

Senator KAINE. Well, I think you should be proud of being sanctioned by Iran and I heard a comment earlier that said holding hands with them under the table. If that was the case you would not be on the list of those who were sanctioned by the nation of Iran.

I was very pleased to see that Ambassador Satterfield will serve as the special envoy to lead U.S. diplomacy to address the humanitarian crisis in Gaza. I associate myself with comments made by Senator Menendez.

Hamas started this horrible war against civilians but all Palestinians are not Hamas, all Gazans are not Hamas, and a broader humanitarian challenge in Gaza will serve not Israel's interests.

It would be detrimental to Palestinians. Will not serve the regional interest.

We need to do all we can to encourage our ally Israel to take the fight to the perpetrator and not to those who were not the perpetrators. We have painful lessons we have learned about that in the United States.

We took the fight to the perpetrator after 9/11 but as we broadened it into a global war including a war against Iraq we lost credibility. We lost support nationally.

We unleashed a set of consequences that probably should not have been unleashed and so we have our own paid in full experience of being attacked and then allowing the response to go beyond those who perpetrated the attack and suffering as a result and I am hoping that you will work closely together with Envoy Satterfield on this important humanitarian mission.

Mr. LEW. Senator, I have to say that I do not think I could have found the words to say as eloquently what the President has said on multiple occasions over the last week.

Israel not just has a right but a responsibility to defend itself and what makes our relationship with Israel so special is that we share a common belief in democracy and in the rule of law and that includes the law of war.

I think that is what Israel believes and this is not the time for us to be lecturing Israel on what they have to do to establish the security that they have a responsibility to provide and I think they know they have to do it in a way that is consistent with minimizing the impact on innocent civilians.

As we learned in Fallujah and in Mosul and Ramadi, it is very hard, very hard, for there not to be collateral damage. So I do not think the standard can be that that gets to zero and I do not think that is what the President said. The President said they have to defend themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Romney?

Senator ROMNEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I, along with a handful of other senators, were in Israel over the weekend and had the chance to meet with leadership there, former leadership of the country as well as with military leaders and with families of hostages, and I know that your confirmation can be done by one party alone and you are likely to be confirmed on that basis.

But that being said, there are a few things I would like to pass along to you assuming that you do become Ambassador.

One is that our Chief of Mission is a highly respected individual, respected by the Israeli leadership, and is working in the interests of the United States and as someone who we respect enormously as well.

Meeting with the families of hostages, their stories and the experiences are heartbreaking—the outrage, the brutality. The inhumanity of Hamas in the way they took children and others and grabbed them and took them across the border is hard to comprehend and we need to do everything within our power to release—secure the release of those hostages.

I would also note that one of the generals—the leading general of the Israeli Defense Forces said something that is very powerful. He said, “Israel and Jews do not do vengeance. We are not going to target Palestinians and try and kill a lot of Palestinians to make up for all the Jews that were killed. That is not our intent. We will do everything in our power to avoid civilian casualties among the Palestinian people.

“But they are being used as human shields and in many cases there will be deaths, but they will be unfortunate and not part of an effort on the part of Israel to carry out vengeance.”

I would also note that there is a responsibility that every government has and the Israeli Government, of course, has this responsibility as well, to secure the safety and the life of their citizens and in this case Hamas has made it very clear that as long as they exist Israeli citizens’ lives are going to be at risk and will be sacrificed, and therefore it is unacceptable for Hamas to continue to exist, certainly, in proximity that they have enjoyed from the Gaza Strip.

I would note also that in discussion of what comes next, what is going to happen after, let us assume that the Israeli military is successful in rooting out Hamas. What happens after that?

There was no clear response to that and I did not expect necessarily a response to that because the Israeli Government and military is focused on how they are going to be successful in rooting out Hamas.

That is what comes first. But what comes next is something which will be of a great priority for the United States Ambassador there.

I am going to note that I was very troubled by the report of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations that was carried under the direction of Senator Portman. I concur in the questions that were being raised by Senator Rubio.

That is very troubling to me. I wonder how the White House could have brought forward a nomination given that report and given the clear indication that Republican members at least and, hopefully, some Democratic members as well would be troubled by and moved by the results of that report from the Subcommittee on Investigations.

Finally, a question and that relates to a tangential issue but—and that is there is most recently a response or an effort has been promoted by the administration to provide $6 billion of Iranian funds to Iran, to release them as part of the prisoner exchange. That has, obviously, been put on hold.

But I guess I would question—and you have experience in this regard—the idea that dollars are going to be used for humanitarian purposes only. I heard the administration say, we are going to get you your $6 billion back but it has to only be used for humanitarian purposes.

Now, I know enough about money to know that funds are fungible and that if we say we are going to give you $6 billion but you have got to use it for food and hospitals for your population Iran can say thank you, that is what we use the $6 billion for.

Now we have freed up $6 billion that we otherwise would have used ourselves for food and hospitals and now we can use that to build nuclear weapons or provide money to Hezbollah or Hamas.

And so am I wrong? It strikes me that when we say that we are going to give you money but only for humanitarian purposes it is an entirely disingenuous.

It is a way of disguising the fact that we are providing funds to a state sponsor of terror. It is misleading to the American people, misleading to the world. Is there any other way of reading that?

Mr. LEW. Senator, first, I want to agree with you about the difference between defending a country and vengeance and there is a difference between anger and fury and vengeance.

If any of us lived in a country where that large a part of our population had been brutalized in a way that we could not hardly imagine controlling your fury is almost beyond the imagination. I believe they are going to do the right thing and try their best to do it to defend the country, not for vengeance.

On the question—you did not ask it as a question but the report of the Special Committee—I have remained close with Senator Portman even since we both left government. I spoke to him as recently as last night.

I would just invite anyone who questions whether he thinks that I am somebody who keeps my word I would just suggest they talk to Senator Portman.

On the question of fungibility of money, as an economic matter I have many times made the point that money is fungible. But when you are dealing with Iran you are not dealing with a rational economic player. You are dealing with an evil, malign government that funds its evil and malign activities first.

So when Iran gets access to food and medicine for its people that is food and medicine they would not otherwise have. I cannot say that there is no leakage and when I supported the JCPOA what I said was our intelligence reports suggest that the vast majority of that money will be used for the neglected purpose of humanitarian expenses and to the extent that there is leakage it will not change the thrust of what they do.

Sadly, supporting terrorist organizations like Hamas and terrorist organizations like Hezbollah is not very expensive. They are doing that anyway. We are trying—I tried as hard as I could. Subsequent administrations tried as hard as they could. Under maximum pressure they still were doing their malign activities.

So it is not a pure economic question. It is really a question of who are we dealing with. We are not dealing with people who trade off guns and butter. Guns come first.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you, Mr. Secretary, to you and your family for your willingness to step forward and take on this very challenging and critical service on behalf of our nation in this difficult moment.

Like every member of this committee I unequivocally condemn the invasion and attacks by Hamas against Israel, the slaughter of innocent people, the taking of hostages, and when you are, I hope, confirmed by the Senate you will take on representing our nation in a particularly challenging and fraught moment with a critical ally.

I am grateful that our President chose to go in person and I have already been receiving messages from friends in Israel and throughout the region about what a difference it makes to them when our national leader shows up.

But we also, frankly, have to sustain that engagement through a Senate-confirmed Ambassador. It is my hope that we will also confirm Ambassadors to other countries in the region—Egypt, Lebanon, the coordinator for counterterrorism—and that we will continue expediting some of these confirmations. We have, I believe, just confirmed Ambassadors to Oman and Kuwait in recent days.

But all of us who serve on this committee and who have served overseas in different roles know there is a huge difference between an Ambassador of the United States, and although there are many talented and qualified career Foreign Service officers in the current case serving as DCM or a charge we need an Ambassador. So I hope this committee will take that very seriously.

If you would, Mr. Secretary, just speak for a moment about you would work to limit what I think was the goal of Hamas' attacks in addition to terrorizing the population to prevent any reconciliation—any recognition between Israel and Saudi Arabia and expansion of the Abraham Accords.

How would you sustain that forward movement and how would you limit these attacks from developing into a wider regional conflict and how would you work to contain Iran's malign influence?

Mr. LEW. Senator, first, I said this before but I will say it again. We have outstanding public servants including our acting Ambassador who are doing the business and I agree with you it is important to have confirmed Ambassadors. One does not contradict the other.

I also agree with the comments that have been made by several senators that just as an observer from the outside I think this attack was time to try to undermine the normalization process and to make it harder.

The way you respond to that is by coming right back as soon as you can. This is not a moment where people can concentrate on what the shape of the discussion the day after is.

But my view is the way you prevent a terrorist organization by winning is you do not get terrorized. You do not run away. You stick to what is in your national interest and you work hard at it.

It was always going to be a challenging negotiation to get a normalization agreement. I think it will clearly now be more challenging because the public opinion in many places will be at such a different level after this war, and a role we can play as the United States and we have often played is to bring people together to keep that conversation going.

I hope—and this may just be that I am an eternal optimist because otherwise you give in to the worst of man—I think that coming out of this there will be an understanding that some of these issues have to be dealt with and the shape of how they are dealt with will not be the same as it was before the conflict.

But it will have to be done in a way that gives Israel the ability to defend itself, to protect its people from future attacks like this, and we have to do it with our eyes wide open about the fact that we do have malign forces like Iran that want to destroy Israel.

So it is not easy. But I think Saudi Arabia and Israel were in a place where they had made a decision that this was something very much worth pursuing and I hope when this is over we can help get that conversation going again.

Senator COONS. And I hope members of this committee who are determined to help move that forward will also in a bipartisan way contribute to it.

Before my time ends I just—my senior senator, Senator Carper, was the ranking member on the Permanent Subcommittee for Investigations, and just for those who are pressing you and troubled by that report he refused to sign it.

He found that its conclusions in his estimation were a partisan effort at attacking the previous administration's Iran policy rather than a specific and credible conclusion about you and your conduct.

I will let Senator Carper's public statements speak for itself. But for folks who are wrestling with that in any way I would encourage them to talk to my colleague, Senator Carper, who I think is as even handed, balanced, and bipartisan a senator as has served in the modern era. So I do not know if there is anything you wanted to say in response to that.

Mr. LEW. I appreciate your bringing that to the attention of the committee. It is a point that Senator Carper has made to me as well.

Senator COONS. Thank you for your willingness to take on this important service and it is my hope that we will proceed quickly with your confirmation.

Thank you, Mr. Secretary. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Ricketts?

Senator RICKETTS. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Mr. Lew, for being here.

The attacks and atrocities that Hamas committed were one of the darkest days in Israel's history. We saw reports of babies and toddlers beheaded. Women were raped and paraded bloody through the streets.

We have seen kidnappings including of children and this is not something that is confined to just Israelis. We know there is—not only 1,400 Israelis have been killed but 31 Americans have been killed and we are also concerned about the hostages that include not just Israelis but potentially Americans as well.

And Hamas continues to block the evacuation routes within Gaza so they can use Palestinians, children and civilian, in Gaza as human shields. They force innocents into harm's way for their twisted propaganda.

Hamas represents the worst of humanity. I believe the U.S. must stand shoulder to shoulder with the state of Israel. We need to stand with them in their time as they have declared war on Hamas to fight this war.

It is in that context that when I hear for calls of ceasefire or de-escalation that is just foolishness. This is a war that Israel needs to prosecute and we need to give Israel the weapons they need to be able to do it.

We need to give them interceptors for the Iron Dome, additional batteries to protect innocent Israelis from these rocket attacks.

Now, obviously, this was an intelligence failure to detect this attack and time will come to be able to dig into what happened there and address it. But even worse, the Biden administration's failed policy on Iran has enabled Hamas to make these attacks in the first place.

Iran is the largest state sponsor of terrorism. They support Hamas. Hamas would not be able to do this without Iran's support. Since coming to office the Biden administration has failed to enforce the Iranian oil sanctions—we heard that from the Chairman or Ranking Member earlier—and that has provided the regime billions of dollars—tens of billions of dollars of funding that subsequently could be used for funding terrorists, especially their proxy Hamas, to attack Israel.

And according to a Wall Street Journal report that while the IRGC was coordinating an attack with Hamas to kill Israelis the Biden administration was negotiating a secret deal to be able to free up $6 billion of money for Iran and that certainly goes to, if that report is true, how Iran just holds nothing but contempt for the United States and will deal behind our back even while trying to negotiate.

These are just mind-boggling decisions. It is a continuation of the disastrous Obama administration Iran policy that you, Mr. Lew, helped orchestrate. You were one of the key implementers of the flawed Iran nuclear deal. Iran wants to annihilate Israel, wants to wipe them off the face of the earth.

The Iran deal given its very sunsets would have put Iran on a path to be able to continue to enrich uranium for a nuclear weapon, and it is a certain irony that one of those sunsets, the U.S. prohibition against Iran missile and drone activity which Iran was already violating, is set to expire today.

The deal to provide Iran with billions of dollars in sanctions relief that you oversaw, this relief subsidizes support for Hamas that enabled them to carry out like the ones we saw 11 days ago.

This deal was so bad that Prime Minister Netanyahu had come before the Congress to speak out against it and you criticized that, and we are going to get to that here in just a second.

The barbaric events of October 7th are a referendum on the disastrous Iran policy started under the Obama administration and continued under this Biden administration.

The Biden administration needs to complete a complete overhaul in the way that we see Iran and how we deal with it and my fear, Mr. Lew, is that you are more simply of the same. You just represent a continuation of that policy.

So I have some questions and these are yes or no questions. Just—I want to clarify some of the facts here on what you believe. Do you believe that the Biden administration should continue to restart the JCPOA talks?

Mr. LEW. I do not think this is the moment for us to be negotiating with Iran. I believe deeply that an agreement to not have nuclear weapons would be a good thing. But this is not the moment.

Senator RICKETTS. Mr. Lew, in 2017 at an event at Columbia University did you say, quote, "The personal dynamic between the President and the prime minister was not as good as one might have hoped and it was both—in both directions. I mean, I saw as much provocation coming from the prime minister—I saw more provocation coming in than I saw going out.”

Is that an accurate quote?

Mr. LEW. I do not remember the exact words but it is something that I said to a group of students and it was a balanced statement where even what you read was criticizing my own president as well. I thought there was blame to go around.

Senator RICKETTS. So when Prime Minister Netanyahu came here in his 2015 speech you—did you criticize it saying it went beyond the pale of what you just—what you can just ignore and that it was a huge mistake for Israel?

Mr. LEW. I did think it was a mistake to have something that would create a partisan division over U.S. support for Israel, which for 75 years has been bipartisan.

Senator RICKETTS. Do you believe Israel should continue to recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel?

Mr. LEW. Jerusalem is recognized now as the capital of Jerusalem. There is no discussion of changing that. I, if confirmed, will be living in Jerusalem and that is the policy of the United States.

Senator RICKETTS. And so you believe we should keep our Embassy there?

Mr. LEW. We first need to build an Embassy. We have a presence. But having been deputy secretary of state I know it takes a long time anywhere to build an Embassy.

Senator RICKETTS. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the extra time.

Mr. LEW. If I can just make one point, Mr. Chairman, if I can, because you said that this administration was negotiating to give Iran its money back.

I think what this administration was doing was negotiating to bring Americans home who were being kept captive in Iran and they made the judgment that releasing monies that were being held pursuant to policies of the prior administration could be moved in a way that Iran could use them as the prior administration had agreed to.

That is very different from saying we are going to negotiate to give Iran money.

Senator RICKETTS. So do you believe then it was appropriate then to release these funds to get our hostages—

Mr. LEW. Yes.

Senator RICKETTS [continuing]. Or the people Iran was keeping, basically pay to get those Americans out? Do you believe that was—

Mr. LEW. I can tell you that bringing Americans home safely will be one of my highest priorities if I am in Israel, and there are now Americans being held hostage in Gaza. And I do not know what it will take to do that but I will wake up every day asking what can I do to bring Americans home safely.

Senator RICKETTS. So but you do believe then it was appropriate to pay Iran to get the Americans back?

Mr. LEW. To tell you the truth, Senator, I am not deeply enough familiar with it. I was not in government when the decision was made. I do not know all the tradeoffs. I do know the passion that goes behind bringing Americans home safely.

Senator RICKETTS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate your forbearance.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Murphy?

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I for one am damn glad we have a President who cares about bringing our hostages home.

One of those individuals was a Connecticut resident with a lot of family in my home state. Their life has changed knowing that he is back home and I am thankful we have a President who cares about that.

I am proud of this committee for showing a real apolitical demonstration of support for Israel and an equally nonpolitical condemnation of Hamas' unspeakable acts of brutality.

I want to thank the Chairman and the ranking member for leading us through the last week and a half and I want to thank you, Secretary Lew, for your continued deep commitment to your country and your commitment to serve.

I want to come back to this question of sanctions policy during the period of time that we were administering the JCPOA and just to make sure that I have it right. It sounds like Iranian access to the U.S. financial system was never on the table as part of any deal and even if it were, frankly, it was unlikely that any financial institution would have engaged in these transactions due to the very obvious compliance risk.

Iran was pretty upset about that and I will just enter into the record if I could three articles from this period of time entitled, "Iran-U.S. at odds over nuclear sanctions relief," "Rouhani claims the U.S. is violating its commitments under the nuclear deal," "Iran warns enduring sanctions threaten the nuclear deal."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it will be part of the record.

Senator MURPHY. So my understanding is that U.S. banks never facilitated transactions over compliance fears and that the Iranians found this deeply frustrating and in fact threatened to pull out of their side of the agreement because they felt that we were being too tough in administering and holding to nonnuclear sanctions. Is that an accurate description?

Mr. LEW. It is certainly my recollection.

Senator MURPHY. Second, I want to talk to you about what is happening in the West Bank today. More than 58 Palestinians have been killed in the West Bank and east Jerusalem since October 7th.

There has been nightly clashes between security services and protesters. Settlers have attacked and destroyed Palestinian homes.

Obviously, our greatest priority is holding Hamas accountable but a close second is making sure that this crisis does not spread.

How do you assess the Palestinian Authority's ability to maintain security in the West Bank? What is the path forward for the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank in light of its pretty diminished and shattered credibility, and is it a continued policy priority for the United States to do the things necessary to support the administration of justice inside the West Bank?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I have believed for a long time that if there is going to be any hope of a two-state solution one of the foundations of any stable entity is the ability to have a legal system and a security system in place.

I was proud of the work we did over many years to build the training and the level of responsibility of Palestinian security forces and my understanding is that that is resumed and that there is bipartisan support for that activity.

It is really hard. It is really hard to build a stable force and it requires sustained engagement, and if I am confirmed as Ambassador building those institutions is something that I will pay a great deal of attention to because I do not think you can have security and stability without a security force.

Senator Murphy. And I think it will be part of the work of this committee and this Congress in the coming days as we try to put in place the prophylactic measures to stop the spread of this conflict to make sure that we are supporting the administration of the rule of law in Gaza—excuse me, in the West Bank.

Finally, I just want to ask you about a breakthrough agreement that got very little attention in the press, not as much as it should have, and this was the agreement between Israel and Lebanon on maritime rights.

Obviously, our top priority now is preventing Hezbollah from opening up another front. But I just wanted to make sure that one of your priorities outside of the administration of this crisis and conflict is going to continue to capitalize on the progress that has been made—remarkable progress—between Israel and Lebanon to create this maritime border but to use it as a foundation to try to continue to ease and normalize relationships between these two historic adversaries.

Mr. LEW. It is pretty extraordinary that Israel has now indigenous natural gas resources and that it is a source of part of the ability to partner with other countries in the region to be able to help Europe through a crisis because of Russia's invasion of Ukraine.

And I must say that when I was in government the last time it was a flicker of a dream to get there. I remember when Israeli officials came over to observe an energy license auction and my daughter, who is sitting behind me, was working at the Department of Interior and helped translate for them what was being said in English about energy auctions so they would understand it in Hebrew.

And it is now a real resource. It is being developed. It is not without its controversy. The borders are controversial. Maritime issues are not my area of great expertise but I will get up to speed on them very quickly, if confirmed.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Barrasso?

Senator BARRASSO. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

You have heard from everyone here Israel is one of our nation's strongest allies. Since October 7th the world has seen the terror and violence inflicted by Hamas and all of us strongly condemn Hamas' invasion of Israel, which involved killing and wounding thousands of Israeli civilians.

Americans were also among those injured and killed and taken hostage by Hamas. As Israel fights these terrorist attacks the United States remains unwavering—you have heard that here today as well—in our commitment to Israel's security.

With the incredible challenges facing Israel it is vital that we have the right person serving as the U.S. Ambassador to Israel and I think it is especially true in light of President Biden's repeated failed policies that I see as failed in the region.

Today's nominee, I believe, seems to be the wrong person for this important job and as Secretary of Treasury in the Obama administration he helped negotiate the disastrous Iranian nuclear deal.

In fact, he went about bragging about the flawed deal to American people. As Secretary of Treasury he unlocked a lot of Iranian assets and let them have their money. He also really was an ATM to the Iranian ayatollah.

No one are going to forget the pallets of cash going to Iran, which was the largest state sponsor of terrorism. We know how they use the money.

As Secretary of Treasury he helped orchestrate $1.7 billion in cash to be flown in an unmarked cargo plane, cash directly to Iran. Also oversaw the $400 million ransom payment to Iran in exchange for American hostages, the massive influx of cash ultimately a direct deposit into Iran's terrorism account.

Additionally, in 2016 he defended the Obama administration's unwillingness to veto a U.N. Security Council resolution that was seen as an anti-Israel resolution.

Congress in a bipartisan way disagreed with that position of the administration. In fact, we overwhelmingly passed a bipartisan resolution objecting to it and demanding that it be repealed.

So here we are. These decisions, these actions, have serious consequences and I believe they have emboldened terrorist organizations around the globe and that the American people and the Israeli people both deserve something different.

So, Mr. Lew, Hamas soldiers have reportedly been found with documents detailing their plans to target schools, target civilians.

During the raid another document directed Hamas units to kill as many as possible as well as capture hostages. Over 4,000 dead, 31 Americans among those killed, others taken hostage. We have had the debate about how to best get them home.

In terms of the American citizens who is responsible for the 32—the 31 Americans who have died in this conflict?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I, as Secretary of the Treasury, also sanctioned Hamas and took actions to try and stop the flow of money to Hamas. It is not a new thing that Hamas is a terrorist organization.

I earlier offered some views that would challenge some of the characterization you just made of how the JCPOA did or did not affect Hamas.

The sad reality is Iran was supporting Hamas before JCPOA. They supported it during the period of maximum pressure. They will spend their first dollars on evil. They are not going to stop doing this, and Iran is a malign force.

Iran provided the arms. They provided training. Whether they were involved in anything more proximate I am not inside any circles of intelligence to know. Public information suggests that it may not have been as clear.

If confirmed, I will keep my eye on Iran as a force that is hostile to Israel's existence. They are—want to push Israel into the sea and we cannot let that happen.

Senator BARRASSO. Well, the interesting point is that the failure of this administration to enforce the Iranian oil sanctions helped finance Hamas and other Iranian proxies.

It is how you can stop the money but we have allowed—this administration has allowed a lot of money to get there. Iran is the home of the world's third largest reserves of crude oil.

It uses the revenue from its oil exports to support its repression and terrorist activities. The more money they have the more activities we are going to see in spite of all efforts to block it along the way.

I repeatedly raised concerns about the impact of this administration refusing to enforce existing sanctions on the energy sector.

In an attempt to convince Iran to rejoin this terrible Iranian nuclear deal it seems that the President did relax sanctions enforcement on Iran to the point that Iran generated about $80 billion in oil revenue under this administration.

Oman and Iran have signed a variety of deals in the oil and gas sector. China's state-owned refineries and private companies are buying up 1.2 million barrels of Iranian oil every day and we are allowing that to happen.

The Iranian regime is getting hundreds of billions of dollars to fund Hamas, Hezbollah, other terrorist proxies. So then why has this administration failed to fully enforce sanctions on entities involved in these illicit transactions with Iran, given the fact that every dollar they make they are going to use in a bad way?

Mr. LEW. Well, Senator, first of all, the monies that were released were subject to being used only for humanitarian purposes for food and medicine. That was an arrangement reached in the last administration, not the current administration.

So it is not just a new issue and the intel that I was privy to back in the day when I had access to internal discussions suggested very clearly that the unmet needs were pressing and would need to be met and that if there was leakage it will be on the margin.

It would not change the direction of Iran's support. That is not a great answer. I am not happy until they stop supporting people who commit the acts of butchery that we saw just days ago, and I have to tell you as somebody who grew—I am an observant Jew.

I observe our festivals including the sad ones. There is days of the year when we read dirges about what human beings can do to each other that I never took literally until this month.

I have never seen in my lifetime human beings treat other human beings face to face eyeball to eyeball the way Jews were slaughtered because they were Jews. That is at my core, Senator.

Senator BARRASSO. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Secretary Lew, it is very good to see you here. I was in Israel when the rocket attacks began and took shelter in the hotel bomb shelter and had the faces of people observing in horror all around me who could not check their phones while we were seeing the dawning reality that this was not just a rocket attack but the most heinous grotesque attack on Jewish people since the Holocaust.

It was sobering to understand that not just Hamas being a terrorist organization but they were attacking other humans in ways with a barbarity that was just unimaginable.

You know this well. Hamas is an organization that in its very founding is to kill Jews and they have no consideration for the obvious, of Israel's strength.

They understood completely that they—as they scurried back into Gaza that they would put Palestinians' lives at risk and it is clear from their history they do not care about Palestinian lives.

They have abducted Palestinians, tortured Palestinians, killed the Palestinians, all to pursue their terroristic aims and we know that they have often focused on disrupting efforts towards peace. After Oslo where Arafat and Rabin came to a great accord they began immediately attacking Israelis, attacking civilians, bombing buses, and more.

So I am grateful you are sitting here now. I agree with many of my colleagues on the urgency to get you confirmed into the position.

I will tell you, and it has been said by others, bipartisan leaders are coming about who are talking to your character. I have rarely had a situation where someone sits before me where I have had calls from my Republican friends as well as Democratic friends who will testify.

They may not agree with the policies of the administrations you have served but they testified to your character and that to me is a time—at the time that we need principled people leading in important positions it gives me great solace in this time of great despair and heartbreak that you will be stepping forward. I want to thank your family for their commitment and their sacrifice as well.

I want to start with just simply saying that last night I, along with Senator Ernst and a bipartisan group of senators, sent a letter to President Biden urging the administration to continue their efforts with our regional partners to secure the release of almost 200 civilian hostages including over a dozen that are being held by Hamas. I am assuming that that is going to be one of your first and principal duties.

Mr. LEW. Absolutely, Senator. I do not think any of us can rest until we know we have done everything we can do to bring people home safely.

Senator BOOKER. I am grateful for the President's leadership at this time. I think he has been extraordinary. He is another person that I got to know during a presidential primary of great character.

I am grateful that he is talking also a lot about humanitarian assistance and the fact that democracies are strong when they abide by the rule of law and they take into account humanitarian urgencies amidst the pursuit of war.

Once you are confirmed do you commit to doing everything in your power to facilitate the flow of humanitarian assistance to the people of Gaza and ensure that the innocent civilians and humanitarian aid workers are able to seek shelter and get the resources they need to help minimize consequences to civilian life?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I think it is critical that we do everything we can to help innocent civilians without giving resources to terrorists who mean to do harm to innocent Israelis and I will work hard to do that.

Even while we have been sitting here I am told that the President has committed $100 million in refugee assistance, that there are negotiations that have been concluded or well underway to open a humanitarian corridor.

Innocent civilians should not pay the price for terrorists. Terrorists should not hide behind innocent civilians, and it is just a necessity that we are in an environment now where it is very hard, very hard, to separate the two populations. We have to try.

Senator BOOKER. I think that not only is it urgent that we show our resolute, unwavering, unequivocal support for Israel, I think those principles you just said as well we should give that resolute commitment.

I want to zoom out real quickly. I am very committed to the larger—winning the war is what—obviously, there is a lot of focus on that right now against Hamas, eradicating Hamas, but winning the peace is critical as well and thinking from a larger lens.

The United States has been very focused on supporting Israel as well as supporting the larger regional peace that has been evolving since the Abraham Accords. I think it is an incredible sign that there was conversations going on with Palestinian leaders, with the Saudis.

In fact, their first visit to the West Bank since '67—have conversations. MBS goes on Fox News and talks about every day moving closer towards normalization with Israel and how Palestinians are a center of that.

I talked to U.S. negotiators about that. In fact, one of my purposes for my trip to Israel was to meet with Palestinian leaders as well as Israeli leaders about expanding Abraham Accords and normalizations with Saudi Arabia and the principal part that the Palestinians would play going back towards a two-state solution.

Just in closing, could you just give me some affirmation that that is also a very urgent part of your mission as well?

Mr. LEW. I think it is critical to get back to the business of addressing the strategic security and growth of the region and the things you described are right at the core of it and we have to do it in a way where the lives of Palestinians can improve and the security of Israel is not put at jeopardy.

I think going back into a serious discussion of expanding the Abraham Accords, which were very important, to include Saudi Arabia and Israel normalizing relations is crucial and I pledge to work with this committee, with Congress, with members on both sides whether they support my nomination or not to help that come about.

Senator BOOKER. I am grateful for you sitting here. I am grateful for your willingness to serve and simply say [speaks in Hebrew.] Thank you.

Mr. LEW. As we would say [speaks in Hebrew.] You should be blessed.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Scott?

Senator SCOTT. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Lew, thank you for being here.

Before I start asking questions of you I do want to make a point that in many ways Israel is now fighting a war on a different front in addition to the war with Hamas. It is a war of misinformation.

There is now doubt and, unfortunately, the media carrying the false narrative regarding the hospital bombing, this narrative originated with Hamas, the same people who murdered women and children, the same people who burned babies, who beheaded little ones. And as a result of that lie carried by New York Times and the AP and others a summit in Jordan was canceled.

Other meetings that Biden had scheduled canceled, literally protests around the globe at our embassies and an attempt—a very clear and specific attempt—to weaken Israel's position.

Rather than waiting for all the facts they carried the Hamas narrative. That is dangerous and it could be more costly in lives than the current conflict and the long-term impact of a misinformation campaign, frankly, a misinformation of war could be deadly to the efforts of Israel, deadly to the unified support coming from our nation, and something that we should all take very seriously as Americans.

And we certainly do not need members of Congress from the Squad being a part of the propaganda machine coming out of Washington, D.C., in support of Hamas. It is very dangerous.

In these times we need the truth. The truth is incredibly important and getting the facts should be necessary before reporting on this remarkable, frankly, disgusting war that we are seeing perpetrated against Israel.

You have heard a number of my colleagues talk about your role in the previous—the Obama administration and the impact that your role has had on resources being released through the JCPOA for Iran and, frankly, I think many of the questions are fair and your commentary is necessary.

Iran policy is without question Israel policy. They are the greatest enemy that Israel faces and, frankly, the greatest funders of terrorism—state funders of terrorism anywhere in the world and we know that 90 percent of the funds that Hamas receives comes from Iran and one of the things that we have debated and we will continue to debate, I am sure, the $6 billion paid for hostages when Obama paid $400 million. I said then several years ago that that will only raise the price on an American's head abroad and $6 billion only makes it worse.

I heard you say that the money could only be used for humanitarian aid. I will just say that Raisi, the president of Iran, said it very clearly that they will use the money in any way they want to use the money, period. Beyond the fact that money is fungible is really important as well.

My question for you, though, is that the administration assisted the $6 billion transfer is in no way associated with any efforts to renegotiate the nuclear deal although those efforts have been going on for—secretly for months.

And so my question to you is do you believe that there are—that without need to submit the—do you believe that there are any efforts going forward on a negotiation and if there are would there be a need for that to be submitted to Congress?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I am not in the administration and I am not privy to the current state of affairs. I am not aware of any ongoing negotiations and I said earlier this is not the moment even if one believes that someday a negotiated solution may be bright.

And I have to agree with something you said. It should not be that hard to call out atrocities like we saw two weeks ago—not even two weeks ago. Some things are just what they are.

Senator SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. LEW. And butchering almost 1,500 babies, old people, Holocaust survivors, hand to hand face to face, is barbarism, and whatever one thinks about the right and wrong of different positions in this conflict should be easy to call out.

I am proud to see President Biden taking the stand that he has been taking and even this morning when I heard his comments on the horrible bombing of a hospital in Gaza he was not giving in to disinformation. He was shooting straight.

In the fog of the moment you do not have perfect information and he said from everything he sees it was not Israel that did it. That is not changing where people out in the streets in some countries think it is. It is very dangerous and you have to call out the facts.

Senator SCOTT. Well, one of the things that you just reminded me of a scripture that says—Jeremiah 17:9 says that the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, and one of the things that we have seen taken place today, for the last 10 days or so, is the atrocities and the evil brought upon the Jewish people again.

I assume that you would say that you had no actual clue what was happening in the administration so I am not surprised by that. I would certainly say that some evidence suggests that their uranium enrichment activities began to taper off this summer weeks before the transfer was announced.

I know that I am running short on time. It appears that the five minutes moves faster down here for me. So—

[Laughter.]

Senator SCOTT. Could I have another 30 seconds?

The CHAIRMAN. The Senator may proceed.

Senator SCOTT. Thank you very much, sir.

Just a really quick thought here, Mr. Lew. You were the OMB director in 2011. My assumption is that when President Obama made the decision to strike against Osama bin Laden and his compound that you thought that was a good deal—good idea?

Mr. LEW. I do not want there to be any confusion. The OMB director does not participate—

Senator SCOTT. Of course.

Mr. LEW [continuing]. In a targeting decision like that.

Senator SCOTT. I have seen you as the Treasury secretary—

Mr. LEW. Yeah. Yeah.

Senator SCOTT [continuing]. In the Finance Committee so I recognize—

Mr. LEW. I share the feeling that it was a just action to address an act of terrible murder in my city of New York and in other places.

Senator Scott. Yeah. Final comment is that the—over the weekend we saw the IDF say they will hunt down every last man with the blood of Israel's children on their hands. Would you support Israel pursuing the perpetrators of this heinous attack on foreign soil as we did in 2011?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I hesitate to answer a hypothetical question that I do not know the scope of. What I will say without condition is that Israel has not just a right but as the President has said the responsibility to defend its people, and as we were talking about earlier in this hearing it is not for revenge. It is for defending your people and I think Israel has the right to do that and they should do it. They will, by their basic nature, do it in a way that tries to minimize collateral damage.

Senator SCOTT. Well, Chairman, you have been very gracious with the extension of my five and a half minutes. I really appreciate that very much, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I got to get your clock there. You have extended the day. I do not know how you did it.

Senator SCOTT. It is called football time, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I got it.

Senator Schatz?

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and ranking member. Thank you, Mr. Lew, for being here. Thank you to your family.

What does Israel mean to you?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I could answer that question as a former public official that it is our most important ally in a critically important region of the world. I could answer it as somebody who grew up believing that the safety and security of the state of Israel was nothing less than the safety and security of Jews all over the world.

So it is not a simple answer of what Israel means to me. I have not always agreed with the policies of the Government of Israel and some people have questioned my relationship with Prime Minister Netanyahu. We have disagreed on many issues; we have known each other for over three decades. But it has been with the kind of respect and confidence that each has the interest of the security of the state of Israel always deep inside.

Senator SCHATZ. It is, I think, worth noting that the most ferocious disagreements regarding Israel happen at family dinners among Jews and so even now the dialogue in Israel is a little more cacophonous even than the dialogue in the United States. Just worth noting.

Can you talk a little bit about the need for a full-fledged Senate-confirmed Ambassador on the ground? And I know we sort of gloss over it and say it is important, the charge is doing a good job but we need a person there. Tell me how as a practical matter it makes a difference to have a Senate-confirmed Ambassador on the ground.

Mr. LEW. You know, Senator, it is interesting because a short period of time has kind of changed how I would answer that question.

Two weeks ago I would have said with the Middle East not on the front burner but it remaining a central core issue of importance having a confirmed Ambassador who clearly represents—is a representative of the President with the President's ear, with a history of public service that is well understood, was critically important because it was not getting the attention of the President and the Secretary of State the way it had in previous times when peace talks were the central focus.

Today, the President is in Israel. The Secretary of State has been in the region for a week. Clearly, there is an enormous amount of attention at the very highest level of our government.

But, God willing, there will be a moment not too far from now when the war is not the central issue and the future is. Once the future is the issue again having a confirmed Ambassador is crucially important and I say that with the greatest respect for our Foreign Service officers.

I was Deputy Secretary of State. I do not know our current Chargé personally. We have met over Zoom and phone just in these past weeks. But I have developed the highest regard for her and have only heard very strong things.

It is not a criticism of the people who step in. It is actually to their credit. They have the capacity to step in and step up but it does not mean that you should not have a confirmed Ambassador.

Senator SCHATZ. Two more questions specifically about the West Bank. Just your thoughts on how we prevent this conflict from metastasizing and, obviously, there are geopolitical implications and a regional war that we are worried about.

But it seems to me that one of our primary objectives ought to be to prevent conflict in the West Bank and then we have got two fronts in this war—in this conflict. I would like your thoughts on that.

Mr. LEW. So I think preventing this from becoming a multi-front war is hugely important for Israel, for the region, for the world.

I think the decision that the President made to dispatch the aircraft carrier fleet Gerald Ford and now to have a second aircraft carrier group on the way is a powerful, powerful message to anyone who thinks that this should be a moment of opportunity to take advantage of.

I dearly hope that we do not have to use those resources. You deploy those resources in order not to have to use them but they demonstrate the capacity should you need to.

Senator SCHATZ. One comment and then one question. It seems to me that as some of our colleagues have tried to sort of poke holes in your resume and justify a no vote that your primary transgression is that you worked for Democrats in the past.

I mean, that is what this is and I think it is important. I think it is fair, actually, that if someone disagrees so vehemently about the JCPOA, fair enough. But to challenge your character, to say that you lied when you did not, to characterize a partisan report as a bipartisan report when it was not, is unfair to you. It is unfair to all public servants who put themselves at that table.

Final question—I want to take it for the record just to stay on time. I think Senator Scott’s question about the kind of fog of war and the new information warfare and the complications of social media and deep fakes and just a toxic stew especially on the internet there is lots of lying in warfare in any case but it can be accelerated and it is just worse than ever.

And I would just like your thoughts for the record later on what you think the Ambassador can do to be a reliable, consistent source of information in this Information Age, which probably means you are looking at three- to four-hour increments of posting reliable information.

People know I am on Twitter. I have shut down the app because I cannot find anything that I can rely upon and I think that is not a small thing if people do not know where to go for good information.

Mr. LEW. Ironically, Senator, I have never used social media.

Senator SCHATZ. Good.

Mr. LEW. I have been told that if confirmed I will have to learn how.

Senator SCHATZ. Well, my recommendation is to have someone do it for you. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Secretary Lew, I would like to turn to an area that you know well. That is Israel’s sworn enemy Iran. I want to ask you a very simple question. Is the security of America, the security of Israel, better or worse if Iran has more funds or less funds?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I think that my actions have demonstrated that denying Iran funds when they commit malign acts is something that is in our interest. I have sanctioned Iran, I have enforced sanctions on Iran, and the fact that in an agreement to roll back Iran’s nuclear program releasing funds to Iran was part of the bargain is the way sanctions work. You do not get sovereign countries to change their policy without some concession on the sanctions.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, regarding the concessions, I just want to say that Iran, as we know, funds its proxies Hamas and Hezbollah. Biden administration officials have very recently just admitted this fact.

Last week National Security Adviser Jake Sullivan said, and I quote, “Iran has provided the lion’s share of the funding for the military wing of Hamas.” National Security Council spokesman John Kirby, another quote, “Hamas would not have been able to function at all had it not been for propping up by the Iranian regime.”

Mr. Chairman, I would like to enter both of these quotes for the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

The CHAIRMAN. I will give the senator the additional time. If you are showing a poster it would be nice if the committee could see the poster, just so we know.

Senator HAGERTY. Certainly. Certainly. We have a second one. Can you place that right there, Daniel, in front of the secretary? The other posters the Chairman would like to be able to see it, too. Do you not have a second copy of it? Just a moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LEW. That is a different poster.

The CHAIRMAN. They are different posters.

Senator HAGERTY. Sorry. We will turn that—turn that a bit to show the Chairman. It is a very simple poster.

Mr. LEW. I have to confess, Senator, I cannot read it either so I do not know exactly—

Senator HAGERTY. I will explain what it is, Mr. Secretary.

It is a year by year poster showing the revenues going to Iran. It shows what happened when the maximum pressure campaign was imposed. I worked on that maximum pressure campaign stopping the Japanese from buying Iranian crude. They stopped.

We brought their revenues—Iranian revenues down to below $8 billion. You will see that in 2020. That is the low point on this chart. Then in 2021—these are the last two bars—2021 and 2022 you see a dramatic increase in revenues to Iran.

Now, think about this. In 2020 as the maximum pressure campaign was imposed it was widely reported that Hamas and Hezbollah were going broke. In 2021 we had the violence from Gaza into Israel, the 11-Day War. We have seen what has happened now.

So I am going to come back to my question again and ask what has changed?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I cannot—since I cannot read it I cannot comment on the specific numbers there and, candidly, it is seven years of policy.

Senator HAGERTY. I will explain the numbers to you.

Mr. LEW. But I can tell you two things. First, what was true when I was at the Department of Treasury and what has been true since even during the period of maximum pressure is that Iran has put funding malign activities like support for Hamas terrorism above everything else and it does not cost that much. So they have been bad actors when they have had a lot of oil revenue, when they have had less oil revenue.

Senator HAGERTY. I do not doubt that. But the effectiveness of it has been dramatically different based on the impact of the maximum pressure campaign and, again, you can see the magnitude of this chart.

Mr. LEW. But I was trying to make a slightly different point. If I understand what this chart says the funds into Iran went down. I am saying—

Senator HAGERTY. For 2020. Then 2021 and '22 they have gone up dramatically.

Mr. LEW. I am not aware that funding for Hamas and Hezbollah went down. I will get briefed on that I am sure.

Senator HAGERTY. I think you are aware of the results of it, Mr. Secretary, and in terms of what has changed I think it is very obvious what has changed.

Joe Biden was inaugurated in 2021. The maximum pressure campaign was abandoned and now a policy of appeasement has been undertaken with Iran. That is what has allowed them to enrich themselves.

Let me turn to another area of great concern and that is the special envoy for Iran, Rob Malley. He is now suspended. His security clearances have been lifted and he is under federal investigation. Do you know Rob Malley?

Mr. LEW. I have not—yes, I have known him. I have not talked to him in years.

Senator HAGERTY. Did he undertake efforts to quash sanctions enforcement on Iran?

Mr. LEW. I do not recall Rob Malley having a role in the enforcement of sanctions.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, very obviously something has dramatically changed here and it is clear to me that the Biden administration's enforcement of sanctions against Iran is every bit as ineffective as the Biden administration's enforcement of our border security. Everything and everyone gets through and the results have been deadly.

I just want to say this. If you are selected to be chief of mission your number-one priority is going to be the safety and security of Americans.

Mr. LEW. Absolutely.

Senator HAGERTY. We have already lost 30 American lives. Thirteen are held hostage. That needs to be your absolute priority, Mr. Secretary.

Mr. LEW. Senator, I could not agree with you more and I have said earlier in this hearing there will not be a day when I wake up where that is not top of mind.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, it is clear to me that this administration does not have our safety and security at interest because of this enrichment of Iran that has allowed this type of behavior to happen.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair has been very lenient—well, allowing members to pursue the nuclear issues with Iran. I just would like to point out we do have a nominee for the Office of Sanctions Coordinator and I hope that we can get a hearing on that nominee because I think that would be the appropriate place to talk about sanctions enforcement and previous policies concerning sanction enforcement.

So I hope we can get a hearing on that and I think that would probably be the more appropriate setting for us to deal with the sanction policies. Just pointing it out to my dear friend from Tennessee.

Senator HAGERTY. Mr. Chairman, and my—and with the deepest respect, the Chief of Mission will be the President's representative in Israel.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, I understand the—

Senator HAGERTY. And I think the policies are absolutely critical because Israel is in mortal danger as are Americans and this funding program that has been allowed to go on is absolutely critical to Iran's ability to fund their proxies like Hamas and Hezbollah. We have got to acknowledge this, recognize it, and deal with it.

Thank you very much, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Merkley?

Senator MERKLEY. Mr. Secretary, thank you.

We are all aware that Gaza is one of the most densely populated places in the world—139 square miles, an average of 17,000 people per square mile. If you are confirmed will you work with Israel—with the Government of Israel to minimize the harm to civilians?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I think minimizing the harm to civilians is something that is a moral obligation and I only wish one could say that there would be no collateral damage. But as we have learned in war there is, and the goal as you put it is to minimize it.

Senator MERKLEY. Will you, if you are confirmed, work with Israel to make sure that schools and hospitals and power and water systems are not targeted?

Mr. LEW. Senator, if confirmed I will work with Israel to underscore what President Biden has I think said very eloquently, that they have a right and a responsibility to defend Israel but that what binds us together is a shared belief in democracy and rule of law including the law of war.

Senator MERKLEY. Do you agree that schools, hospitals, power and water systems should not be targeted?

Mr. LEW. So I am unable to answer the hypothetical question because there are cases where Hamas is hiding behind civilians with materiel, command centers, leaders, and how you define something as a school or a command post makes all the difference in the world.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Mr. Secretary. I will state for the record that I believe schools and hospitals and power and water systems should not be targeted.

And, Mr. Chairman, I would like to put into the record, if there is no objection, an article by Thomas Friedman, “Why a Gaza invasion ‘once and for all’ thinking are wrong for Israel.” If no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much.

Mr. Friedman points out that Iran’s number-one strategic objective with Israel has been to ensure that Israel remains enmeshed in the West Bank and Iran’s most fevered dreams reoccupies Gaza. Do you agree with Mr. Friedman’s analysis?

Mr. LEW. I think Hamas’ goal is the elimination of Israel and they will pursue any strategy that they think advances that goal.

Senator MERKLEY. So and I know you are not specifically responding to Mr. Friedman’s quote but could you?

Mr. LEW. I would rather read it, the whole thing, in context. Tom is a friend of mine. Before I agree or disagree with something I really would need to read it.

Senator MERKLEY. Okay. Well, I think it is pretty accurate. He notes that keeping—Iran’s goal to keep Israel enmeshed in the West Bank and most fevered dream in Gaza does reflect a lot of intelligence and experience, information over time.

He then lays out that if there is a ground offensive into Israel it could have numerous impacts including blowing up the Abraham Accords, destabilizing Egypt and Jordan as key allies, making normalization of relations between Israel and Saudi Arabia impossible, and notes that these would be huge strategic setbacks both for the United States and for Israel. Do you agree with him?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I think that the task of any nation to defend its people forces leaders to make very hard decisions. I cannot sit here today and say I know with precision what it is that will defend the state of Israel and the people of Israel.

I believe that the Government of Israel will try to make those decisions in a way that will be successful but not lead to the kind of long-term entanglement that I believe that that comment is referred to. At the moment, I am not going to sit here and prejudge exactly where that line is.

Senator MERKLEY. Yeah. But the point Mr. Friedman is making is that these are key strategic objectives of the United States, that we have stakes in the region, and that there are huge risks of the entanglement that comes with a ground offensive and, quite frankly, I think he has pretty accurately described those risks.

He concludes by noting it will play into Iran's strategy of sucking Israel into an overstretched situation and weaken the Jewish democracy from within. I just want to make the point that we also have important strategies and goals as a nation that our diplomat, our Ambassador, will bring into the conversations and that we need to have an Ambassador who is willing and able to bring that discussion to bear.

And you do have the experience to bring insights on the potential impacts that affect both Israeli interests and American interests and I assume you are going to do that as Ambassador.

Mr. LEW. Senator, I hope I have demonstrated over my career that I am not shy about sharing what I believe to be the right policy. I have never been shy to defend the interests of the United States and I have tried to do it in a way where I can maintain relations with people I disagree with.

I have had many conversations with the prime minister of Israel where we have not agreed and we have a relationship where I believe he has trust in me. So I will be in a position to raise issues. I just cannot sit here today and say exactly what the lines will be in the fog of war. Senator Merkley: I am deeply empathetic with the people of Israel after this horrific slaughter by Hamas—just shocking and devastating and savage.

I also believe that we have a responsibility to do everything we can to work with Israel, to defend innocent Palestinians who are as much victims of Hamas as many others, and that that needs to be part of the effort that we carry forward.

Mr. LEW. Absolutely, and as I said earlier, even while we have been sitting here agreement was reached on humanitarian corridors. The President committed $100 million to humanitarian relief. I do not have the details. I just have a note that those things happened while we have been sitting here and I think that is crucially important.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Senator SHAHEEN [presiding]. Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Mr. Lew, welcome. Congratulations on your nomination to this important position. Grateful for your desire to serve the country in this capacity.

But before I begin, thank you for the conversation we had in my office. It was frank. It was open. I recognize that if you are confirmed you will be taking a critical role at an incredibly challenging time.

But it is now even more challenging because of the role that Iran has been permitted to have in outfitting, encouraging, and possibly directing—we do not know for sure—the terrorist acts of its regional proxies.

So we do not know the breadth of some of those directives. When we spoke we spent quite a bit of time on Iran and your former role as Treasury secretary. I know that has been subject of a lot of conversation today including the role that Treasury played in implementing the financial aspects of the Obama administration's Iran deal.

I wanted to follow up on some of my questions in the hope that you have had a chance to review the particulars of our discussion and Treasury's role.

When Treasury issued specific licenses as opposed to the general licenses to enable the conversion of Iranian funds into euros was this transaction directly connected to the financial relief at the core of the JCPOA and associated U.N. resolutions or was it connected to so-called side deals, for example, between Iran and the IAEA that were kept from Congress?

Now, this distinction matters because I believe it lies at the heart of how Congress was left in the dark before and after the JCPOA was negotiated and went into effect. Please respond.

Mr. LEW. Senator, I appreciate your taking the time to talk with me about these issues yesterday and it was a frank and candid discussion. I am grateful for that. I apologize that I have not had time.

I have been working nonstop since the meeting I was in with you and it is not a simple matter to go back and refresh your memory on details, some of which I might not have even been aware.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. I will follow up in writing.

Mr. LEW. I would be happy to follow up.

Senator YOUNG. All right. Thank you.

I would like to turn to U.S. assistance to the Palestinians. The Palestinian Authority to this day maintains a martyrs fund that subsidizes and incentivizes acts of violence and terror against the people of Israel.

Given the ongoing conflict and the possibility that Israel's enemies may seek to expand the assault on Israel we must impose a higher level of scrutiny on U.S. assistance both bilateral and through multilateral organizations like the United Nations to ensure that any future U.S. aid does not support this reprehensible policy and that no U.S. dollar support acts of terrorism.

If confirmed, Mr. Lew, how will you use your role including the role you must exert over U.S. policy towards the Palestinian leadership and people to ensure that any U.S. assistance including through multilateral institutions like UNRWA does not directly or indirectly support terrorist activities or violate the Taylor Force Act?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I do not believe that there is anything tolerable about paying people to commit acts of terrorism and murder and paying families of so-called martyrs to me is just immoral, and I will do everything I can as Ambassador to bring that to bear both in our bilateral assistance and in our engagement with international partners.

If confirmed, it is something that—it is a very difficult relationship in international organizations and I have engaged in those conversations before and I have taken tough issues to international partners before and it would be something that I would look forward to working with you and this committee on to make sure that it is center on our attention.

Senator YOUNG. Relatedly—thank you, Mr. Lew—how will you use your role in conjunction with collaboration with other U.S. Ambassadors in the region to urge that donors, especially within the region, both heavily restrict and ensure oversight over financial support to the Palestinian Authority and to nominally humanitarian and aid organizations operating in the West Bank and Gaza?

Mr. LEW. So I have started just reaching out to some of the other Ambassadors in the region, some of whom I have known and some of whom I have not. I think it is a responsibility of the chief of mission in Israel to work closely with Ambassadors in other countries, to work with the State Department, and I do not think it is an easy one size fits all answer because there are different countries with different relationships with different benefits to the United States involved and they are not new issues to me.

I have engaged in these conversations from other seats. I think it is important and it is something that I would be doing for the first time as chief of mission.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Lew. I have no further questions. I am over my time. And Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Actually, it is Senator Van Hollen.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Secretary, welcome. Thank you and your family for taking on this awesome responsibility at this horrible time. I have known you for a long time. We have not always agreed on everything although we usually do. I have always known you as a person of great integrity.

Mr. LEW. Thank you, Senator. GovernmentAs I told you when we met in my office yesterday I woke up on October 7th to hear the horrible news of the Hamas terrorist attack and my mind immediately went to kibbutz Kfar Aza which was a kibbutz that I had visited in late June.

It is three kilometers from the border with Gaza where 50 residents were murdered including women, children, babies, and elderly, killed in their homes, people abducted.

So yes, Israel not only has a right but it does have a responsibility to defend itself and to go after Hamas and end its operational control in Gaza. I think you would also agree—I just want to make sure as you take on this position you agree that it is both in America's interest and Israel's interest that the war be prosecuted in accordance with international law and the rules of war.

Mr. LEW. Yes, I do. Government To that end, I was pleased that as we are gathered here there was an announcement in Israel where President Biden said, quote, "The people of Gaza need food, water, medicine, and shelter," and the report indicates that we may have some agreement with the Israeli Government to allow convoys to cross the Gaza-Egyptian border.

It is going to be very important that that work swiftly and effectively. As I told you yesterday, from reports on the ground the current rationing of water in Gaza is about a liter a day, which is not sufficient to sustain human life.

People have already begun drinking farm water, agricultural water. There is a great fear from all the humanitarian specialists on the ground about the spread of disease—waterborne disease.

So it is going to be essential in limiting the harm to innocent civilians—2 million people in Gaza, half of them children—that we get this humanitarian corridor opened right away.

I also hope you will ask the Government of Israel to open up more of the pipes. There was an announcement the other day about it opening a pipe by the National Security Adviser. Turned out it was one pipe and at least initially only three hours a day.

So that is going to be really important, and it is not only a moral responsibility for the United States and Israel. It is also in our interests because the world has embraced Israel in the moment of horror. But unnecessary human suffering in Gaza will change people's public perceptions.

Now, you have been nominated by the President of the United States so I just want to confirm that you agree with some of the things the commander in chief just said in the last couple days.

Number one, the vast majority of Palestinians are not Hamas and Hamas does not represent the Palestinian people. Do you agree?

Mr. LEW. I do agree with that. I think the vast majority of the Palestinian people are being used as pawns by Hamas and as human shields. Government So—and I agree with you. I ask that one of the first meetings you undertake if you are nominated is to meet with our three-star general Fenzel who is the commander that works with both the Israelis and the Palestinian Authority. Will you agree to do that?

Mr. LEW. I do not know General Fenzel. But even when I was Deputy Secretary of State I met with his predecessor on each of my visits to Israel and, as I said earlier, the mission that that office has is critical to creating the possibility of stability in any Palestinian—Government Well, let me just say, Mr. Secretary, and I mentioned this to you earlier, a lot of U.S. Government reporting right now has indicated that while the world is focused on what is happening in Gaza there are extreme settlers on the West Bank that as we speak are seizing more and more Palestinian lands in Area C. That will strengthen Hamas in the West Bank and undermine the legitimate Palestinian voices.

So I hope you will look into that right away. Let me also just say, since you opened your testimony with a sort of looking to the next day, in some spirit of optimism I do hope that we can expand the Abraham Accords.

I do think we can get back to discussions between—of normalization of relations between Saudi Arabia and Israel. Twenty senators wrote to the President before this horror started and said that that agreement will only bring lasting peace and stability to the Middle East if it addresses the Palestinian issues—the legitimate Palestinian questions—as President Biden has said, giving them equal measures of justice and dignity. Do you agree?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I believed before this war and since that in order for there to be an agreement there would need to be attention paid to the Palestinian issues. I think we are at a moment now where the—in the midst of a war with a country that is torn apart by grief is probably not the right time to start that conversation again. But after this war is over it has to be part of the conversation. Government I raised it, Mr. Secretary, because you did in your opening comments. So I do think it is important to look to the day after to see if we can create any hope in this moment of darkness.

Mr. LEW. I have long believed that the path towards a long-term stable Middle East and a democratic and Jewish Israel is a two-state solution. One has to deal with this issue if one is going to be on that path. Government We agree. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN [presiding]. Senator Cruz?

Senator CRUZ. Mr. Secretary, welcome.

You and I had a vigorous conversation in my office yesterday. You said at the time nobody could have imagined what happened in Israel with this terror attack. I have to say I disagreed then and I disagree now. Many of us not only imagined, we predicted it.

You were a critical player in the Obama administration's campaign of appeasement with Iran. You played a pivotal role in flooding over $100 billion to the Iranian regime. The Biden administration has continued that policy, flooding nearly an additional $100 billion to the Iranian regime.

That policy of appeasement, sending hundreds of billions of dollars to a theocratic, homicidal, genocidal maniac who leads chants of death to America and death to Israel, has proven catastrophic.

The death squads in Israel from Hamas are funded in real and meaningful ways by the billions of dollars the Obama administration and now the Biden administration has flowed directly to Iran. That has proven disastrous.

We also have drones. As you know, today the U.N. arms embargo on Iran expires today, ironically, the day of your hearing. You were pivotal in advocating for U.N. Resolution 2231, the Iran deal, which is why the arms embargo is expiring today.

On October 7th Hamas used swarms of sophisticated drones in their October 7th attack. Do you believe the world is safer today because of 2231 and the expiration of the arms embargo allowing Iran now to sell ballistic missiles and long-range drones?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I think you would have to agree that the history of the U.S. engagement on JCPOA has changed substantially since I sat in this room.

Senator CRUZ. Do you think the world is better and safer with the arms embargo expired?

Mr. LEW. But, Senator, if the U.S. was not—

Senator CRUZ. Yes or no. Are we safer today with no arms embargo?

Mr. LEW. I think it is much more complicated than that because we are not part of JCPOA. Therefore, there was no extension of the arms embargo. I would have advocated for an extension of the arms embargo and we might well have—

Senator CRUZ. And by the way, the Biden administration has been in power two and a half—two and a half years. The arms embargo is expiring today and you were pivotal in that happening.

Let us shift to another thing. Because the Biden administration did not just send money to Iran in massive numbers. It has also sent money to Gaza that went to Hamas, and at the time I led a coalition of senators urging the Biden administration do not send money to Gaza because it is controlled by Hamas. It will be used by Hamas for acts of terrorism.

We now know that the Biden administration reached the following determination, and I quote, “Due to its overall strength and level of control over Gaza we assess that there is a high risk Hamas could potentially derive indirect unintentional benefit from U.S. assistance to Gaza.” High risk.

Now, as Treasury secretary you are familiar with these determinations. Under ordinary anti-terrorism laws you cannot send money where there is a high risk it will be used for terrorism.

But what did the Biden administration do? It waived our anti-terrorism law because their political agenda was so important they were willing to take that high risk.

Was it a mistake to send hundreds of millions of dollars to Gaza that in a very real and practical way funded the death squads and funded the rockets that are being used to murder Israelis?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I was not in government at the time these decisions were made.

Senator CRUZ. Was it a mistake?

Mr. LEW. I am not—I am not familiar with the back and forth that you are referring to. But my understanding is the funding that went to Gaza was for things like the hospital and humanitarian—

Senator CRUZ. So was OFAC wrong when it concluded there is a high risk that Hamas could derive benefits?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I would have to look at the document to—

Senator CRUZ. You are one of few people that has the expertise to do this.

Mr. LEW. Yeah. I have high regard for OFAC. I just am not familiar with the document.

Senator CRUZ. So is the world safer or less safe because hundreds of millions of dollars were sent to Gaza when it is controlled by Hamas?

Mr. LEW. Senator, Hamas’ activities have proven how evil they are and how important it is to deny them resources.

Senator CRUZ. Okay. So you are not answering that question. Let me ask this question.

Mr. LEW. But I will say this, Senator.

Senator CRUZ. The Biden administration, the Biden State Department—

Mr. LEW. As secretary of the Treasury—

Senator CRUZ.—has repeatedly undermined Israel as this attack was ongoing. Within hours of the attack commencing the State Department sent out a tweet from the Office of Palestinian Affairs, an office that would report to you if you are confirmed, that said “We unequivocally condemn the attack of Hamas terrorists and the loss of life that has incurred. We urge all sides to refrain from violence and retaliatory attacks. Terror and violence solve nothing.” Do you agree with this tweet that was sent by the Biden State Department?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I would have to read it. I am not familiar with it.

Senator CRUZ. You are not familiar with it?

Mr. LEW. I want—I want to go back to the last point that you made.

Senator CRUZ. Hold on a second. You are not familiar with this tweet. They sent it out at 3:00 in the morning while the attacks were unfolding. I blasted it at 3:00 in the morning and they deleted it within the hour because it was shameful: They were telling Israel, do not respond while your citizens are being murdered, and by the way—

Mr. LEW. The President of the United States has stated clearly the policy of the United States. I agree—I agree with the President.

Senator CRUZ [continuing]. I understand—Mr. Lew, I understand but at the same time this administration repeatedly walks back what he says.

So here is another tweet sent from the State Department. “Turkish foreign minister and I spoke”—this is from Secretary Blinken—“spoke further on Hamas’ terrorist attack on Israel. I encouraged Turkey’s advocacy for a ceasefire and the release of all hostages held by Hamas immediately.” Do you agree with this tweet from the Secretary of State calling for a ceasefire immediately after this attack began?

Mr. LEW. I think the President and the Secretary of State have made clear that Israel has a right and a responsibility to defend itself.

Senator CRUZ. Do you agree with this tweet from the State Department?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I cannot respond to tweets that you are reading to me.

Senator CRUZ. Why? Are you not familiar with it?

Mr. LEW. I am telling you the—

Senator CRUZ. You have not followed what the administration has said on this? By the way, they deleted this tweet as well.

Day after day after day this administration has systematically undermined Israel. And, finally, you advocated for U.N. Resolution 2334, which declared much of Israel illegally occupied territory including the Jewish Quarter in Jerusalem and the Western Wall.

Do you believe the Jewish Quarter and the Western Wall are illegally occupied territory?

Mr. LEW. Senator, I do not believe that it is illegally occupied territory. But I—

Senator CRUZ. Then why did you support a U.N. resolution saying that it is?

Mr. LEW. I think the—we could have a conversation about that but it is going to take me more than 10 seconds to respond to it, which I would be happy to do.

Senator CRUZ. All the time you like.

The CHAIRMAN. Allow the witness to respond. If you will allow the witness to respond.

Mr. LEW. So, first, if I can respond. You have said a lot of things that you have not given me a chance to respond to. I sanctioned Hamas in 2015. Hamas was sanctioned again today. So I do not think it was a fair characterization of either what I did or this administration.

Second of all, the issue of a U.N. resolution is it was a U.N. resolution that all the parties had to agree to that was negotiated to take out the most offensive provisions.

Whether it was a good or a bad resolution in the end, the President decided to abstain rather than have a worse resolution come out. You can agree or disagree with that—

Senator CRUZ. He could have vetoed it.

Mr. LEW. But he was trying to prevent a worse resolution.

Senator CRUZ. He could have vetoed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired.

Senator Duckworth?

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for being here, Secretary Lew.

Who walked away from the JCPOA? Which administration?

Mr. LEW. It was the last administration.

Senator DUCKWORTH. That is what I thought. Thank you for your willingness to serve once again.

I just need to pause here and take a moment to say that my heart is hurting. Ever since October 7th I have been thinking endlessly of the children—the innocent children, Israeli, Palestinian, and even Illinoisan—whose lives have been upended or tragically ended during these devastating days.

Every night I go home and I hug my two little girls close, haunted by the suffering of the innocents. They are too young—my girls—to understand why I am so upset and why I am holding them so tightly. But there are countless families who will not get the chance to hug their children close any longer and my heart breaks for all of them.

Of those Americans presumed to be held hostage by Hamas many have ties to my home state of Illinois whether themselves being Illinoisans or by a family member or friend who has reached out to my office asking for help.

Their families and friends are advocating tirelessly for their release, for their access to basic medical care, and for information about their loved ones.

At the same time, Jewish and Muslim communities around the world are feeling deep emotional wounds from the violence. We are sadly already seeing hate crimes spring up in the wake of the war like this past weekend's horrific fatal stabbing of an innocent six-year-old Palestinian American, Wadea Al-Fayoume, in Plainfield, Illinois.

This shocking and tragic murder is a painful reminder that we must confront and reject any Islamophobic rhetoric that seeks to conflate the evils of Hamas with the Palestinian people or with any—with a vast majority of Muslim people just as we must confront and reject the anti-Semitic rhetoric that seeks to draw a false equivalence between the democratically-elected government of Israel and the terrorist organization of Hamas.

As Ambassador you would play a critical role in helping to strike the right tone for these very difficult and complex conversations while demonstrating the United States' long-term resolve and right commitment to support our Israeli allies.

I believe that you will serve and represent our interests well as a voice for democratic values that reject hate and discrimination on the basis of race, religion, or ethnicity, and ground us in our shared rights to live in peace and build a better future together but also in Israel's right to defend herself.

Secretary Lew, I want to invite you to reflect on that work and the role you hope to play if confirmed to be our Ambassador.

Mr. LEW. Senator, I find acts and beliefs of bias and hatred against people because of who they are or what they are just totally unacceptable and when it is manifested in acts of violence, whether it is against a Jew or a Muslim, it is equally horrible.

What I have said about the attacks in Israel is that almost 1,500 people were killed because they were Jewish. If it had been 1,500 Muslims who were killed because they were Muslims that would be a problem, too.

We have to try and humanize these issues and understand that it is Hamas that is the enemy. It is not Palestinians who are the enemy.

Now, Hamas hides behind Palestinians. It creates terrible, terrible choices in terms of how you defend yourself. But at the core there has to be mutual respect and, hopefully, more than respect if we can get to a better place.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Do you agree that Israel has the right to defend herself?

Mr. LEW. Absolutely.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Do you agree that the core tenet of—one of the core tenets of Hamas—is to destroy Israel?

Mr. LEW. Absolutely.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Do you agree that the innocents in Gaza deserve to have access to secure humanitarian corridors so that there is access—

Mr. LEW. Yes, and I am pleased that even this morning progress has been made on that front.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you.

If confirmed, can you commit to working to address both the urgent and underlying humanitarian needs in Gaza including establishing secure humanitarian corridors, access for key medical workers like the Red Cross and access to food, water, and sanitation for the people in Gaza?

Mr. LEW. I think we must continue to do that and if confirmed that will be part of my mission and it will have to be done in a way that respects the security of Israel and the two do not have to be inconsistent.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. I yield back. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Shaheen? The very patient Senator Shaheen.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr.—well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Secretary Lew, for your willingness to come back in and serve the Government particularly at this difficult time, and I know that your nomination occurred before this horrible tragedy in Israel and in the Middle East and so it is a very different situation than the one you were nominated for.

I think the anger and outrage that you have heard reflected on the committee is a reflection of how people are feeling worldwide towards what is happening both in terms of the horrific attack in Israel by Hamas but also the concern about the innocent Palestinians and Israelis who have been killed.

I do appreciate what I have seen coming out of Israel in terms of the country coming together and I appreciated both the Chairman and ranking member's statements, which I think reflect the committee's concern.

I hope that this will not be used as an opportunity to sow partisan divides here in the United States and in Congress because I think that is the wrong response.

What we should be talking about is how we can support Israel, how we can address the humanitarian needs of the Palestinians, how we can get the hostages back, and I hope that is going to be the focus of the discussion and, as you said, that you will get up every day thinking about how we return the hostages to America—the Americans who are held—I think is reassuring.

Mr. LEW. And, Senator, I could not agree more that this should be a moment where we try our best to rise above partisanship and talk about what is in the interest of the U.S., what is in the interest of Israel, and what is in the interest of the U.S.-Israel relationship. One of the things about this relationship is that for 75 years it has been a bipartisan effort.

Senator SHAHEEN. Absolutely.

Mr. LEW. I am committed to working with Democrats and Republicans, people who agree or disagree with me, people who vote for me and people who vote against me.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I appreciate that and I know that to be the case based on having worked with you when you were in the Obama administration.

I do want to raise a couple of issues that I think are important for you—if you are confirmed as Ambassador—and that is Senator Murphy talked about the maritime border decision that had been made between Lebanon and Israel, and we have heard a lot of discussion in the last week about the potential for a northern front on Lebanon's border with Israel.

One of the institutions that I think is helpful in that respect is the Lebanese Armed Forces and their ability to help keep the lid on in northern Lebanon.

But can you talk about what you as Ambassador could do to help address that and what would be the impact on Israel's ability to defend itself in the north if the LAF is not able to function?

Mr. LEW. Well, Senator, obviously, if confirmed my remit will be centered in Israel and we, hopefully, will still be able to have diplomats in Lebanon advancing our interests there.

I would work with them. I think the President's decision to deploy two aircraft carrier groups into the Mediterranean sends a powerful message that does not need a lot of explanation. It is more armed power than almost any other nation in the world could bring to bear. I hope that is a deterrent that is heard and we do not see a multi front war.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I certainly share that.

One of the other issues that we have not yet focused on is the challenge of the impact on the Defense Industrial Base in both Israel and the United States, given the—Putin's invasion of Ukraine.

So if confirmed how will you work with the Department of Defense, the Israeli Ministry of Defense, and U.S. defense companies to best support the delivery of military assistance to Israel?

Mr. LEW. I think that is a hugely important question that will have a whole different set of considerations than it did two weeks ago.

Until the inquiry into what happened and how Israel did not see this and respond more quickly—until that is understood—I do not know the answer. I do not know if it is things they need, people they need, strategies they need.

But it is just not acceptable to have an exposed border like that and I do not think there is probably anyone in Israel who thinks it is acceptable either. We have a relationship with Israel in the defense area that is unique in the world.

We have had a history of phasing out a special provision that allows Israel to spend U.S. defense resources domestically. I am not yet in a position to have a firm view and it is not—I have not been briefed in on all the details.

But I think we have to ask questions about is that phase out the right schedule, is there something at stake here, and something I mentioned in my testimony which I just want to underscore.

Israel's role internationally as a defense industry, as a technology industry provider, is kind of unique. It is a huge percentage of Israel's economy, much bigger as a percentage of their economy than it is of ours, and they have a level of resources, a quality of materials and technology that other countries want.

And particularly with regard to trade with China, if you had asked me two weeks ago what one of my big challenges would be I would have said it would be working with Israel to understand the need not to give China things that we would not give China to gain a military advantage.

That is not as easy as just saying do it. They may well have the view that it is central to the economics of their industry. I do not know right now.

I hope we are at a point when I am over there, if confirmed, shortly into my time where you can have those conversations and ask our closest ally in the region to be partners with us in limiting some of the spread of advanced technology.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. At the appropriate time I hope that you will focus on that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Secretary Lew, first of all, thank you for your candor and your patience during this hearing. I think you have the ability to go through long sessions of diplomacy and you have shown that quite clearly.

I just want to make one response. I think—first of all, I want to thank the members of our committee. I thought this hearing has been very helpful and productive, and Iran's capacity, its nuclear capacity, its funding, is certainly an issue of grave concern to national security interests of the United States and to Israel.

So I do not object to the questions that have been asked. But I do think it is important to clarify I was the ranking member of this committee when the JCPOA was considered, working with Senator Corker who was the Chairman of this committee, and the two of us in a bipartisan way with overwhelming support from our colleagues on the floor of the United States Senate developed a review process so that we could have an open review of the JCPOA before it went into effect.

It delayed the process for a substantial period of time for congressional input. The transparency of the Obama administration during that process was unprecedented. We had more briefings and hearings.

I thought I was qualified as a nuclear physicist listening to the secretary of energy. It was—we had in-depth discussions on every aspect of the JCPOA and we had our chance for input and, in fact, I think our input changed the agreement as it was being negotiated over that period of time.

That is how we should work in a bipartisan manner. The review was bipartisan. There were some of us who disagreed with the final product. We thought, perhaps, it was set up wrong in the beginning to allow nuclear enrichment in Iran.

I voted against the JCPOA. But I must confess that the transparency that this administration exercised was unprecedented. I met with President Obama many times and I just want to associate myself with Secretary Lew's comments that an agreement is an agreement and that we had a responsibility to carry it out and, in fact, we did carry it out.

We were in full compliance until President Trump unilaterally decided to withdraw, which I think was a mistake. It not only made the U.S. the violator of the agreement but it allowed Iran to get closer to a nuclear weapon as they are today with their enrichment policies.

Now, we are not going to be talking about that during this hearing. I understand that. This is a member of the Obama administration and it is fair to question in regards to the JCPOA.

But I must tell you, I know our nominee and I thank him again for his public service. At all times he has conducted himself with the highest degree of integrity. He served President Obama well, served our nation well, and it was always open with us in Congress, never, ever held back information that was properly—should be properly disclosed to us and I just want that on the record.

And I thank you again for your testimony.

Mr. LEW. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Risch, if you want to make any—

Senator RISCH. No.

The CHAIRMAN. We will keep the record open for questions for the record until 1:00 p.m. tomorrow, and that will give you a couple hours to get them back to us. We know—I hope you were not planning anything that important over the weekend.

But we will allow you to take a little bit of time off for prayer on Saturday but then back to work Saturday night.

If there is no further business the committee will stand adjourned. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 1:06 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. JACOB J. LEW BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. What should Israel's strategic military end state with respect to Hamas be?

Answer. I must defer to the Government of Israel to speak to its own military operations and to any possible military plans Israel may have. The President has been clear that the United States supports Israel's right to defend itself, including by taking necessary action to respond to Hamas' heinous October 7 terrorist attack on Israel and protect its citizens, consistent with the rule of law and the law of war. More broadly, there are two paths for the region: One is the way of greater integration and stability that can provide equal measures of democracy, opportunity, justice, and dignity to Israelis and Palestinians alike. The other is Hamas' path of terror, a path that does nothing to better the lives of Palestinians.

Question. Should Israeli military and diplomatic efforts seek to destroy, degrade, or simply disrupt Hamas?

Answer. I must defer to the Government of Israel to speak to its own military operations and to any possible military plans it may have. The President has been clear that the United States supports Israel's right to defend itself, including by taking necessary action to respond to Hamas' heinous October 7 terrorist attack on Israel and protect its citizens, consistent with the rule of law and the law of war.

Question. What is an appropriate end state that best supports U.S. national security interests?

Answer. The United States supports Israel taking necessary action to defend its country and protect its people from Hamas terrorists, consistent with the rule of law and the law of war. Israel and the United States should consult closely on potential end states and the means to achieve them. I believe these horrific attacks were timed to derail normalization efforts, and we need to support the Israelis—and the broader region—in upholding their national interests and working to secure a more stable region. There are two paths for the region: One is the way of greater integration and stability, which can provide equal measures of democracy, opportunity, justice, and dignity to Israelis and Palestinians alike. The other is Hamas' path of terror, a path that does nothing to better the lives of Palestinians. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Israel on this shared vision for the future.

Question. What role should the U.S. embassy play to support Israeli efforts to counter misinformation and disinformation?

Answer. U.S. Embassies regularly engage with our partners on best practices in countering propaganda and disinformation targeting overseas audiences. U.S. Embassies also collaborate with our partners to help build networks of fact-based narrative reporting by strengthening journalists, local fact checkers, aid organizations/workers, and content creators to counter information manipulation from Russia, Iran, or terrorist organizations. The United States is focused on countering efforts from malign actors such as Russia, Iran, and foreign terrorist organizations, among others, which are attempting to use this moment of strife to manipulate information to their advantage and undermine U.S. interests.

Question. What entity should synchronize whole of U.S. Government efforts to counter misinformation and preserve Israeli political space to respond to these attacks?

Answer. The Global Engagement Center (GEC) at the U.S. Department of State directs, leads, and coordinates efforts of the Federal Government to recognize, understand, expose, and counter foreign state and foreign non-state propaganda and disinformation efforts aimed at undermining or influencing the policies, security, or stability of the United States, its allies, and partner nations. The information space is very much at issue during this conflict. The GEC is working with allies and partners to share best practices for countering disinformation and to strengthen independent journalism and civil society in the region to bolster resilience against disinformation originating from state actors, terrorist groups, and other malign actors.

As Israel directs citizens to relocate from portions of Gaza ahead of a military operation, Egypt has refused to take Gazans into the Sinai. Recently, Egypt threatened to go to war with Israel should refugees begin movement across the border.

Question. What refugee options will satisfy all actors, to include Egypt, the U.S. and Israel?

Answer. I understand the Administration is working on establishing a reliable route to supply humanitarian aid to Gaza while protecting Israel's security. Recently appointed Special Envoy Satterfield is in the region coordinating these efforts and working with the Governments of Egypt and Israel to find a solution to the humanitarian situation in Gaza.

Question. What efforts are underway to solicit Gulf funding to address the flow of refugees and immediate needs to complement the President's announcement of $100M in MRA and IDA funds?

Answer. Senior U.S. officials are engaging Gulf partners to encourage these governments to provide urgent assistance to benefit the Palestinian people. On October 17, the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) announced $100 million in aid for Gaza. Senior U.S. officials are following up with appropriate contacts in Gulf Governments to learn more about this announcement and urge these governments to commit to providing sustained contributions to the U.N. appeal for Gaza, as well as coordinating bilateral assistance closely with the U.N.

Question. What specific mechanisms are in place to prevent the $100M the President announced from providing direct and indirect benefit to Hamas?

Answer. I understand the Department and the U.S. Agency for International Development have robust processes in place to mitigate the risk that U.S. Government assistance could provide material support to Hamas or any other terrorist group, including vetting implementing partners and their key personnel, restricting facility names (e.g., schools, clinics, etc.) to ensure they do not honor terrorism, including mandatory anti-terrorism clauses in grants and contracts, and coordinating with Israeli authorities. The U.S. Government also requires implementing partners to conduct their own due diligence and to have their own safeguards and risk mitigation measures in place to ensure that U.S. funding is used only for intended purposes, consistent with U.S. law. Our implementing partners must comply with robust financial and programmatic monitoring, reporting requirements, and compliance mechanisms. All U.S. assistance in Gaza and the West Bank remains subject to regular Office of the Inspector General audits and investigations. Through monitoring and evaluation and regular consultations with our implementers, we can quickly identify attempted diversion and suspend or terminate programs if necessary.

Question. In that role did you shape U.S. policy with respect to Iran or would you characterize your role as executing policies handed down from higher?

Answer. As the Secretary of the Treasury, I took seriously my responsibility to help formulate and recommend domestic and international financial policies and to oversee the activities of the Treasury Department in carrying out such policies, including those related to Iran and other matters critical to our national security.

President Obama said of Iran, "We will extend a hand if you are willing to unclench your fist." In a subsequent speech to American University, he spoke about the prospect of changing the regime's conduct and argued that the deal incentivized Iran to move in a "quote different, less provocative direction."

Question. With the benefit of your experience, do you think it's possible to divorce the regime from its revolutionary ideology?

Answer. The Obama administration saw Iran clearly for what it is: the world's foremost state sponsor of terrorism. President Obama prioritized ensuring that Iran would not develop a nuclear weapon. While he made clear that all options were on the table to prevent a nuclear-armed Iran, he also made clear that his preference was to do so through diplomacy. The JCPOA was not built on trusting the Iranian regime, but rather on the strict and intrusive monitoring of Iran's nuclear program. The Obama administration was clear-eyed in its assessment that the JCPOA would not resolve all our concerns with Iran, to include its abhorrent human rights abuses, sponsorship of terrorism and destabilizing policies around the globe.

Question. Do you think we can usher Iran back into the community of nations? If not, what is a realistic strategic end state with respect to the regime—containment?

Answer. The Iranian regime remains one of the most consequential and persistent threats to U.S. interests and it has yet to demonstrate to the world that it is willing to take the steps necessary to fully rejoin the community of nations. It is my understanding that the Biden administration is currently focused on exerting economic and diplomatic pressure on the regime in order to deter Iran and contain the range of threats Iran poses today to regional and international security. As U.S. presidents across administrations have made clear, we will always stand with the Iranian people in their quest for democracy and fundamental human rights.

In 2015 testimony before this committee, you gave your opinion on Iran sanctions relief stating, "In gauging the impact of lifting these restrictions, we should be measured and realistic . . . We assess that Iran will use the vast majority to attempt to redress its stark economic needs."

Question. Do you still believe that to be true? That Iran prioritized the needs of its people over its defense industry and proxies?

Answer. Even during periods of its greatest economic stress, Iran has prioritized funding for its destabilizing activities and support to terrorism. At the time the JCPOA was reached, Iran's economy was in dire condition as a result of the crippling sanctions we had imposed. The Obama administration assessed that Iran would have to utilize the vast majority of any potential sanctions relief to address its immediate and dire domestic economic needs. We had serious concerns about Iran's use of any of these funds to support its destabilizing activities and continued to vigorously enforce sanctions against such conduct.

In 2015 testimony, you stated "The JCPOA is a strong deal—with phased relief in exchange for Iranian compliance and a powerful snap-back built in."

Question. Do you still feel that returning to the JCPOA, now or at some point in the future, is in U.S. national security interests?

Answer. President Biden has been clear that he is committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon and that he views diplomacy as the most effective means by which to sustainably address international concerns regarding Iran's nuclear program. The administration has also been clear that it remains prepared to use appropriate measures to prevent a nuclear-armed Iran. It is my understanding that the United States is currently focused on working closely with our partners and allies to hold Iran to account for its continued expansion of its nuclear activities and its failure to fully cooperate with the International Atomic Energy Agency's ongoing investigation of possible undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran.

Question. Given the advancement in Iran's nuclear program, do you assess that the JCPOA, as previously agreed to, has a non-proliferation benefit?

Answer. I have always seen Iran as a threat to regional stability as well as Israel's existence. That threat clearly exists today. The JCPOA constrained Iran's nuclear program by limiting their ability to produce a nuclear weapon. As the United States withdrew from the JCPOA I can't speak to what might have been. However, some who opposed the JCPOA a decade ago came to see the advantages when the United States withdrew. For example, numerous Israeli defense and intelligence officials have said that withdrawal from the JCPOA gave Iran an excuse to accelerate its nuclear program and that withdrawal was a net negative for Israel.

That being said, the Biden administration has clearly stated that there is no nuclear deal in the offing and reports about a nuclear deal, interim or otherwise, are false and misleading. Now is not the time for those discussions. President Biden is committed to ensuring that Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon and that he views diplomacy as the most effective means by which to sustainably address international concerns regarding Iran's nuclear program. At the same time, the administration has been clear that it remains prepared to use all appropriate measures to prevent a nuclear-armed Iran. It is my understanding that the United States is currently focused on working closely with our partners and allies to hold Iran to account for its continued expansion of its nuclear activities and its failure to fully cooperate with the International Atomic Energy Agency's ongoing investigation of possible undeclared nuclear material and activities in Iran.

18 October 2023 marked Transition Day for UNSCR 2231, which drops restrictions on Iran's ballistic missile and drone programs. In 2 short years on Termination Day, the U.N. ends consideration of nuclear matters and snapback ends.

Question. What steps is the United States prepared to make, along with international partners, to compensate for Transition and Termination Days?

Answer. I understand the United States has never relied solely on U.N. Security Council Resolution 2231 to restrict Iran's dangerous development and proliferation of missile related technologies and UAVs, but rather a comprehensive set of multi-lateral and domestic tools. Prior to Transition Day, the same networks and individuals covered by UNSCR 2231 were already subject to U.S. sanctions authorities. On Transition Day, the U.S. sanctioned additional targets that have been enabling Iran's destabilizing ballistic missile and unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) programs. The Administration has also coordinated with our partners in the EU to ensure they maintain Europe's nuclear, conventional arms, and missile-related restrictions on Iran. As the President has made clear, the United States is committed to ensuring Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon.

Question. What is your assessment of the renewed threat to Israeli security as a result of these sunsets?

Answer. I understand the United States has never relied solely on U.N. Security Council Resolution 2231 to restrict Iran's dangerous development and proliferation of missile related technologies and UAVs, but rather a comprehensive set of multi-lateral and domestic tools. The United States, the Europeans, and other allies including the UK and Canada continue to have restrictions on Iran's nuclear, conventional arms, and missile-related programs under their domestic sanctions authorities. The United States has already effectively targeted the same networks and individuals covered by UNSCR 2231 and added more with our own sanctions authorities. Although we cannot guarantee that Iran will not find customers for these weapons systems, its missile and UAV programs continue to remain subject to sanctions under some of the strongest sanctions frameworks in the world, ours and Europe's, and we will do everything we can to counter Iran's dangerous proliferation activities.

Iran's support for terror groups is the regime's most malign activity. In 2015 you stated that, "the JCPOA will address the danger of Iran's nuclear program—lowering the overall threat posture and freeing us and our allies to check Iran's regional activities more aggressively, while keeping our sanctions on support for terrorist activity in place." Clearly, Iran continues to prioritize support for terror proxies.

Question. How can we better disrupt Iran's support for proxies like Hamas, Hezbollah, and Palestinian Islamic Jihad (PIJ)?

Answer. I understand the U.S. Government has and will continue to find ways to disrupt Iran's support for Hamas, Hizballah, and Palestinian Islamic Jihad. All three groups are designated as terrorist organizations, and are subject to stringent sanctions, including restrictions on financial flows. Following the terrorist attack on Israel, the Treasury Department imposed sanctions on additional Hamas operatives and financial facilitators, as part of a continuous effort by the United States to root out Hamas's sources of revenue in the West Bank and Gaza. We will continue to work with our partners and allies to identify members of these groups and put pressure on Iran to stop backing terrorist proxies.

Question. How do you respond to argument that the transfer of funds to Iran during the Obama administration and the Biden administration unfreezing of $6B in exchange for wrongfully detained Americans incentivizes hostage taking and makes Americans abroad less safe?

Answer. I understand that the $6 billion of Iranian funds held in restricted accounts in Doha may only be used for non-sanctionable, humanitarian transactions, and that funds would not be moved without first consulting with the U.S. Government. The State Department has no higher priority than the safety and security of U.S. nationals overseas. The United States will do whatever it can to provide all appropriate support for U.S. nationals unjustly held overseas. Further, I understand that the Biden Administration is closely coordinating with like-minded governments to deter the use of arbitrary detention for political leverage and ultimately to end this cruel practice.

Question. What are the implications of the Biden administration unfreezing Iranian funds on potential Hamas requests for funds in exchange for hostages in Gaza?

Answer. My understanding is the arrangement to secure the freedom of five unjustly detained U.S. citizens from Iran in September has no connection to Hamas or Hamas's October 7 attacks on Israel. The $6 billion in Iranian funds were transferred from a restricted account in the Republic of Korea to an even more restricted account in Qatar. None of this money will reach Iran or its proxies and it may only be used for approved humanitarian transactions to third party vendors, consistent with longstanding U.S. law, under rigorous supervision.

Question. While the Biden administration insists funds are for humanitarian purposes, isn't all money fungible and a net gain for the regime's terror budget? Please explain in detail.

Answer. These funds were available for purchases of humanitarian goods when they were in the Republic of Korea, as they are now in Qatar. Across U.S. administrations it has remained longstanding policy to ensure our sanctions do not prevent humanitarian goods from flowing to ordinary people, no matter how objectionable their governments. The availability of these funds is consistent with that longstanding policy and U.S. law across sanctions programs, and any transaction will be subject to rigorous oversight. Not a single penny of the funds has been spent as of now.

Question. What did you mean when you said you did "not recall whether those licenses were the vehicle through which funds moved" in response to my question on this topic?

Answer. The United States took a number of steps in order to fulfill its commitments under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution in to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA and remain in place today.

Question. Upon reflection, do you recall the Treasury Department's approval of the specific license to Bank Muscat on February 24, 2016, to process this transaction (and future transactions) for the benefit of the Government of Iran?

Answer. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question. Did that license, in fact, authorize Bank Muscat to legally convert Omani rials to U.S. dollars, and U.S. dollars into euros, on behalf of the Iranian Government without violating U.S. sanctions laws in place at the time?

Answer. The United States took a number of steps in order to fulfill its commitments under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. Question (resubmitted). Did that license, in fact, authorize Bank Muscat to legally convert Omani rials to U.S. dollars, and U.S. dollars into euros, on behalf of the Iranian Government without violating U.S. sanctions laws in place at the time?

Answer. Yes. Although it was not ultimately utilized, the U.S. Department of the Treasury issued a specific license to Bank Muscat to authorize a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA.

Under U.S. sanctions laws, such a license was both lawful to issue and ensured the permissibility of the transaction with U.S. laws. The use of Treasury's specific licensing authority did not lift, suspend, or otherwise change our sanctions architecture, which continues to deny Iran access to the U.S. financial system.

Question. But for that specific license, would this transaction have been legal under U.S. sanctions laws at the time? Or, put differently, would Bank Muscat have been able to process that transaction without violating U.S. sanctions laws in place at the time?

Answer. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question (resubmitted). But for that specific license, would this transaction have been legal under U.S. sanctions laws at the time? Or, put differently, would Bank Muscat have been able to process that transaction without violating U.S. sanctions laws in place at the time?

Answer. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to authorize the conversion of Omani rial for the onward movement of Iranian funds, to the extent a U.S. bank was involved in the conversion transaction. Treasury assessed that a license would be required for such a transaction. Under U.S. sanctions laws, such a license was both lawful to issue and ensured the permissibility of the transaction with U.S. laws. The use of Treasury's specific licensing authority did not lift, suspend, or otherwise change our sanctions architecture, which continues to deny Iran access to the U.S. financial system.

Question. If not the February 24, 2016 license, was there another license or mechanism that made the transaction legal under U.S. law at the time?

Answer. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question (resubmitted). If not the February 24, 2016 license, was there another license or mechanism that made the transaction legal under U.S. law at the time?

Answer. Treasury assessed that a license would be needed for the lawful conversion of Omani rial for the onward movement of Iranian funds, to the extent a U.S. bank was involved in the transaction. Absent involvement of a U.S. financial institution or other U.S. nexus to the transaction, the specific license was not required.

Question. Why didn't you notify the Senate Foreign Relations Committee or Congress that such salient specific licenses were being issued? Would you make the same decision today?

Answer. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was fully briefed on the scope of sanctions relief provided to Iran under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question (resubmitted). Why didn't you notify the Senate Foreign Relations Committee or Congress that such salient specific licenses were being issued? Would you make the same decision today?

Answer. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was fully briefed on the scope of sanctions relief provided to Iran under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question. Do you consider authorization to convert currency to or from U.S. dollars outside the United States to be "access to the U.S. financial system"? If not, why not?

Answer. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question (resubmitted). Do you consider authorization to convert currency to or from U.S. dollars outside the United States to be "access to the U.S. financial system"? If not, why not?

Answer. Since the removal of the so-called U-turn authorization in 2008, transactions by third-country financial institutions on behalf of (or involving an interest of) an Iranian person through the United States are not permissible, unless licensed or exempt under U.S. sanctions laws. Treasury's licensing authority is derived from statute and longstanding to ensure the administrability of sanctions, enabling Treasury to license transactions in the U.S. national security and foreign policy interest. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to Bank Muscat, to allow access to funds consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA.

The use of Treasury's specific licensing authority did not lift, suspend, or otherwise change our sanctions architecture, which continues to deny Iran access to the U.S. financial system. Under U.S. sanctions laws, such a license was both lawful to issue and ensured the permissibility of the transaction with U.S. laws.

Question. Is it true that Treasury officials under your purview contacted two U.S. financial institutions to encourage them to convert the Omani rials? If so, did you direct those officials to contact those banks?

Answer. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question. Do you consider authorization to U.S. financial institutions to convert currency to or from U.S. dollars for the benefit of a foreign government to be "access to the U.S. financial system"? If not, why not?

Answer. The United States did not allow Iran access to the U.S. financial system under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question. When this license was issued in February 2016, did anyone at the Treasury Department suggest or discuss revising your previous testimony to Congress regarding knowledge or efforts to allow Iran access to the U.S. financial system in order to facilitate transactions to convert assets on behalf of the Government of Iran?

Answer. I stand by my previous testimony to Congress. The United States took a number of steps to fulfill its commitments under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to a non-Iranian financial institution to facilitate a transaction consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA. U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question. What are your views on the Abraham Accords and related normalization agreements on their impact on U.S. interests in the region?

Answer. The 2020 Abraham Accords and related normalization agreements are historic and important contributions to peace and security in the Middle East. If confirmed, I will work to sustain and deepen the relationships Israel has established through the Abraham Accords, and expand regional integration by supporting new countries normalizing their relations with Israel.

Question. Given the Israel-Gaza war, what specific steps will you take as ambassador to keep Saudi-Israel normalization on the table as a viable option?

Answer. I believe the Hamas attacks were designed in part to undermine the normalization process. The way to respond to that is by coming right back to focusing on regional integration and advancing the Abraham Accords, as soon as we can. The way to prevent terrorists from winning is by not running away and by upholding our national interests. It was never going to be simple to get an Israeli-Saudi normalization agreement. But it was in our interests to pursue one before these Hamas attacks, and it will only be more so after this crisis.

Question. In 2016 John Kerry argued that there would be no "separate peace" between Israel and Arabs without first solving the issue of Palestinian statehood. What are your views on Palestinian statehood and its ties to additional normalization agreements?

Answer. The Biden Administration remains committed to a two-state solution as the best way to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and to achieve equal measures of security, prosperity, freedom, and democracy for Israelis and Palestinians alike. Normalization between Israel and Arab states is a hugely positive development, and if confirmed, I will do everything I can to expand it further. However, normalization is not a substitute for Israeli-Palestinian peace, though it can help advance that goal. As the administration has indicated, any normalization agreement between Israel and Saudi Arabia would include significant components addressing fundamental issues between Israelis and Palestinians.

Question. Does re-inserting Palestinian statehood back into the peace process hinder prospects of further normalizations with Israel?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to sustain and deepen the relationships Israel has established through the Abraham Accords, and expand regional integration by supporting new countries normalizing their relations with Israel. I also will work to encourage constructive engagement between Saudi Arabia, Israel, and the Palestinians. As the administration has indicated, any normalization agreement between Israel and Saudi Arabia, or any other country in the region, would include significant components dealing with fundamental issues between Israelis and Palestinians. The Biden Administration remains committed to a two-state solution as the best way to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and achieve equal measures of security, prosperity, freedom, and democracy for Israelis and Palestinians alike.

Saudi Arabia has reportedly requested Palestinian concessions in exchange for normalization with Israel, along with changes to U.S. policy.

Question. What are your views on suitable Palestinian concessions related to Israel-Saudi normalization, particularly given the current conflict? Please provide your views on each of the reported Palestinian concessions below.

- a. Transferring Area C in the West Bank to the Palestinian Authority
- b. “Complete cessation” of Israeli settlement growth in the West Bank
- c. Resuming Saudi financial support to the PA to $200M per year
- d. Re-opening the U.S. consulate to Palestinians in Jerusalem
- e. Resuming U.S.-brokered negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians.

Answer. As the administration has indicated, any normalization agreement between Israel and Saudi Arabia would include significant components dealing with fundamental issues between Israelis and Palestinians. I cannot speak to hypothetical situations, but I continue to believe that expanding the Abraham Accords is in the best interest of the United States and the region. If confirmed, I will work to sustain and deepen the relationships Israel has established through the Abraham Accords, and expand regional integration by supporting new countries normalizing their relations with Israel.

Question. Should the Palestinian Authority be required to reform pay-for-slay before Saudi Arabia resumes financial support to the PA?

Answer. The Palestinian practice of prisoner and “martyr” payments is abhorrent and unacceptable. If confirmed, I will do everything in my power to end this practice in a manner that addresses longstanding U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I would uphold the provisions of the Taylor Force Act and build on the sustained diplomatic engagement and pressure exerted thus far, underscoring that an essential part of resetting the U.S.-Palestinian relationship is seeing reform of this heinous practice.

Question. Alternatively, would you support an independent fund to receive international donations for the Palestinians that excludes the Palestinian Authority?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with Congress, as well as our allies and partners, to help garner support to alleviate the suffering of the Palestinian people, who are also suffering at the hands of Hamas. All assistance is provided consistent with U.S. law, including the Taylor Force Act. U.S. support to UNRWA, which directly supports Palestinians in Gaza as well as in the region, since 2021 has totaled more than $1 billion. On October 18, the President announced $100 million in additional humanitarian assistance for the Palestinian people in Gaza and the West Bank. Funding will help support over a million displaced and conflict-affected people with clean water, food, hygiene support, medical care, and essential needs. This assistance will be provided through trusted partners, including U.N. agencies and international NGOs who have undergone extensive vetting.

Question. Please provide your views on the relocation of the U.S. embassy to Jerusalem, recognition of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and United States recognition of Israel’s sovereignty over the Golan Heights. What is your view on the reversibility of these U.S. policies?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to support the Administration’s policies and to support and strengthen Israel’s security. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as Israel’s capital and our Embassy is there and I understand that President Biden has no intention of reversing those decisions. There has been no change in U.S. policy on the Golan Heights, remains of real importance to Israel’s security, since 2019.

Question. Many have argued that the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995, passed overwhelmingly by the U.S. House and Senate, would prohibit a consulate for Palestinians in Jerusalem. Do you agree or disagree with the assessment that a consulate in Jerusalem for Palestinians would violate the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. diplomatic presence in Jerusalem enables our government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities. I understand the Administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem would not change U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel’s capital.

Question. Early in the Biden administration, there were reports that the administration was conducting a review with the goal to open a Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) office in the United States, despite the legal prohibitions under the 1987 Anti-Terrorism Act (ATA) and the 2019 Promoting Security and Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act (PSJVTA). Is the opening of a PLO office in the United States permissible under U.S. law?

Answer. I understand that the issue of the Palestinian presence in Washington is a complicated one, with a number of legal implications. If confirmed, I am committed to advocating that all decisions regarding a PLO office in Washington be consistent both with U.S. interests in advancing peace and applicable U.S. law.

Palestinian Policy

Since FY2020, the United States has provided nearly $600 million in aid to Palestinians, including $75 million in FY2020, $75 million in FY 2021, $219 million in FY 2022, and $225 million in FY 2023. Yet violence is at an all-time high, before the current conflict terrorists from Gaza were establishing a foothold in the West Bank, and PA credibility remains at historic lows.

Question. If confirmed, what safeguards will you put in place to protect against the diversion of U.S. foreign assistance in Gaza, including humanitarian assistance, by Hamas?

Answer. I understand the Department and the U.S. Agency for International Development, as well as our development and humanitarian implementers in the West Bank and Gaza, have robust vetting processes and measures in place to mitigate the risk that U.S. Government assistance could provide material support to Hamas or other terrorist groups. The Administration provides assistance through vetted and trusted international and local partners in a manner consistent with applicable U.S. law. All assistance in Gaza and the West Bank remains subject to regular Office of Inspector General audits and investigations.

Question. What specific steps will you take to ensure that United States foreign assistance in Gaza provides no direct or indirect benefit to Hamas?

Answer. I understand the U.S. Government works closely with trusted implementing partners to ensure that funds are used effectively and for their intended purpose, in accordance with U.S. law. I understand the U.S. Government is pursuing robust, real-time engagement with trusted assistance providers to reduce the risk of diversion by Hamas as the complex situation in Gaza develops. We require all implementers to have proper safeguards and risk mitigation measures in place to ensure that humanitarian aid reaches only the intended recipients. For instance, all U.S. Government humanitarian and non-humanitarian implementers must comply with robust financial and programmatic monitoring, reporting, and compliance mechanisms. Through regular monitoring and evaluation, we can quickly identify attempted diversion and suspend or terminate programs if necessary. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring these robust safeguards remain in place.

Question. How does the U.S. intend to link Palestinian assistance (particularly ESF and INCLE expenditures) to strategic outcomes that are in U.S. national security interests?

Answer. I understand U.S. foreign assistance for the West Bank and Gaza serves the strategic U.S. interest of promoting the economic and security conditions for a peaceful co-existence between Israelis and Palestinians, with the aim of achieving a two-state solution. U.S. economic and humanitarian assistance programs in the West Bank and Gaza are dedicated to improving the lives of millions of Palestinians and have the effect of bolstering stability for both Palestinians and Israelis. Security and rule of law programs, through INCLE assistance in the West Bank, are developed to bolster security for both Palestinians and Israelis.

Question. Under what conditions, if any, would you support conditioning U.S. assistance to the West Bank and Gaza?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring U.S. assistance is well-calibrated and advances U.S. national security interests—and that it must not end up in the hands of Hamas or any other terrorist organization. I understand that U.S. assistance provides critical humanitarian relief to those in great need, fosters economic development, supports Israeli-Palestinian peacebuilding, and security coordination between Israel and the Palestinian Authority. It also aligns with the values and interests of the United States and our allies and partners by supporting the dignity, prosperity, and freedom of Palestinians.

Question. Despite compliance with the Taylor Force Act, opponents of continued assistance to the Palestinians argue that all money is fungible and that ESF to the Palestinian people relieves the Palestinian Authority of a burden and thus frees up additional funding for the prisoner and martyr's program. Do you believe this to be true? Please provide a detailed response to this argument.

Answer. The Administration provides assistance to the Palestinian people in a manner consistent with U.S. law and through experienced, vetted, and trusted independent partners, who distribute directly to people in need. Further, I understand the Administration goes to great lengths to provide assistance based on need and to advance important U.S. interests, including Israel's security and the welfare of the Palestinian people.

Question. Despite compliance with the Taylor Force Act, opponents of continued assistance to the Palestinians argue that all money is fungible and that ESF to the Palestinian people relieves the Palestinian Authority of a burden and thus frees up additional funding for the prisoner and martyr's program. Do you believe this to be true? Please provide a detailed response to this argument.

Answer. The Administration provides assistance to the Palestinian people in a manner consistent with U.S. law and through experienced, vetted, and trusted independent partners, who distribute directly to people in need. Further, I understand the Administration goes to great lengths to provide assistance based on need and to advance important U.S. interests, including Israel's security and the welfare of the Palestinian people.

Question. If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to end the horrific "pay for slay" program?

Answer. The Palestinian practice of prisoner and "martyr" payments is abhorrent and unacceptable. If confirmed, I will do everything in my power to end the practice of Palestinian prisoner and "martyr" payments in a manner that addresses long-standing U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I will uphold the provisions of the Taylor Force Act and build on the sustained diplomatic engagement and pressure exerted thus far.

Question. How would you define "humanitarian assistance" in the West Bank and Gaza? Please be specific.

Answer. U.S. humanitarian assistance includes, but is not limited to, lifesaving support for conflict-affected people through the provision of safe water, emergency food, shelter, hygiene support, and emergency medical services. Humanitarian activities also provide psychosocial support and protection services for conflict-affected communities. U.S. economic assistance in the West Bank and Gaza includes developing scholastic and vocational opportunities for youth, supporting healthcare initiatives, building the productivity of the private sector, and other activities focused on medium- to long-term development.

Question. The Taylor Force Act prohibits assistance that "directly benefits" the Palestinian Authority. What is your interpretation of "directly benefit"?

Answer. The Department and USAID provide assistance for the West Bank and Gaza in a manner consistent with U.S. law, including the Taylor Force Act, and through experienced, vetted, and trusted implementing partners. The primary aim of such assistance is to support conditions that advance a two-state solution, bolster the welfare of the Palestinian people, and promote regional stability. Economic and humanitarian assistance programs improve the lives of millions of Palestinians by providing immediate relief and advancing development. U.S. security assistance supports Israeli-Palestinian security cooperation, which benefits Israelis and Palestinians alike.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question (resubmitted). The Taylor Force Act prohibits assistance that "directly benefits" the Palestinian Authority. What is your interpretation of "directly benefit"?

Answer. I understand that the Department and USAID ensure U.S. assistance for the West Bank and Gaza aligns with the values and interests of the United States and our allies and partners, and they apply very strict policies and procedures to help ensure that our assistance does not benefit terrorist groups, such as Hamas.

With respect to the Taylor Force Act, I fully support it and I understand that U.S. Government takes a number of criteria into account in assessing whether assistance "directly benefits" the Palestinian Authority. This includes whether the Palestinian Authority is the direct recipient of the assistance; whether the assistance involves the payment of Palestinian Authority creditors; the extent of ownership or control the Palestinian Authority exerts over an entity or individual that is the primary beneficiary or end user of the assistance; and whether the assistance or services provided directly replace assistance or services provided by the Palestinian Authority.

The Administration provides assistance in a manner consistent with applicable U.S. law, including the Taylor Force Act, which restricts the use of Economic Support Funds that directly benefits the Palestinian Authority, subject to certain exceptions. Economic and humanitarian assistance programs improve the lives of millions of Palestinians by providing immediate relief and advancing development across sectors such as health, economic growth, and civil society, while security sector programs support Israeli-Palestinian security cooperation to enhance the stability of the West Bank.

Question. Do you believe that U.S.-provided Palestinian assistance replaces PA expenditures and allows the PA to fund prisoner and martyr's payments at higher levels? Please provide a detailed response to this argument.

Answer. The Palestinian practice of prisoner and "martyr" payments is abhorrent and unacceptable. I understand that U.S. assistance goes to funding programs that help the Palestinian people in their everyday lives, such as health services, economic growth, community development and conflict mitigation, and enhancing security cooperation between Israel and the PA. The Department and the U.S. Agency for International Development, as well as our development and humanitarian implementers in the West Bank and Gaza, have robust vetting processes in place to mitigate the risk that U.S. Government assistance could provide material support to Hamas or other terrorist groups. To my knowledge, the Administration provides assistance through trusted international and local partners in a manner consistent with applicable U.S. law, including the Taylor Force Act.

Should I be confirmed, I can assure you of my commitment to work through sustained diplomatic engagement and pressure to end this heinous practice. I will work to ensure that U.S. foreign assistance only supports programs consistent with U.S. values and national security objectives.

Temple Mount

Question. Since 1967, Jordan's custodial role over Temple Mount has helped maintain peace at one of the region's most contentious and divisive religious sites. For decades, religious worship at Temple Mount has been restricted to Muslims but in recent weeks the Israeli Government has authorized a growing number of Jewish worshippers to practice there. To what extent do you feel this Israeli shift in policy threatens to trigger further instability in East Jerusalem?

Answer. The Biden Administration made clear that it stands firmly for the preservation of the historic status quo regarding holy sites in Jerusalem, including on the Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount, and it continues to respect the 1994 Israel-Jordan peace treaty, which recognizes the special role of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan in Muslim holy shrines in Jerusalem. The Administration has also consistently said that it is critical to refrain from unilateral steps that exacerbate tensions, including on the site. If confirmed, I will uphold U.S. support for the historic status quo at Jerusalem's holy sites and on the Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount, and to handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. What specific steps would you propose the U.S. takes to address concerns over worship at Temple Mount? What role should Jordan play in these discussions?

Answer. The Biden administration has made clear that it stands firmly for the preservation of the historic status quo regarding holy sites in Jerusalem, including on the Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount, and it continues to respect the 1994 Israel-Jordan peace treaty, which recognizes the special role of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan in Muslim holy shrines in Jerusalem. This Administration has also consistently said that it is critical to refrain from unilateral steps that exacerbate tensions, including on the site. Jordan and Israel continue to cooperate to manage tensions at Haram Al-Sharif/Temple Mount, including reaffirming the historical status quo, which is in both of their interests. If confirmed, I am committed to continuing U.S. support for the historic status quo at Jerusalem's holy sites and on the Haram al-Sharif/Temple Mount and to handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. What role does settler violence play in Israeli Palestinian tensions and what are your recommendations to address this issue?

Answer. The Administration has consistently and unequivocally condemned all acts of terrorism and the targeting of civilians, including terrorist attacks by Israeli violent extremist settlers in the West Bank against Palestinians, some of whom are U.S. citizens. If confirmed, I will press Israel to take measures to prevent such attacks, intervene in any that take place, protect Palestinians from such violence, and hold any perpetrators accountable.

Lebanon

Question. To what extent do you feel UNIFIL's current mandate is sufficient to oversee safety and security along the called Blue Line?

Answer. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) plays a critical role in ensuring security and stability along the Blue Line, limiting Hizballah's operations in southern Lebanon, and preventing escalation between Lebanon and Israel. Specifically, UNIFIL's liaison activities are crucial to maintaining relative stability in southern Lebanon. For example, during times of increased tension along the Blue Line, UNIFIL peacekeepers routinely position themselves between Lebanese and Israeli soldiers to mediate disputes over the precise location of the Blue Line and to mitigate escalation. UNIFIL also works closely with the Lebanese Armed Forces in conducting joint patrols and coordinating responses to deescalate tensions, which is particularly critical at this time of heightened tension on Israel's northern border. These efforts facilitate the Government of Lebanon in extending state control to southern Lebanon, a goal that would greatly enhance regional stability and security. However, despite the success that UNIFIL has had in implementing its mandate to date, Hizballah continues to impede UNIFIL's access to key points along the Blue Line and openly flouts the arms embargo established under UNSCR 1701. Every year, the United States seeks to strengthen UNIFIL's mandate to ensure that it is best positioned to perform its core functions.

Question. Are there specific reforms to the mandate you feel the U.S. should pursue to help address Israel's ongoing security concerns? Should the mandate allow searches of private property without advance notice?

Answer. Despite the success that UNIFIL has had in implementing its mandate to date, Hizballah continues to impede UNIFIL's access to key points along the Blue Line and openly flouts the arms embargo established under UNSCR 1701. I understand that U.S. officials repeatedly raise these challenges in meetings with UNIFIL's leadership. If confirmed, I will work with relevant offices in the Department, UNIFIL, and international partners to strengthen language in the mandate that would identify challenges to UNIFIL's freedom of movement and enable it to fully implement all aspects of that mandate. These reforms would allow UNIFIL to provide greater security to Lebanon and Israel.

Question. Hezbollah threatens Israel with precision-guided munitions often stored in densely packed urban areas. Should the United States sanction Hezbollah under the Sanctioning the Use of Defenseless Shields Act of 2018 (P.L. 115-348)? Why or why not? How do you address the PGM threat to Israel?

Answer. The U.S. commitment to Israel's security is ironclad and, if confirmed, I will work to ensure the United States uses all the tools at our disposal to confront security threats to Israel, including from Hizballah and Hamas. The U.S. Government remains committed to imposing sanctions on Hizballah and its supporters, supporting the Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) as a counterweight to Hizballah within Lebanon, and empowering UNIFIL to fulfill its full mandate along the Blue Line. I believe the United States' August 16 designation of Green Without Borders (GWB)—a purported environmental organization that provides support to and cover for Hizballah—demonstrated the Administration's commitment to combating the group's destabilizing activities. If confirmed, I will continue the important work of containing Hizballah's malign influence in the region and across the world, consult with Congress on U.S. efforts to counter Hizballah, and support Israel's right to self-defense, all of which I did as Secretary of the Treasury. If confirmed, you have my commitment to support and encourage sanctions against Iran's terrorist activities. I will also support continued U.S. assistance to Israel's ballistic missile defense programs.

China

In recent years, commercial ties between Israel and China have grown significantly, as reflected in the Israeli decision to award numerous infrastructure projects to Chinese building conglomerates.

In 2019, in response to U.S. concerns over growing Chinese investment, Israel announced the establishment of an advisory committee, led by the Finance Ministry, to oversee and evaluate foreign investments in Israel. Right now, that committee is an inadequate mechanism and lacks a broad enough scope to protect high technology firms. Only foreign investments in the Israeli financial, communications, infrastructure, transportation, and energy sectors are subject to regulatory approval. Israel is a world-leader in high technology industries. Without a mechanism empowered to review high technology firms, Israel will lack the ability to ensure controlling and non-controlling investments in these companies do not disadvantage Israel's national security.

Question. If confirmed, can you pledge to work with the Government of Israel to improve oversight of foreign commercial investment in Israel, particularly as relates to dual use technology and infrastructure?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I pledge to work with the Government of Israel to improve its oversight of foreign commercial investment in Israel, particularly in the areas of dual use technology and infrastructure. The U.S. has been a leader in this regard, and we'll continue to work with partners to enhance the effectiveness of investment screening by warning them of the risks to the United States and Israel and sharing best practices to enhance oversight.

Question. From your perspective, what specific reforms should the U.S. seek from Israel to help improve its existing foreign investments oversight regime?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize working with the Government of Israel to strengthen its foreign investment advisory committee to identify and mitigate risks associated with foreign direct investment, including investments involving critical technologies, sensitive data, and critical infrastructure.

Question. Can you commit to working with the Government of Israel to ensure its investment oversight regime covers high tech industries?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with the Government of Israel to ensure its investment oversight regime covers high tech industries.

Question. What are China's interests in its relationship with Israel?

Answer. The PRC continues to deepen its relationships in the Middle East. Israel continues to recognize the United States as its close partner. The PRC enjoys no such special relationship in Israel. As Israel is a world leader in developing innovative technology with military, civilian, and dual-use applications, I understand the PRC attempts to extend influence and acquire dual-use technology through acquisition and investment in Israel—but we will be blunt and clear with our ally, Israel, in our assessment of the PRC and its role on the international stage.

Question. What are China's interests and objectives in the broader Middle East?

Answer. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system." If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State, interagency colleagues, and Congress to counter China's efforts to expand its influence in Israel and the region.

Question. To what (if any) extent do U.S. and China's interests with respect to Israel overlap?

Answer. The United States and the PRC both recognize Israel as a leader in innovative technology with military, civilian, and dual-use applications. The PRC seeks to extend influence and acquire those technologies through predatory acquisitions and investment in Israel, while the United States views close cooperation with Israel as important to our security and intelligence partnership and approaches the relationship with the aim of fostering mutual benefit. In that spirit, we will make our assessment of the PRC, and the risks it poses to Israel, crystal clear to our Israeli partners.

Question. To what (if any) extent do U.S. and China's interests with respect to the Middle East overlap?

Answer. While the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly. This includes maintaining openness to cooperation with Beijing where our interests may overlap and where our cooperation can advance solutions to transnational challenges, including climate change, global macroeconomic stability, food security, public health, and counter-narcotics. Any PRC contributions must be scrutinized, however, to ensure they are neither springboards for narrow PRC economic interests, nor platforms to create more permissive conditions for its own authoritarian model.

Question. What are your views on China's reaction to the current Israel-Hamas conflict?

Answer. As part of the Administration's intensive diplomatic engagements to stand with Israel and condemn the terrorist attacks by Hamas, the United States has reiterated to the PRC U.S. support for Israel's right to defend itself and called for an immediate halt to Hamas' attacks and the release of all hostages. We have also emphasized the importance of maintaining stability in the region and discouraging other parties from entering the conflict.

Question. If confirmed, would you advocate for China's involvement in Israel-Palestinian issues? Do you think China playing a role is in U.S. interests?

Answer. The United States has reiterated to the PRC U.S. support for Israel's right to defend itself and called for an immediate halt to Hamas' attacks and the release of all hostages. If confirmed, I will continue to reiterate this support to my Chinese counterpart.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question (resubmitted). If confirmed, would you advocate for China's involvement in Israel-Palestinian issues? Do you think China playing a role is in U.S. interests?

Answer. The PRC's original statement following Hamas' heinous October 7 attack on Israel neglected to even mention the loss of life and devastation inflicted upon Israeli civilians. Through the subsequent engagement of our U.S. Ambassador in China who also hosted the Israeli Ambassador to China in the aftermath of this tragedy, I understand that the Chinese Foreign Ministry put out a follow-up statement recognizing civilian suffering. Unfortunately, this came too late for many in the Israeli Government and population. For this reason, as well as subsequent actions the PRC took at the U.N. to deny Israel's right to self-defense, I do not think that the PRC is acting in the interest of the US.

I also believe that the PRC's own actions and statements have resulted in the Chinese not being seen as a credible actor in the region, particularly on this issue. If confirmed, I will make sure that the United States continues to stand by Israel during this difficult time. I will reiterate this position to my PRC counterpart and encourage them (and others) to be more forward-leaning, particularly in support of Israel's right to self-defense.

Question. What are your views on China's relationship with Iran? How will those views shape your approach to China's presence and influence in Israel?

Answer. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States and we have expressed our concerns with the PRC's support for Iran. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to counter the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in the region, in particular its support for Iran. My priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Israel and countering efforts by strategic and regional competitors including the PRC and Iran to undermine those interests.

Question. What areas of cooperation will you focus on with respect to the I2U2?

Answer. I2U2 is a unique grouping that shows the power that economic integration offers in solving cross cutting issues such as climate change, food and water insecurity, and adopting advanced technology. This is demonstrated by the food security and clean energy projects in India. If confirmed, I will work to promote the benefits of working with I2U2 to the private sector.

Question. Should United States assistance in the West Bank and Gaza be branded?

Answer. There are a range of factors to consider including the need to balance the safety of aid recipients and the critical public diplomacy benefits for the United States of branding. If confirmed, I will consult Congress and other entities in the U.S. Government to weigh the utility of this option.

Question. If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to combat incitement in the West Bank and Gaza, including in classrooms and curriculum?

Answer. I condemn antisemitism and incitement to violence and terrorism in any form. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues in the State Department, including Ambassador Deborah Lipstadt, and others to ensure that we fully address such incitement. We must ensure that students are given the chance to be taught in an environment and with materials that don't promote hate.

Question. Do you agree that the purpose of U.S. foreign assistance is to end the need for its existence?

Answer. U.S. foreign assistance serves important U.S. national security interests, including supporting our unwavering commitment to Israel's security and priorities such as helping our allies and partners maintain stability and prosperity.

Question. Under what conditions, if any, would you support restarting United States non-humanitarian assistance to Gaza, which we understand has been paused?

Answer. To my knowledge we have not stopped assistance to Gaza. U.S. foreign assistance for the West Bank and Gaza serves important U.S. interests, including providing critical support to those in great need, fostering economic development, and supporting Israeli-Palestinian security coordination through economic, development, and security sector assistance. Economic and development programs in the West Bank and Gaza support the development of the Palestinian economy, civil society, and other institutions to improve the lives of Palestinians.

The Nita Lowey Partnerships for Peace Act (PPA) authorized $250 million over five years to support peacebuilding initiatives between Israelis and Palestinians, including through a "People-to-People Partnership for Peace Fund" at the U.S. Agency for International Development and a "Joint Investment for Peace Initiative" at the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation (DFC).

Question. If confirmed, how would you measure progress of these initiatives?

Answer. MEPPA is an important piece of legislation, aimed at advancing peaceful co-existence between Israelis and Palestinians, in order to promote a sustainable two-state solution. These programs are successful when they foster people to people connections, purposeful conversations, and meaningful dialogues to grow trust. If confirmed, I will continue to advance the priorities of MEPPA with an eye towards progress and a more peaceful, stable region.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that all partners and activities undertaken pursuant to the PPA—including at the sub-award level—are fully vetted and transparently reported to Congress?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will ensure that all partners and activities undertaken pursuant to the MEPPA—including at the sub-award level—are fully vetted and transparently reported to Congress.

Question. If confirmed, how will you leverage co-investment in PPA activities by Israelis and Palestinians, in addition to generating support by other donors?

Answer. If confirmed, I will stand by and work with Israelis and Palestinians who co-invest in PPA activities. I will highlight to the region the benefits when Israelis and Palestinians work together. These partnerships are the seeds of peace. If confirmed, I will gladly work with partners and allies to solicit greater support.

Ukraine

Question. Do you believe that the United States has the ability to militarily and financially support Ukraine and Israel at the same time? Please explain the reasoning behind your assessment.

Answer. While I cannot comment on specific needs in both instances, I am confident the U.S. Government can support both. We transfer the vast majority of Israel's defense articles through the Foreign Military Sales or Direct Commercial Sales systems, whereas Ukraine is primarily supplied through drawdown or third-party transfer. We are also fortunate to have a network of staunch allies who are actively assisting us in support of both conflicts. U.S. support for democratic partners and allies who stand up to terrorism and to those who violate international norms demonstrates our commitment to global leadership.

The United States strongly supports both Ukraine and Israel. Ukraine has made clear that it is interested in deepening its relationship with Israel, but Israel has not reciprocated that interest. Israel is seemingly worried about angering Russia, who it relies on to allow its Air Force to operate over Syria. Yet, Russia works closely with Iran, meets regularly with Hamas, and has backed Hamas in the current conflict between that terrorist group and Israel.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to encouraging the Government of Israel to improve its relationship with Ukraine?

Answer. Both Ukraine and Israel are vital partners in the fight against terrorism and autocracy. If confirmed, I will strongly encourage the Government of Israel to continue strengthening its partnership with Ukraine.

European Engagement

There is significant disagreement between European nations, and within the European Union, as to whether and how to support Israel against terrorism and its adversaries.

Question. How will you contribute to U.S. engagement with European governments and the European Union on assistance to Israel?

Answer. It is critical that the United States and EU work together to support Israel's right to defend itself within the bounds of the law of war and to stop the conflict from spreading. I understand the President and Secretary of State have engaged our European Allies and partners to encourage support to Israel. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would further support these efforts.

Question. How will you contribute to U.S. engagement with European governments and the European Union on the matter of limiting and monitoring any aid to Palestinians in order to ensure that aid is not diverted or misused to support terrorism?

Answer. We are working with the Governments of Israel and Egypt as well as with the U.N. and international partners to provide Palestinian civilians with life-saving humanitarian assistance, such as clean water, food, hygiene support, medical care, and to address other essential needs.

The United States provides funding for essential and life-saving humanitarian assistance to Palestinian refugees through vetted international and non-governmental organizations and in compliance with applicable U.S. law. The Department and USAID, as well as our development and humanitarian implementing partners in the West Bank and Gaza, have robust vetting processes in place to mitigate the risk that U.S. assistance could provide material support to Hamas or other terrorist groups.

United Nations

In 2012, a letter was sent to the Senate Appropriations Committee arguing against efforts to distinguish between Palestinian displaced by the conflict that led to the creation of Israel in 1948 and their descendants, who the U.N. currently classifies as refugees. This distinction would reduce the number of UNRWA registered refugees from 5 million to 30,000.

Question. Do you still maintain that efforts to limit those who can claim UNRWA refugee status would undermine U.S. interests in advancing discussions between Israel and the Palestinian Authority?

Answer. My understanding is that the status of Palestinian refugees remains a highly sensitive issue among Palestinians and their supporters, including U.S. regional allies such as Jordan. Refugees is one of the recognized final-status issues that can only be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians.

Question. Who, in your view, should classify as an UNRWA refugee?

Answer. My understanding is that that UNRWA's definition of "Palestine refugees" for the purposes of UNRWA's own operations is: "[P]ersons whose normal place of residence was Palestine during the period of June 1, 1946 to May 15, 1948, and who lost both home and means of livelihood as a result of the 1948 conflict." I understand descendants of eligible male "Palestine refugees" are eligible for registration with UNRWA for the purpose of accessing services. I understand this approach to including descendants is similar to that used by UNHCR in other protracted refugee situations, such as those of Afghan and Somali refugees.

Question. Why does UNRWA require 10,000 more staff to advocate its regional mission than UNHCR to advance its global mission?

Answer. UNRWA's mandate is set by the U.N. General Assembly and is to provide essential services directly to Palestinian refugees in the five regions it covers. Unlike UNHCR, which delivers most services to refugees through sub-partners, I understand UNRWA employees include school teachers and health care workers who provide services directly to beneficiaries.

Question. Do you believe UNRWA should be absorbed by UNHCR, given UNHCR's efficiency and infrastructure?

Answer. I understand UNRWA's mandate is set by the U.N. General Assembly and is to provide essential services directly to Palestinian refugees in the five regions it covers. Unlike UNHCR, which works to deliver most services to refugees through sub-partners, I am told that UNRWA employees include schoolteachers and health care workers who provide services directly to beneficiaries. UNHCR's mandate focuses on seeking durable solutions (such as resettlement, repatriation, and local integration) for refugees, which I understand cannot be adequately applied in the Palestinian context as these matters are final-status issues to be negotiated directly between Israel and the Palestinians.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to working with the appropriate Congressional committees prior to any consultations related to new U.S. contributions to UNRWA?

Answer. The President and the Secretary have been clear that the Administration is committed to working with Congress. I understand the Department has regularly engaged with Congressional committees since resuming humanitarian assistance to the Palestinian people. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting the continuation of this approach.

Question. How do you plan to work with UNRWA to advance reform, particularly as relates to antisemitic educational content of textbooks?

Answer. I have always and will always condemn incitement to terrorism and other violence and antisemitism in any form. I am told that U.N. agencies, including UNRWA, do not develop their own curriculum but use the curriculum of host authorities. I understand that when concepts contrary to U.N. principles are identified in host governments' education materials, UNRWA provides instructions and supplementary materials for its staff to address the issue. If confirmed, I will emphasize and ensure our team is emphasizing the importance of following humanitarian principles, including neutrality, in discussions with UNRWA.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring UNRWA agrees and adheres to strict neutrality rules as set forth by the U.S. and the U.N.?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will commit to ensuring that UNRWA agrees and adheres to strict neutrality rules as set forth by the United States and the U.N. UNRWA also employs a "Neutrality Framework" that outlines the Agency's standards, practices, and procedures regarding neutrality to ensure a consistent and coherent approach to neutrality issues.

Question. Since the U.S. has rejoined the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), what improvements or reforms have been made to improve Israel's treatment by UNESCO?

Answer. In re-engaging as a member state, the United States is better placed to counter any disproportionate focus on Israel and will continue to work closely with Israel and likeminded partners to prevent and oppose biased or one-sided resolutions. If confirmed, I look forward to learning more about reforms to improve Israel's treatment by UNESCO.

Question. Do you believe this action promotes the Middle East peace process and serves the needs of the Palestinian people?

Answer. As a member state, the United States can more effectively partner with likeminded Member States to promote human rights and education, and ensure responsible development of emerging technologies through shaping norms and standards—for Israelis, Palestinians, and others around the world.

Question. In your view, what consequences should the Palestinians face if they continue to attempt to gain membership in U.N. agencies?

Answer. While I cannot speak to hypotheticals, if confirmed, I will underscore to the Palestinians that unproductive, unilateral steps are not a shortcut to Palestinian statehood. The Biden Administration remains committed to a negotiated two-state solution as the best way to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. I am confident that the Administration will continue to abide by relevant U.S. laws regarding Palestinian membership in U.N. specialized agencies.

Question. If confirmed, can you commit to working to prevent the Palestinian Authorities' pursuit of full membership in U.N. entities?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will underscore to the Palestinian leadership that unproductive, unilateral steps are not a shortcut to Palestinian statehood.

Question. In 2018, the Trump administration withdrew from the United Nations Human Rights Council (UNHRC) citing "chronic anti-Israel bias." Since, the Biden administration has re-engaged with the body, claiming U.S. absence did nothing to address its disproportionate focus on Israel. Do you share the Trump administration's assessment regarding the UNHRC's reported anti-Israel bias? What steps should the U.S. take to improve the UNHRC's impartiality?

Answer. For as long as Israel has been a member of the United Nations, Israel has been treated differently from other nations at the United Nations. Such unequal treatment not only hurts Israel, but also undermines the legitimacy of the United Nations itself. If confirmed, consistent with Administration policy, I will oppose any and all efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations, including the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Human Rights Council, and other bodies. When we have had a seat at the table, we have been able to advocate on Israel's behalf, and we have seen changes like a reduction in the number of resolutions targeting Israel.

Question. If confirmed, will you support any action by the U.N. Human Rights Council to open a commission of inquiry in the wake of the horrific attacks by Hamas on October 7, 2023?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support measures to hold Hamas fully accountable for its horrific terrorist attacks, and work with others in the Administration to find the means to do so that best advance U.S. interests, including our interests in the security of Israel.

Question. Do you support U.N. Security Council Resolution 2334?

Answer. I believe deeply that the United States should engage at the United Nations to persuade others to improve resolutions and ensure that Israel is not unfairly singled out or delegitimized. While there are sometimes dynamics in the U.N. that work against fully meeting that objective, I will oppose any and all efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations.

Question. In 2021, International Criminal Court (ICC) prosecutor opened an investigation into possible war crimes allegedly committed in the West Bank and Gaza. Do you believe that the ICC should be investigating a case involving alleged Israeli actions in the Palestinian territories? If yes, please explain.

Answer. No. I understand the United States maintains our longstanding objection to the ICC's investigation into the Palestinian situation, and if confirmed, I would fully support that position.

Question. Do you believe that the ICC has jurisdiction to investigate or bring to trial Israeli service members, officials, or other Israeli citizens? If yes, please explain.

Answer. No. I understand United States has longstanding objections to the ICC's jurisdiction over the Palestinian situation, and if confirmed, I would fully support that position.

Question. Do you believe the ICC's reputation has been diminished by recent attempts to prosecute United States and Israeli nationals? If no, please explain.

Answer. I understand the United States has longstanding objections to the ICC's assertion of jurisdiction over U.S. and Israeli nationals. I share those objections.

Department of State Management and Oversight

Mission Israel is currently in a war zone and under enormous stress. Staff are working around the clock and worried about the safety of their families and friends.

Question. How do you intend to buoy morale across Mission Israel?

Answer. In this time of crisis, it is important to me that the dedicated professionals at the Mission understand that their safety and security will always be a priority. If confirmed, I will ensure they have all the tools and support they need in order to feel valued, appreciated and secure. As Deputy Secretary for Management and Resources, I worked closely with our missions in the most adverse environments, and understand how important it is to lead by example and listen to the team with total attention. As I said at my hearing, as a citizen I have great respect for their dedication and courage. If confirmed, it will be an immense honor to lead them.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision across Mission Israel?

Answer. The horrific events that have unfolded over the last few weeks have only underscored what many of you have already seen first-hand: the team we have in Israel is amongst the best in the world. If confirmed, it will be my honor to ensure that every member of our Mission, across every agency, knows that I will support them in every way possible. Particularly, in this time of uncertainty, it will be one of my top priorities to ensure that I am in touch with all the members of team, and they know that their contributions are appreciated and valued. I value different opinions and have always welcomed the opportunity to learn from those around me. Should I be confirmed to lead our Mission in Israel, that will not change.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. Throughout my career, my focus has been on supporting people, being an inclusive leader, and setting a clear vision. I emphasize teamwork, collaboration, and cooperation to achieve goals. I prioritize communication and information sharing so that all team members understand the objectives at hand and the path forward. I strive to include all voices, model professionalism and respect, and empower others to progress in their careers and make significant contributions that move our goals forward.

Question. How do you believe this management style will translate to an embassy setting, where processes and resources aren't as readily available as they may be at Main State?

Answer. Having served as the Deputy Secretary of State for Management and Resources, I understand much of the internal workings of the State Department and have spent time at countless overseas embassies and consulates. While serving at an embassy overseas is different from being at Main State, there are similarities in the management culture. If confirmed, I will create an inclusive environment that relies on the expertise and knowledge of our career diplomats, civil servants, family members, and local staff. We will work collaboratively together and with Main State and will value all input in order to further our goals and achieve results.

Question. As a political appointee rather than career diplomat, do you believe it is incumbent on the new chiefs of mission to integrate themselves into embassy operations and culture? If yes, how do you intend to do so?

Answer. Each time I have led federal agencies my goal was to integrate the political and career teams to work together and support each other. All chiefs of mission, not just political appointees, must become part of the Embassy community and ensure they demonstrate leadership, but also remain accessible to the team. Given the current crisis situation in Israel, if confirmed, I would plan to meet with the Embassy community while also focusing on the demands of the crisis. I believe that under the current circumstances, the Embassy community has come together. If confirmed, one of the first things I would like to do is meet with the Embassy community. In this time of uncertainty, it is important that they understand my commitment to them is as strong as my commitment to our shared interests—a safer, more stable region. As circumstances allow in the future, I look forward to meeting with staff throughout the mission and continuing to strengthen the mission.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. It is completely unacceptable—in any environment—to berate anyone, under any circumstances. It is essential that we hold each other to high standards of behavior and performance, respect each other and our differences and treat each other with respect and professionalism.

Question. How do you envision your leadership relationship with your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. As I mentioned at the hearing, and others also noted, CDA Hallet is serving with great distinction, and we should all be grateful for her leadership during these horrific events. If confirmed, it is essential that we have open communication, unfailing trust, and a shared understanding of U.S. interests and priorities. Having worked in various roles throughout the U.S. Government, I have consistently built strong relationships with my deputies and relied on them to partner with me to carry out the vision and the goals of the mission. The deputy chief of mission is a vital role within the Embassy community and if confirmed I look forward to a close relationship.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy chief of mission?

Answer. The deputy chief of mission role is essential to the success of the Mission, our community, and our foreign policy. Having served as both a deputy and as the senior leader, I view the deputy role as similar to a COO, overseeing the daily operations of the Mission and focusing on the team's success. And in my experience, when a principle and a deputy work well together, they can back each other up when the flow of work requires attending to multiple challenges at the same time. At the same time, the Ambassador is ultimately responsible for the Mission. If confirmed, I will work in partnership with the deputy chief of mission to support and advance our people and mission.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. JACOB J. LEW BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. Secretary Lew, you have a long career in public service and have had multiple occasions to display your honesty and integrity—not only in front of the American people, but also in front of this committee, where you have testified multiple times. Israel is our country's strongest and closest ally in the Middle East. Our Ambassador to Israel has the extraordinary responsibility to communicate our commitment to Israel and Israel's important role to the American people. Especially now, when Israel is under attack and at war, it is more important than ever to have an Ambassador in place who communicates the truth. Have you ever lied to, or deliberately misled, this Committee or any of its members, regarding your work on behalf of the U.S. Government in your previous positions?

Answer. I have not ever, nor would I ever, lie to or deliberately mislead Congress.

Question. In July 2015, you testified before this committee that Iran “will continue to be denied access to the largest market.” At the same hearing, your written testimony stated “Iranian Banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. Banks.” Seven months later, in February 2016, you issued a specific license to Bank Muscat in Oman. This license allowed Iran access to U.S. dollars in New York to convert $5.7 billion worth of Omani Rials in an Iranian account to Euros. Not only did the Treasury Department, under your watch, issue this license, but it deliberately encouraged U.S. banks to work with Bank Muscat to convert Iran's funds into Euros. Do you deny that a specific license was granted to Bank Muscat to allow Iranian funds denominated in Omani Rials to be converted to dollars and then to euros?

Answer. The United States took a range of steps in order to fulfill its commitments under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to Bank Muscat in order to assist in facilitating the implementation of certain commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question (resubmitted). In July 2015, you testified before this committee that Iran “will continue to be denied access to the largest market.” At the same hearing, your written testimony stated “Iranian Banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. Banks.” Seven months later, in February 2016, you issued a specific license to Bank Muscat in Oman. This license allowed Iran access to U.S. dollars in New York to convert $5.7 billion worth of Omani Rials in an Iranian account to Euros. Not only did the Treasury Department, under your watch, issue this license, but it deliberately encouraged U.S. banks to work with Bank Muscat to convert Iran's funds into Euros. Do you deny that a specific license was granted to Bank Muscat to allow Iranian funds denominated in Omani Rials to be converted to dollars and then to euros?

Answer. The United States took a range of steps consistent with its commitments under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, this included the issuance of a specific license by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to authorize the conversion of Omani rial for the onward movement of Iranian funds, to the extent a U.S. bank was involved in the transaction. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question. Perhaps the Bank Muscat license issue was an event you may not have been aware of in 2015, however, when I wrote to you regarding media reports of the specific license, your office sent a reply in June 2016, dated after the issuance of the specific license and after the Department had pushed two U.S. banks to support the transaction, that said "The Administration has not been and is not planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system." Why would your Department tell me that it had not been planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system when it had done precisely that with the Bank Muscat specific license?

Answer. The United States fulfilled its commitments under the JCPOA with respect to this license and nothing more. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to Bank Muscat in order to assist with the facilitation of certain commitments under the JCPOA and nothing further. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question (resubmitted). Perhaps the Bank Muscat license issue was an event you may not have been aware of in 2015, however, when I wrote to you regarding media reports of the specific license, your office sent a reply in June 2016, dated after the issuance of the specific license and after the Department had pushed two U.S. banks to support the transaction, that said "The Administration has not been and is not planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system." Why would your Department tell me that it had not been planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system when it had done precisely that with the Bank Muscat specific license?

Answer. Since the removal of the so-called U-turn authorization in 2008, transactions by third-country financial institutions on behalf of (or involving an interest of) an Iranian person through the United States are not permissible, unless licensed. Treasury's licensing authority is derived from statute and longstanding to ensure the administrability of sanctions, enabling transactions in the U.S. national security and foreign policy interest. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the U.S. Department of the Treasury to Bank Muscat to facilitate the onward movement of Iranian funds, consistent with our commitments under the JCPOA.

The use of Treasury's specific licensing authority did not lift, suspend, or otherwise change our sanctions architecture, which continues to deny Iran access to the U.S. financial system. Under U.S. sanctions laws, such a license was both lawful to issue and ensured the permissibility of the transaction with U.S. laws.

Question. You say that there is a difference between grant we need to distinguish between "facilitating implementation of JCPOA and broadly welcoming Iran into the U.S. financial community." But in your testimony to Congress in 2015 and your letters to me, you did not say you would work to prevent welcoming Iran into the U.S. financial community, you said Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. banks. Did issuing the Bank Muscat specific license contradict the remarks you made to this committee in July 2015?

Answer. The JCPOA significantly rolled back Iran's nuclear program. In exchange, Iran was to receive relief from nuclear-related sanctions, imposed to bring about a diplomatic resolution to the nuclear issue. The United States took several steps to fulfill its commitments under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the Treasury to Bank Muscat to facilitate implementation of certain JCPOA commitments. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question. On December 23, 2016, the United Nations Security Council unanimously passed a resolution that condemned Israel's settlements in Judaea and Samaria stating they have no legal validity. As a permanent member of the Security Council, the United States had the ability to veto this resolution, but the Obama Administration declined to. At the time, the media reported that you privately lobbied for the administration to veto this resolution, but you have since publicly defended the administration's decision as "simply carrying out U.S. administration policy opposing settlements." The resolution went further than just condemn settlements, it also labelled Jews' holiest places, including the Temple Mount, the Jewish Quarter of Jerusalem, the Cave of the Patriarchs, all as "illegally occupied" and "not part of Israel." Please clarify whether or not you agree with UNSC Resolution 2334, including its description of Jewish holy sites?

Answer. It is important for the United States to engage at the United Nations to persuade others to improve resolutions and ensure that Israel is not unfairly singled out or delegitimized. While there are sometimes dynamics in the U.N. that work against fully meeting that objective, I will oppose any and all efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations. The United States stands firmly for the preservation of the historic status quo at the holy sites, including the Temple Mount/Haram al-Sharif, in Jerusalem. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and the Jewish people's ancestral connection to the holy city. Jerusalem also remains a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians.

Question. Did you advocate against the Obama Administration's decision to abstain from the vote to consider UNSC 2334?

Answer. It is important for the United States to engage at the United Nations to persuade others to improve resolutions and ensure that Israel is not unfairly singled out or delegitimized. While there are sometimes dynamics in the U.N. that work against fully meeting that objective, I will oppose any and all efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations.

Question. Why did you later publicly defend the administration's decision?

Answer. It is important for the United States to engage at the United Nations to persuade others to improve resolutions and ensure that Israel is not unfairly singled out or delegitimized. While there are sometimes dynamics in the U.N. that work against fully meeting that objective, I will oppose any and all efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations.

Question. Israel's then Ambassador to the United Nations, Danny Danon, revealed that the Obama Administration not only abstained from voting, but had helped draft the resolution and encouraged allied countries to vote for it. Were you aware of and oppose those?

Answer. It is important for the United States to engage at the United Nations to persuade others to improve resolutions and ensure that Israel is not unfairly singled out or delegitimized. While there are sometimes dynamics in the U.N. that work against fully meeting that objective, I will oppose any and all efforts to unfairly single out or delegitimize Israel through one-sided resolutions, reports, and other actions across the United Nations.

Question. The Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995 made it U.S. policy to recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and that the U.S. Embassy to Israel should be in Jerusalem. Successive administrations had exercised the waiver of that law to keep the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv. You have defended the exercise of that waiver and criticized the Trump Administration's decision to finally move the Embassy to Jerusalem. In May 2022, the previous Ambassador, Tom Nides, finalized this move by requesting the Israeli Foreign Affairs Ministry recognize his house in Jerusalem as the Ambassador's official residence, which previously was located in Tel Aviv. Is Jerusalem the capital of Israel?

Answer. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as Israel's capital, and I understand that President Biden has no intention of reversing former President Trump's decision. If confirmed, I plan to live in Jerusalem in the official embassy residence.

Question. Do you believe that East Jerusalem is "illegally occupied" and "not part of Israel?"

Answer. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself, including the specific boundaries of Israeli sovereignty in Jerusalem, is a final status issue that must be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. If confirmed, will you continue to maintain the Ambassador's official residence in Jerusalem?

Answer. Yes.

Question. If confirmed, will you advocate to maintain the U.S. Embassy and all other U.S. offices in Israel, including the Palestinian Affairs Unit, remain under Chief of Mission authority?

Answer. I understand that the Office of Palestinian Affairs is under Chief of Mission authority. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. presence in Jerusalem enables our Government to carry out a full range of diplomatic activities.

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China (PRC) is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the PRC and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Beijing has also spent the last week blaming the U.S. and Israel for Hamas' terrorist attack. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the CCP a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents the most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Israel ties.

Question. Does the CCP undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses CCP activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system." To compete effectively with China, it is vital to maintain dialogue with China, and with other countries of the world about China.

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the CCP that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment's notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges when it is in our interest to do so; not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because working on these issues is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in the Middle East.

Question. Do you think Beijing could be a partner in mediating the current dispute between Israel and the Palestinians?

Answer. As part of the Administration's intensive diplomatic engagements to stand with Israel and condemn the terrorist attacks by Hamas, the United States has reiterated to the PRC U.S. support for Israel's right to defend itself and called for an immediate halt to Hamas' attacks and the release of all hostages. The United States has also emphasized the importance of maintaining stability in the region and discouraging other parties from entering the conflict.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the PRC in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Israel and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to counter China's efforts to expand its influence in Israel and the region.

Question. You currently serve as chair of the National Committee on United States-China Relations, which describes itself as promoting "understanding and cooperation between the United States and Greater China." This is interesting because the Committee seems most committed to promoting just the viewpoint of the CCP, and not the views of the 1.1 billion Chinese people that suffer under the Party's authoritarian rule, or the approximately 300 million that live outside of the PRC. I have not seen where the National Committee has acknowledged the genocide that the CCP is committing against the Uyghurs, crimes against Tibetans, or the continued denial by the CCP of Hongkongers' freedom. I suppose this makes sense given that some of the National Committee's members are affiliated with the CCP and its appended bodies, such as the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, which is part of the broader United Front system. Do you believe that the CCP is currently committing a genocide against the Uyghurs in Xinjiang?

Answer. I agree with Congress and the Administration that we must continue to hold the PRC accountable for its genocide, crimes against humanity, and other human rights abuses against predominantly Muslim Uyghurs and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups in Xinjiang. The concerns are expressed directly in dialogues with Chinese counterparts.

Question. If confirmed, how will you communicate the CCP's role in Israel?

Answer. Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. If confirmed, I will continue our work with Israel to strengthen democratic values and the commitment to a rules-based international order.

Question. Stephen Orlins, who serves as president of the National Committee, recently said that the U.S.-China relationship has been characterized by "increased securitization" and that it is not "healthy" to "restrict these technologies [and] goods." My interpretation of Mr. Orlins' statement is that he is advocating for very little safeguards to be put in place in our economic relationship with China, even though Beijing has a track record of using all the tools at its disposal to displace us. Do you agree with Mr. Orlins' statements?

Answer. It has long been my view that the United States should use its tools of diplomacy, including economic tools, to protect its national security interests. This Administration has been careful to use those tools to protect US interests. The United States views close cooperation with Israel on a variety of national security topics, including foreign investment risk management, as important to our security and intelligence partnership. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Israel to enhance its investment screening by sharing information with Israel of the risks posed by PRC investment practices and sharing best practices to enhance oversight.

Question. Do you think we should have safeguards in place?

Answer. The Biden Administration remains deeply concerned by attempts by the People's Republic of China to extend influence and acquire critical technology through acquisitions and investment. The Administration welcomes efforts to enhance safeguards for investment within the confines of strong regulatory structures that ensure all companies investing in Israel do so in a responsible manner, and does not undermine Israeli national security.

Question. In the wake of Hamas' brutal attack against Israeli civilians, neither the CCP nor the PRC foreign ministry have issued a statement condemning Hamas, though they have cautioned against Israel's response. If confirmed, will you call on the CCP or the Chinese Ambassador to Israel, to condemn Hamas' recent attacks?

Answer. The Administration has publicly stated its ironclad support for Israel's right to defend itself in the wake of Hamas' depraved terrorist attack. As President Biden has said, Hamas' terrorist acts are an act of sheer evil. Over 1,000 Israelis were killed in the deadliest attack on Jews since the Holocaust. If confirmed, I will call on the CCP to condemn Hamas' brutal acts of terrorism.

SUBMITTED TO HON. JACOB J. LEW BY SENATOR RAND PAUL

Question. What are your views on potential regional escalation around the Middle East? With 900 U.S. troops in Syria, 2,500 in Iraq, and reports of 2,000 to be deployed in Israel, we could unwittingly be drawn into this conflict or a larger regional conflict. Is that a concern? How do we mitigate this risk?

Answer. As the President indicated, the United States will deter threats to regional stability where appropriate. This is necessary to continue our work to reduce tensions, de-escalate, and end conflicts through diplomacy. We have robust U.S. defenses in place to empower our partners and send a clear message of deterrence, which bolsters regional stability. The U.S. military presence in the Middle East is intended not only to protect U.S. citizens and facilities, but also to prevent escalation. By doing so, we create the space to focus on diplomacy, which is the key to mitigating the spread of conflict. If confirmed, working to build a more stable region that includes security for Israel will be one of my top priorities.

Question. Many of my colleagues are calling for a hostile response to Iran, despite the administration denying there is any clear evidence linking Iran to this specific attack. I understand that this heinous terrorist attack has made everyone rightfully angry, however acting in anger may make the prospects for peace worse. What would you do to promote peace in the Middle East, particularly in the current environment in which many state that Iran shares responsibility for the attack against Israel?

Answer. The President has made clear that our goal is to avoid this conflict from broadening to a regional war, and deploying two aircraft carrier groups is a powerful signal to deter Iran and Hezbollah or other, aligned proxies from expanding the conflict to multiple fronts. Iran is a malign actor that promotes terrorism in the region and around the world, and I support the use of sanctions and other economic measures to counter Iran's destabilizing behavior. I believe the Administration is focused on building a more peaceful, stable Middle East through working with our allies and partners to forge coalitions dedicated to normalization, integration, and cooperation in many fields. As Secretary Blinken said, we and our partners must be committed to that path for the region, because the only other path is the one Hamas and its allies choose, the path of terror and bloodshed. While normalization may be difficult in the present environment, I know the Administration remains committed to working to strengthen regional integration. If confirmed, I look forward to contributing to that vision of a more peaceful region.

Question. In your former position as Secretary of the Treasury, you oversaw various global sanctions regimes, what is your view on the effectiveness of to change behavior? You previously highlighted how sanctions could change behavior in Sudan, Burma, and Libya. Can you highlight any specific examples where sanctions effectively altered a state's behavior to U.S. foreign policy aims? When we impose sanctions on various entities, should we have a strategy that sets conditions to remove these sanctions?

Answer. Sanctions are broadly described as tools to effect change in behavior, and as U.S. foreign policy goals vary across individual sanctions programs such "change in behavior" can take many forms.

Successful sanctions programs have curtailed access to the U.S. financial system, promoted accountability for atrocities and human rights violations, and deterred regimes from continuing problematic behaviors. For example, a major goal of our Burma sanctions program is to curtail the regime's access to U.S. dollars that it used to procure weapons and commit violence against Burma's people. Open-source reporting indicates that our designations of two, key State-owned banks in Burma have made it much harder for the regime to access foreign currency and purchase weapons.

Economic sanctions are but one of many foreign policy tools. Sanctions support other diplomatic efforts. Removal of sanctions, like their imposition, should be done on a case-by-case basis, according to the circumstances in the particular sanctions regime and in line with our foreign policy and national security goals.

Question. How will you, if confirmed as ambassador, ensure that you will be a reliable, consistent, and timely source of factual information given the current challenges posed by wartime disinformation and misinformation, and their potential for more bloodshed and even strategic consequences?

Answer. Armed conflicts are fertile ground for information manipulation. We have witnessed this in the information space after Hamas's terrorist attacks on Israel. Hamas continues to disseminate content that portrays its attacks in a heroic light, minimizing or distorting its atrocities against civilians while threatening the lives of the hostages it has taken. Following the explosion at Al-Ahli Arab hospital in Gaza, our intelligence community assessed Israel was not responsible for the explosion. Instead, the explosion appears to be the result of an errant rocket fired by a terrorist group in Gaza. I am saddened by the loss of life that resulted.

It is critical that the public rely on multiple credible information sources and seek fact-based content. Global publics should be aware that malign actors are looking to use misinformation and disinformation to drive social wedges and undermine democratic governments. The U.S. Government has many resources to identify foreign state and non-state information manipulation and bring it to light.

If confirmed, providing reliable, consistent, and timely information will always be a priority for me and the Mission. I will ensure my team coordinates across the U.S. interagency to relay U.S. priorities to the public. Of course, we have no higher priority than the safety and security of U.S. citizens. I look forward to expanding upon the strong relationship the Embassy enjoys with U.S. citizens in Israel and working with our Consular Sections and the Bureau of Consular Affairs to ensure they have the most updated safety and security information.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. JACOB J. LEW BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. When Treasury issued specific licenses in 2016 to enable the conversion of Iranian funds into euros, was this transaction directly connected to the financial relief at the core of the JCPOA and associated U.N. Resolutions, or was it connected to so-called "side deals," for example between Iran and the International Atomic Energy Agency that were kept from Congress?

Answer. The JCPOA significantly rolled back Iran's nuclear program. In exchange, Iran was to receive relief from nuclear-related sanctions, originally imposed to help bring about a diplomatic resolution to the nuclear issue. The United States took a number of steps in order to fulfill its commitments under the JCPOA. Although it was not ultimately utilized, a specific license was issued by the Treasury Department to Bank Muscat to facilitate implementation of certain commitments under the JCPOA. The U.S. primary sanctions embargo and prohibitions on Iran's use of the U.S. financial system remained in place under the JCPOA.

Question. The Biden administration had offered to restart talks with Iran on the JCPOA, aka Iran Nuclear Deal. This deal undeniably contributed to the current terrorism campaign against Israel, led by Hamas and backed by Iran and Hezbollah, either by emboldening Iran, or alternatively, as you've suggested, angering them that you tricked them. You've stated that you do not believe now is the time to negotiate with Iran, but can you now commit that Iran is a non-earnest negotiator and that any future discussion of resuscitating the JCPOA is DOA?

Answer. As the President has made clear, the United States is committed to ensuring Iran never acquires a nuclear weapon. The Administration has noted that it prefers diplomacy as the best path for ensuring this and is preparing for all possible contingencies in full coordination with our partners and allies. My understanding is that Iran has not currently shown itself to be serious about engaging diplomatically to address the international community's concerns regarding its nuclear program. The Administration has made clear that there is currently no nuclear deal in the offing, interim or otherwise, and any claims to the contrary are incorrect.

Question. UNRWA's Gaza Director admits that while aid diversion protections are in place and robust, that is not impossible—and in fact is probable—that an increasingly desperate Hamas will seek to commandeer humanitarian relief items to continue their unjust war against Israel. As the largest UNRWA donor, the U.S. absolutely cannot turn its eye to this possibility. How will you work to ensure such aid diversion does not occur and that funds sent to UNRWA do not violate the Taylor Force Act?

Answer. I fully agree that all efforts must be made to ensure Hamas is not able to continue their attacks on Israel. U.S. assistance for UNRWA is already subject to, and provided consistent with, section 301(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act, which requires that UNRWA “takes all possible measures to assure that no part of the United States contribution shall be used to furnish assistance to any refugee who is receiving military training as a member of the so-called Palestine Liberation Army or any other guerilla type organization or who has engaged in any act of terrorism.” The State Department works closely with our implementing partners to ensure that these funds are used effectively; for their intended purpose; and consistent with the law. Additionally, UNRWA screens all its program participants and staff every six months against U.N. sanctions lists. UNRWA has committed to preclude any individuals for whom they have credible information are members of militant organizations or have committed acts of terrorism from U.S. funding. UNRWA also employs a “Neutrality Framework” that outlines the Agency's standards, practices, and procedures regarding neutrality to ensure a consistent and coherent approach to neutrality issues. If confirmed, I will work with the relevant parts of the State Department and USAID to ensure that all U.S. assistance is provided consistent with applicable laws.

Question. How do you intend to respond to the likely many pro-Hamas voices that will suggest Israel will go too far in retaliation, including those who say it already has?

Answer. The President has been clear that the United States supports Israel's right to defend itself, including taking necessary action to respond to Hamas' heinous October 7 attack on Israel. Indeed, as I said at the hearing, Israel has not only the right, but a responsibility, to protect itself. I also believe Israeli leaders know they must do this in a way that takes every possible measure to prevent civilian casualties and civilian harm, and adheres to the rule of law and to international law. The United States stands unequivocally for the protection of civilian life during conflicts, and if confirmed, I will support ongoing efforts to urge all parties to take feasible precautions to minimize harm to civilian populations.

Question. Jordan's King Abdullah II continues to make the rounds with our EU allies, calling Israel's actions in self-defense “genocide” and “war crimes.” How will you engage with the like-minded diplomatic corps both inside and outside of Israel to combat this dangerous narrative.

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue the Administration's efforts to remain in regular communication with allies and partners— including Jordan—urging they publicly denounce Hamas' terrorist attack and affirm Israel's right to defend itself. I would also engage regional partners to work to prevent any further expansion of the conflict, protect civilians, and coordinate humanitarian assistance. Jordan remains a stalwart partner in this regard.

Question. The Israel-Lebanon maritime deal from October 2022 now looms large in Israel's strategic needs to defend its territorial and existential rights. How will you ensure that the terms of this deal are honored?

Answer. The historic decision made by Israel and Lebanon to establish a permanent maritime boundary, facilitated by the United States, opened the door to benefits for both parties, including opportunities for energy independence and critical investment for Lebanon and the protection of Israel's security and economic interests that are critical to promoting its regional integration. Both parties have remained committed to the implementation of the agreement under the spirit it was negotiated. If confirmed, I will work to advance Israel's national security interests and support Israel's regional integration, consistent with broader U.S. efforts to support a more stable, prosperous, and integrated Middle East.

Question. The U.S. has transferred large amounts of technology to Israel, who has been guilty in the past of transferring technology and arms to both China and Azerbaijan. These malign actors have been guilty of perpetuating their own genocidal activities, potentially violating U.S. law, e.g. Section 907 of the United States Freedom Support Act, in the process. How will you engage the Government of Israel on this issue?

Answer. The United States emphasizes to all partners, including Israel and Azerbaijan, that they must act in accordance with their obligations and commitments under international law, including international humanitarian law. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that Israel upholds its commitments. If confirmed, I will also emphasize U.S. concern about the PRC's predatory trade practices and disregard for intellectual property. I am confident that Israel understands it can and should do more to protect U.S. -Israeli shared interests in key economic and technology sectors. I am confident that, through engagement with my Israeli interlocutors, we can create policies that address our concern about PRC influence in Israel and mutually benefit our two nations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. JACOB J. LEW BY SENATOR CHRIS VAN HOLLEN

Question. What commitments have the Governments of Israel and Egypt made to facilitate the flow of humanitarian assistance to civilians in Gaza?

Answer. The United States is working closely with the Governments of Israel and Egypt to improve humanitarian conditions in Gaza, including by establishing a mechanism by which humanitarian assistance can reach Palestinian civilians in Gaza. President Biden appointed David Satterfield as the Special Envoy for Middle East Humanitarian Issues to lead these efforts, and he is in the region working this issue set. If confirmed I will work closely with the Special Envoy on these critical issues. Palestinian civilians should not suffer for the barbaric terrorism of Hamas.

Question. Has the Government of Israel agreed to resume the consistent flow of water through all pipelines from Israel into Gaza? If not, through which pipelines is Israel currently allowing water to flow and for how many hours each day? How would you prioritize the resumption of consistent water flow from Israel into Gaza to meet the dire humanitarian needs of civilians there?

Answer. The United States is working closely with the Government of Israel to improve access to water in Gaza. If confirmed, I will prioritize identifying ways to rapidly improve water access for the population of Gaza. I understand safe drinking water is an immediate, life-sustaining need during this crisis. Water supplies running out risks a massive water-borne epidemic. I understand that thanks to U.S. diplomatic engagement, Israel has restored one water pipeline to south Gaza as of October 15, and the Biden Administration is advocating for the restoration of additional water pipelines.

Question. What steps are needed to establish a sustainable humanitarian corridor into Gaza? What actions is the Administration taking to facilitate such a sustainable humanitarian corridor?

Answer. It is my understanding that, during their travels, President Biden and Secretary Blinken have engaged with our regional partners with this same question. The United States is pressing all parties to take all meaningful actions to protect civilians and to ensure access to humanitarian assistance. President Biden announced that the United States is providing $100 million in humanitarian assistance for the Palestinian people. This funding will help support over a million displaced people with clean water, food, hygiene support, medical care, and other essential needs. The United States provides humanitarian assistance through trusted partners. Civilians are not to blame, and assistance must urgently reach those in need. If confirmed, I will work closely with our U.N, international non-governmental, and other humanitarian partners to stress the importance of upholding international humanitarian law and restoring access to vital services like water.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO HON. JACOB J. LEW BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

UNSCR 2334 Implementation

If confirmed, you would be responsible for implementing American policy regarding the territories Israel took control of in June 1967. I would like to ask you some questions about what you understand those policies to be.

In 2015 you endorsed United Nations Security Council Resolution 2334, which called on member states “to distinguish, in their relevant dealings, between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied since 1967.” The phrase “territories occupied since 1967” refers to the Golan Heights and Judea and Samaria, including parts of Jerusalem.

The Biden administration’s policy on the Golan Heights has become particularly ambiguous. On August 31, the United States voted in favor of UNSCR 2695, which referred to a part of the Israeli Golan Heights as occupied, i.e. “the occupied Shab’a Farms.” The language endorses Hezbollah’s position and terminology for the territory. On Sept. 21, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs reaffirmed that position: she was asked if she endorsed the terminology in the resolution, and linked it to ongoing negotiations over Israel’s border with Lebanon being pushed by the Biden administration. However, the State Department has subsequently refused to clarify its policy. Instead, administration spokespeople have said that U.S. policy hasn’t changed, while refusing to specify what that policy is.

Question. Is it the policy of the United States that Israel has sovereignty over the Western Wall?

Answer. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, and strongly supports the historic status quo at the city’s holy sites. Jerusalem itself, including the specific boundaries of Israeli sovereignty in Jerusalem, is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you believe that the Western Wall is part of Israel?

Answer. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, and strongly supports the historic status quo at the city’s holy sites. Jerusalem itself, including the specific boundaries of Israeli sovereignty in Jerusalem, is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Is it the policy of the United States that Israel has sovereignty over the Jewish Quarter of Jerusalem?

Answer. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself, including the specific boundaries of Israeli sovereignty in Jerusalem, is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you believe that the Jewish Quarter of Jerusalem is part of Israel?

Answer. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as Israel’s capital. Jerusalem itself, including the specific boundaries of Israeli sovereignty in Jerusalem, is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Is it the policy of the United States that Israel has sovereignty over Jerusalem?

Answer. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, and it is my understanding that President Biden has no intention of reversing former President Trump’s decision on Jerusalem. Jerusalem itself, including the specific boundaries of Israeli sovereignty in Jerusalem, is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you believe that Jerusalem is part of Israel?

Answer. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as Israel's capital. Jerusalem itself, including the specific boundaries of Israeli sovereignty in Jerusalem, is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Is it the policy of the United States that Israel has sovereignty over the entire Israeli Golan Heights, including the Sheba Farms?

Answer. U.S. policy on the Golan Heights has not changed since 2019. As Secretary Blinken said on February 8, 2021: "Leaving aside the legalities of that question, as a practical matter, the Golan is very important to Israel's security. As long as Assad is in power in Syria, as long as Iran is present in Syria, militia groups backed by Iran, the Assad regime itself—all of these pose a significant security threat to Israel, and as a practical matter, the control of the Golan in that situation, I think, remains of real importance to Israel's security."

Question. Do you believe that the entire Israeli Golan Heights, including the Sheba Farms, are a part of Israel?

Answer. U.S. policy on the Golan Heights has not changed since 2019. As Secretary Blinken said on February 8, 2021: "Leaving aside the legalities of that question, as a practical matter, the Golan is very important to Israel's security. As long as Assad is in power in Syria, as long as Iran is present in Syria, militia groups backed by Iran, the Assad regime itself—all of these pose a significant security threat to Israel, and as a practical matter, the control of the Golan in that situation, I think, remains of real importance to Israel's security."

Question. Do you believe that allowing the prohibition on Iran's ballistic missile and drone programs to expire on October 18 was in the national security interests of the United States?

Answer. Iran's missile program continues to be subject to one of the strongest sanctions frameworks in the world and if confirmed, I will continue to undertake coordinated efforts with allies and partners to strengthen international cooperation to constrain the flow of components to and from Iran's missile activities.

Question. Please assess the effect you believe the expiration of the prohibitions will have on Israeli security.

Answer. Ironclad support for Israel's security has been a hallmark of this administration, and if confirmed, I would remain committed to working closely with Israel to jointly address the many threats Iran poses to Israel's interests. The U.S. Government never relied solely on UNSCR 2231 to restrict Iran's development and proliferation of missile related technologies, but rather a comprehensive set of multilateral and domestic tools. Iran's missile program continues to be subject to one of the strongest sanctions frameworks in the world and, if confirmed, I will continue to undertake coordinated efforts with allies and partners to strengthen international cooperation to constrain the flow of components to and from Iran's missile activities.

Question. What is your view on this policy? Is it a good thing or bad thing to provide resources to Hamas?

Answer. The United States designated Hamas as a foreign terrorist organization in 1997. I understand the Administration provides assistance in a manner consistent with applicable U.S. law and coordinates closely with other donors to ensure assistance benefits the Palestinian people and not Hamas or any other terrorist organization. The Department and USAID, as well as our development and humanitarian implementing partners, have robust vetting processes in place to mitigate the risk that U.S. foreign assistance could provide material support to Hamas or other terrorist groups. U.S. foreign assistance for the Palestinian people serves important U.S. interests and is done consistent with American values. The Administration is committed to ensuring U.S. assistance is well-calibrated to advance U.S. foreign policy interests, and, if confirmed, I will work to ensure that all appropriate safeguards remain in place and that U.S. foreign assistance is used for intended purposes.

Question. Will you commit if confirmed to prevent assistance from flowing into the Gaza Strip if it may benefit Hamas?

Answer. I understand the Department and the U.S. Agency for International Development have robust processes in place to mitigate the risk that U.S. Government assistance could provide material support to Hamas or any other terrorist group, including vetting implementing partners and their key personnel, restricting facility names (e.g., schools, clinics, etc.) to ensure they do not honor terrorism, including mandatory anti-terrorism clauses in grants and contracts, and coordinating with Israeli authorities. The U.S. Government also requires implementing partners to conduct their own due diligence and to have their own safeguards and risk mitigation measures in place to ensure U.S. funding is used only for intended purposes, consistent with applicable U.S. law. Our implementing partners must comply with robust financial and programmatic monitoring, reporting requirements, and compliance mechanisms. Further, all U.S. assistance in Gaza and the West Bank remains subject to regular Office of the Inspector General audits and investigations. Through monitoring and evaluation and regular consultations with our implementers, the U.S. Government can quickly identify attempted diversion and suspend or terminate programs if necessary. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring these robust safeguards remain in place.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. JACOB J. LEW BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

Question. Although Hamas—a U.S.-designated Foreign Terrorist Organization (FTO)—controls Gaza, the United States has continued to send U.S. foreign assistance to Gaza. For each of the following appropriations laws, I request the Department of State and United States Agency for International Development (USAID) to provide the total amount awarded—directly or indirectly—to any entity in Gaza, including whether the entity in Gaza was a recipient or sub-recipient:

- Amounts provided by Titles III, IV, V, and VI of Division F of Public Law 116–6,
- Amounts provided by Titles III, IV, V, and VI of Division G of Public Law 116–94,
- Amounts provided by Titles III, IV, V, and VI of Division K of Public Law 116–260,
- Amounts provided by Titles III, IV, V, and VI of Division K of Public Law 117–103, and
- Amounts provided by Titles III, IV, V, and VI of Division K of Public Law 117–328.

Answer. I note that your request for data is correctly directed to the State Department and USAID, and I have to defer to them in this regard, since I am not currently an official of either.

If confirmed, I would emphasize, in the strongest terms possible, the distinction between the people in Gaza and the oppressive terrorist organization Hamas that exercises de facto control in Gaza. Hamas not only perpetrates violence against Israelis but also against the Palestinians who live in the territory under its de facto control. The United States supports the people in Gaza through programs in areas such as wastewater management, economic development, and the strengthening of civil society.

The United States provides assistance through trusted partners including U.N. agencies, international NGOs, and humanitarian organizations. I agree it is imperative for the United States to take steps to ensure that no money or material assistance ends up in the hands of Hamas or any other terrorist group in Gaza or the West Bank and if I am confirmed, as ambassador I will do all I can to contribute to that result. All assistance must be provided consistent with U.S. law. U.S. support to UNRWA, which directly supports Palestinians in Gaza as well as in the broader region, since 2021 has totaled more than $1 billion. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Government continues its close oversight of UNRWA.

Question. For each award provided—directly or indirectly—to an entity in Gaza, including whether the entity in Gaza was a recipient or sub recipient, under the appropriation laws described in question (1), I request the Department of State and USAID to provide:

- the total amount awarded,
- the source of the appropriation,
- whether the amount has been obligated, and
- what amounts remain unexpended.

Answer. While I understand your interest, as a nominee I am not in a position to act on behalf of the State Department with regard to its records. I take my responsibilities with respect to Congressional oversight seriously and if confirmed, I look forward working with you to respond to your concerns.

Question. Do you, if confirmed, commit to advocating for a policy in which the Biden Administration would de-fund the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) until and unless UNRWA passes regular independent audits verifying that no anti-Semitism is taught in UNRWA schools?

Answer. I condemn antisemitism and incitement to violence and terrorism in any form. It is my understanding that U.N. agencies, including UNRWA, do not develop their own curriculum, but use the curriculum of host authorities. When concepts contrary to U.N. principles are identified, UNRWA provides instructions and supplementary materials to address the issue with its staff. I understand the United States also funds peace and tolerance education curriculum in UNRWA schools, programs that would not exist absent U.S. assistance. If confirmed, I will emphasize the importance of a policy that follows humanitarian principles, including neutrality, with UNRWA.

Question. Do you, if confirmed, commit to supporting a policy to defund UNRWA unless its mandate is changed to integrating populations in the country in which they live, transitioning responsibility for those who cannot be integrated to other agencies who serve refugees, and terminating the organization within five years?

Answer. I believe eliminating funding for UNRWA would be harmful for the innocent people that live in Gaza, Israel and the broader region as well as U.S. security interests. UNRWA's mandate was and is set by the U.N. General Assembly and provides essential services directly to Palestinian refugees in its five fields, including stabilizing education, medical care, and other services. If the United States abandons UNRWA, it will create a vacuum that Hamas or other malign actors would fill. This would leave the region less secure threatening the security of both Israel and the United States.

Question. Given that the top responsibility of an Ambassador is to ensure the safety and security of those living under your Chief of Mission authority, will you, if confirmed, commit to advocating that official U.S. policy make any aid to the Palestinian territories contingent on certification that the Palestinian Authority has discontinued the "Pay to Slay" program?

Answer. To me, the Palestinian practice of prisoner and "martyr" payments is abhorrent. I know this Administration continues to be absolutely committed to working to end the practice of Palestinian prisoner and "martyr" payments in a manner that addresses longstanding U.S. and international concerns. If confirmed, I can assure you that I would share that commitment and vigorously support adherence to the provisions of the Taylor Force Act and seek to build on the important work done thus far.

Question. After President Donald J. Trump fully implemented the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995 (Public Law 104-45)—including by formally recognizing Jerusalem as the capital of the State of Israel on December 6, 2017, and by relocating and opening the U.S. Embassy to Israel in Israel's capital city of Jerusalem on May 14, 2018—his Administration also closed the U.S. Consulate General for the Palestinians and merged this Consulate General's functions into Embassy Jerusalem under the U.S. Ambassador to Israel's Chief of Mission authority. Do you agree that opening/reopening a U.S. consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem—in particular, after the fact of U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital on December 6, 2017—would constitute a diminution of U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital?

Answer. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem would not change U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital or the location of the U.S. Embassy to Israel. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you also agree that opening/reopening a U.S. consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem—in particular, after the fact of U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital on December 6, 2017—would constitute a diminution of Israeli sovereignty? Please begin your answer with a yes or no.

Answer. No. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. Should the Consulate General in Jerusalem be one day reopened, it would not change U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital or the location of the U.S. Embassy to Israel. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

Question. Do you agree that the United States should neither open nor reopen a U.S. consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem if the Government of Israel continues to oppose it? Please begin your response with a yes or no.

Answer. The opening of a U.S. consular post is always the subject of discussion between the United States and the host country government. I understand the Administration recognizes that Jerusalem is central to the national visions of both Israelis and Palestinians. The United States recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. Jerusalem itself is a final status issue to be resolved through direct negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. I understand the Administration is committed, as am I, to keeping the U.S. Embassy in Jerusalem. Reopening the Consulate General in Jerusalem would not change U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital or the location of the U.S. Embassy to Israel. If confirmed, I will handle all issues related to Jerusalem with the care and sensitivity that they deserve.

The Honorable Jim Risch

483 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chair Cardin and Ranking Member Risch:

On behalf of American Jewish Committee (AJC), I write to urge in the strongest possible terms the swift review and confirmation of Jack Lew as Ambassador to Israel. This urgent request comes on the heels of the worst attack on Israel since the 1973 Yom Kippur War. The United States Government should ensure it has the highest level of government representation in Israel while our greatest ally in the Middle East undergoes its most challenging test in over 50 years.

At 6:30 a.m., October 7, Hamas, the Iran-backed terror group controlling Gaza, launched an unprovoked and vicious surprise attack on Israel, storming communities and homes, kidnapping and massacring civilians. Since the attack began, reports confirm at least 1300 Israelis have been murdered along with at least 25 U.S. citizens, more than 200 people have been kidnapped, over 3,000 people have been wounded, with hundreds in critical condition, and more than 5,000 rockets have been fired against Israeli towns and civilians. More than five days after Hamas attacked Israel, we are still coming to terms with the absolute barbarism and inhumanity inflicted against innocent Israelis- including children, the elderly, parents, and entire families. This brutality brings a renewed sense of urgency for American representation in Israel as it seeks to defend its citizens at this critical moment in time.

Israel is a major strategic partner as well as our strongest democratic ally in the Middle East region. As Israel fights for its future, the U.S. must continue to stand steadfast alongside our partner. We must continue to unequivocally condemn Hamas's acts of terror and we must also not lose sight of the peace and prosperity Israel seeks with its Arab neighbors. There is vital work ahead for this ambassador and a prolonged vacancy sends a compromising signal to our common adversaries that seek death and destruction over peace and prosperity. Additionally, with 25 Americans killed in this act of terror, and at least 17 unaccounted for, the absence of an ambassador hinders the ability of the United States to represent its citizens during an evolving crisis. An active ambassador on the ground in Israel is crucial to ensure the United States can effectively pursue our foreign policy objectives, support our ally, and assert strong global leadership. Jack Lew's distinguished record of public service makes him an exceptional nominee for this position.

As Israel recovers from this ruthless and unparalleled act of terror within its borders, we implore you to move expeditiously on filling this critical ambassadorial post. We enthusiastically support Jack Lew's nomination to be U.S. Ambassador to Israel and with a great sense of urgency urge his speedy confirmation. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to reach out. Thank you for the consideration of our views.

Respectfully,

Dear Senate Majority Leader Schumer, Senate Minority Leader McConnell, Chairman Cardin and Ranking Member Risch,

We write to you today, in the face of an unprecedented crisis in Israel, expressing ADL's (Anti-Defamation League) strong support for the Honorable Jack Lew to be immediately confirmed as the next U.S. Ambassador to Israel. As we confront the developing situation in Israel, it is imperative that we have a skilled and dedicated diplomat in place to represent the United States.

At this critical moment in history, when Israel is facing an unprovoked war that has left more than 700 Israelis murdered, more than 2,000 injured, and at least 100 women, children and men kidnapped by the terrorist organizations Hamas and Palestinian Islamic Jihad, it is critical that we demonstrate strong U.S. leadership and support for our closest ally in the Middle East.

The horrific violence is taking a devastating toll on the people of Israel. Our moral obligation as a nation is to stand firmly by their side during this challenging time.

Yesterday, President Biden expressed his strong support for Israel's right to self-defense, "unequivocally condemn[ed] this appalling assault against Israel by Hamas terrorists from Gaza" and made clear that the United States stands "ready to offer all appropriate means of support to the Government and people of Israel." These words reaffirm the enduring bond between our nations and emphasize the importance of American leadership during times of crisis.

Jack Lew's confirmation as U.S. Ambassador to Israel is the realized manifestation of that support. His extensive experience in public service, including as Secretary of the Treasury and White House Chief of Staff under President Obama, demonstrates his exceptional leadership abilities and dedication.

The coming days and weeks will be a difficult time as Israel embarks on a war to defend its territory and people, and degrade and defeat Hamas and Palestinian Islamic Jihad. Coordination, cooperation, and support between the United States and Israel will be more critical than ever. A confirmed U.S. Ambassador to Israel is fundamental to ensure that the United States supports the Jewish state in its time of need.

The United States and Israel share a unique and unbreakable bond based on shared values, common interests, and a commitment to democracy and security. It is vital that we send a clear message to the world that the United States stands firmly with Israel in the face of war and barbaric violence. Confirming Jack Lew as the U.S. Ambassador to Israel would signal our unwavering support for our ally and our commitment to promoting peace, stability in the region, and ultimately achieving a viable two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter, and please let me know if you have any questions or require any additional information.

Sincerely,

Jonathan Greenblatt

A STATEMENT SUBMITTED BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN WITH A LETTER WRITTEN BY SALAH EL DEEN SOLTAN TO HIS GRANDSON
SALAH BINYAMEEN

STATEMENT OF THE
HONORABLE BENJAMIN L. CARDIN (D-MD)
July 27, 2023

Mr. President,

I rise today to speak of the importance of Holocaust education and engagement that can help us push back against the rising tide of antisemitism we are seeing nowadays, in our country and across the world.

As the Special Representative on Antisemitism, Racism and Intolerance for the Parliamentary Assembly of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, as many of my colleagues know, I have made it a personal priority to address the rise of antisemitism. As antisemitism is increasing at home and abroad, it is important to come together to address antisemitism, and call out the hate when we see or hear it before it becomes more ingrained in our society.

At the same time, we should celebrate those occasions when a person with a history of making anti-Semitic statements sees the light and realizes the error of his ways, renounces his past statements and vows never to repeat them. Happily, we have an example of just such a case that I would like to bring to the attention of Senate and the American people.

I would like to submit into the Congressional Record a noteworthy letter from Salah el Deen Soltan, a US person, who wrote last month to his newest grandson, to be shared with other grandchildren – most of whom he hasn't met after a decade in wrongful detention in Egypt.

As Human Rights Watch stated in a report published on May 3, 2023, calling for Soltan to be released from his unjust imprisonment in one of Cairo's most notorious jails:

Before moving to the United States, Soltan was a professor of Islamic Law at Cairo University. He later founded and served as the president of the Islamic American University in Dearborn, Michigan from 1999 to 2004. As a legal US permanent resident, Soltan lived and worked in the US for over a decade before his arrest in Egypt in September 2013 for opposing the military's ousting of elected president Mohamed Morsi. A court sentenced Soltan to life in prison in September 2017 in a mass trial marred by extensive due process and fair trial violations. The United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention determined in 2018 that his arrest was arbitrary, as the authorities failed to provide credible evidence of wrongdoing, and that his prosecution violated the right to political participation and freedoms of peaceful assembly and expression.

In the coming weeks, Soltan will have served a full decade in Egyptian jails. During this time, he had time to reflect on his personal history of making crude and cruel antisemitic statements to his students and followers over the years. So he wrote a letter, that has been smuggled out of prison and delivered to his family.

In this letter, Soltan addresses his previously held antisemitic positions and remarks, apologizes for them and disavows them. In solitary confinement, Soltan reflects on his past, corrects the record for his grandson, and lays out how he would like to be remembered in case he never gets the opportunity to meet his grandchildren.

As he writes – “My previous statements and stances are wrong and the best of us are those who reflect, hold oneself

accountable and repent. Here I am, reflecting and seeking forgiveness from God for the harm that may have been inflicted upon anyone. I apologize to everyone harmed by what I said and called for. I leave behind these prison walls all forms of anger, hate and coarseness. I bear the burden of upholding the sanctity of human life, speaking truth and defending it wherever it may be. I had only intended to stand up for justice but what I did resulted in the exact opposite of the intent; and became a reason for further oppression, suffering and marginalization of the innocent. In fact, my oppressors used my decade-old stances to justify and fend off pressure from concerned western parties about my release.”

It is never too late for remorse and redemption.

In 2020, we saw several Muslim-majority Middle Eastern governments normalize diplomatic relations with Israel with the historic announcement of the Abraham Accords. And in the years since, there has been a real thawing of the hostility toward the Jewish state in some of the neighboring countries. Overcoming decades of official hostility toward the government and people of Israel, broadcast through official media outlets and often imbued with blatant antisemitism, will take time. But a journey begins with a single step. And the reconciliation of the peoples of the region begins with one person.

Together, we can choose peace and forgiveness, rather than be prisoners of past differences. In that spirit, and consistent with the Jewish tradition of Teshuva, in which people can see the error of their ways and vow never to repeat that which has offended the Creator, I welcome and embrace Salah Soltan's change of heart. Especially given his difficult circumstances, I find it refreshing and notable that he has taken the time and the trouble to send a heartfelt message to his grandchildren. He has accepted responsibility for his previous hateful words, and is seeking forgiveness from those harmed by it.

This September, Soltan will have been imprisoned for a decade in Egyptian prisons where human rights organizations have estimated there to be over 60,000 political prisoners. Last May, more than 50 human rights organizations released a joint statement noting that Soltan is at serious risk of death due to deteriorating health conditions.

In recent weeks, Egypt has started to correct course with the release of two high profile detainees. I urge President Sisi to extend his presidential pardon to Soltan, so that he may leave Egypt and be reunited with his family.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete text of the letter written by Salah el Deen Soltan to his grandchildren be printed in full at this point in the Congressional Record.

My dearest beloved grandson, Salah Binyameen,

Ever since I learned of your birth and that you will bear my name, I have been praying for you and constantly thinking about you. I fervently pray to God Almighty that you become a positive force in our community and the world at large. It is no secret that you were born during one of the most challenging periods of my imprisonment, yet news of your birth brought me immense solace and joy. Your coming is a reminder of the time that has passed, my fifth grandson, the fourth of whom I have not met or spent time with because of my decade-long wrongful imprisonment in solitary confinement. The passing years have been arduous, and I feel as though time slips away from me without anyone to share my happiness or alleviate my solitude.

Dearest grandson, Salah, enduring a decade of imprisonment and torture, I found solace only in God. The darkness of my solitude has revealed many certainties and has granted me clarity about my past with all of its good and bad, particularly as I witness death so frequently around me. I feel as if I stared death in the eyes while lying on the ground, paralyzed and denied help and medicine for days. During those helpless moments, all I could do was ponder: Will I ever have the opportunity to see you? What will you come to know of me? If you never meet me, who will be your source of information about me? So, I've decided to write you a series of letters, this being the first, so that you may come to know me as I am. I want you to understand who I am, what my values are, and what I stand for.

My dearest Salah, I have always believed, and will continue to believe, that justice is the bedrock of faith. Freedom and justice are the imperatives of our religious beliefs. I have always prayed for divine guidance towards truth, and for inspiration to stand up for the distressed and most marginalized. In the depths of my suffering, I question whether I have consistently lived up to those ideals. I am grateful to God for the guidance on the things I got right and for forgiveness on those that I got wrong. Allah Himself swore by the sanctity of the questioning soul: "And I swear by the reproaching soul" (Quran 75:2). None of us is immune, not even from the gravest of errors, and repentance is a virtue of a sound heart.

The first of these revisions occurred in the immediate aftermath of the 2013 coup and the gruesome Rabaa Massacre. I penned an Op-Ed to the Egyptian people apologizing for the Islamist Political movements' political mistakes. My decade in solitude that followed compelled me to delve further inwards, to think and rethink. When your father and I shared a prison cell, I engaged in deep contemplations and introspections. Those were both bitter and sweet days, I miss him so much. We engaged in endless debates as I contemplated the meaning of justice, injustice, and advocating for the most disenfranchised. I pondered anger, violence, righteousness, the common good, and reform. I held myself accountable, questioning whether I adhered to my intellectual commitments for the benefit of all or only for certain groups. I reflected on my intellectual journey from Egypt to the United States, Bahrain, and beyond. I have learned and grown and want to acknowledge my regrets and mistakes, as acknowledging what is right and wrong is the beginning of wisdom.

The Palestinian cause shaped my generation's worldview and awakened my political consciousness and activism. It laid the foundations for my understanding of justice, starting from my elementary school days until I obtained my Ph.D. in Islamic jurisprudence. For many years, I allowed my anger to inform my reactions to the senseless bloodshed, and the desecration of sacred sites and to drive my approach to the Palestinian issue privately and publicly. I focused on the losses and struggles of the Palestinian people and their powerlessness and while then as now, many more Palestinians have been injured and killed. My impassioned defense of the oppressed in the Muslim world in those days relied on the common rhetoric that was fueled by anger which turned to hate. As the death toll mounted, my statements sometimes veered toward antisemitism. In doing so, I displayed a blind rage that contradicted the fundamental principles of our beautiful religion. We are a religion of tolerance and compassion toward all religions and such rhetoric has no place in our community or our pursuit of justice. I deeply regret times when I engaged in that kind of rhetoric that I shudder to recall and condemn all rhetoric that is discriminatory, hateful and violent. The ends can never justify the means and noble objectives can only be attained through noble methods. Let me be clear, my commitment to justice for the Palestinian people remains steadfast, as is my belief that the many paths towards justice and peace do not require demonization of the other. Salah, justice and solidarity must extend to those with whom we disagree. In fact, our true commitment to these ideals is measured by how we apply them to those who differ from us.

Look at me now, Salah; I find myself in a country with a Muslim ruler, where the judge, warden, officer, and guards who wrongfully imprison, torture and deny me basic medical needs are all Muslim. While those who stand up for me (and others) are individuals who share little in common with me, except for our shared belief in justice and freedom. I recall how Eric Lewis, a Jewish lawyer and now a dear friend of the family, was the sole international lawyer permitted to visit a political prisoner in Egyptian prisons. I remember how Andrea Prasow, a Jewish human rights lawyer, assumed your father's position as the Executive Director of a rights organization advocating on behalf of Arab political prisoners. Senators Patrick Leahy (liberal Christian), and the late John McCain (Conservative Christian) also come to mind. These individuals, spanning the political spectrum, have dedicated their professional careers to advocating for the oppressed despite their respective political and ideological differences. All of these contradictions and ironies have compelled me to see the error in some of my previous beliefs, statements and positions.

My previous statements and stances are wrong and the best of us are those who reflect, hold oneself accountable and repent. Here I am, reflecting and seeking forgiveness from God for the harm that may have been inflicted upon anyone. I apologize to everyone harmed by what I said and called for. I leave behind these prison walls all forms of anger, hate and coarseness. I bear the burden of upholding the sanctity of human life, speaking truth and defending it wherever it may be.

I had only intended to stand up for justice, but what I did resulted in the exact opposite of the intent, and became a reason for further oppression, suffering and marginalization of the innocent. In fact, my oppressors used my decade-old stances to justify and fend off pressure from concerned western parties about my release.

Lastly, my dearest grandson, I am writing to you in pursuit of a world that leads with love and eschews hatred. Life is far too short and precious to allow it to be dominated by anger. I urge you to set your moral compass towards justice and truth. Defend those with every peaceful means at your disposal. I hope you grow up to build a world where tolerance, peace and coexistence despite differences is the norm. My beloved, I pray that you grow up knowing and being proud of your grandfather and everything he stood for. I love you, and I long for the opportunity to meet you, whether it is in this life or in the corridors of Paradise in the one after. Oh God, please make me better than they think, and forgive me for what they do not know.

Your loving grandfather,

Salah el Deen Soltan

I. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

For 30 years, the United States and its international partners imposed a strict sanctions regime against the Government of Iran to influence Iranian policy. In 2011, the United States and other world powers implemented crippling financial sanctions on Iran in response to the country's enrichment of uranium and development of nuclear weapons. The sanctions took a toll on the country and its people. The pressure of effective sanctions afforded the United States an opportunity to work to achieve concessions in exchange for sanctions relief.

As the United States negotiated with Iran, one important U.S. interest consistently remained off-limits: Iran would not be granted access to either the U.S. financial system or the U.S. dollar. Foreign financial institutions were free to conduct business with the government of Iran and Iranian entities, but U.S. financial institutions continued to be barred from engaging Iran. Senior U.S. government officials repeatedly testified to Congress that Iranian access to the U.S. financial system was not on the table or part of any deal. This notwithstanding, the U.S. Department of the Treasury, at the direction of the U.S. State Department, granted a specific license that authorized a conversion of Iranian assets worth billions of U.S. dollars using the U.S. financial system. Even after the specific license was issued, U.S. government officials maintained in congressional testimony that Iran would not be granted access to the U.S. financial system.

Joint Plan of Action. In November 2013, the United States, along with the permanent members of the United Nations Security Council ("Security Council") China, France, Russia, and the United Kingdom, plus Germany (collectively known as the "P5 +1") signed the Joint Plan of Action ("JPOA") with Iran in Geneva, Switzerland. The JPOA was a temporary measure that lifted limited economic sanctions on Iran in exchange for Iran suspending portions of its nuclear program while working towards a permanent solution. The JPOA went into effect in January 2014 as the parties negotiated the terms of a permanent deal.

Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action. In July 2015, Iran and the P5+1 signed the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action ("JCPOA"), which replaced the JPOA. The Security Council adopted the JCPOA on October 18, 2015, and the JCPOA went into effect on January 16, 2016 ("Implementation Day"). Iran agreed to several nuclear-related limitations, including limiting the production of enriched uranium for 15 years and granting the International Atomic Energy Agency access to certain facilities to monitor compliance with the agreement.

In exchange, the United States committed to lifting some economic sanctions on Iran, including sanctions by the United States on foreign entities and countries that conducted business with Iran outside of the United States (commonly referred to as "secondary sanctions"). Iran was also allowed to access assets previously frozen abroad. On Implementation Day, Iran had $5.7 billion in assets at Bank Muscat in Muscat, Oman in Omani rials.

Notwithstanding this relief, primary U.S. sanctions impacting Iran generally remained in place. It remained illegal for U.S. persons, entities, and financial institutions to do business with Iran or parties on behalf of Iran. This ban also included any “U-Turn” transactions—which are transactions by or on behalf of an Iranian bank in which a U.S. bank acted solely as an intermediary to convert one foreign currency into dollars and then to another foreign currency.

U.S. government officials testified before Congress that Iran would not have access to the U.S. financial system. Members of Congress raised concerns about Iran’s ability to access the dollar and the U.S. financial system under the JCPOA. The primary agencies responsible for administering and policing the United States’ sanctions program are the Departments of State and Treasury. Several State and Treasury Department officials testified before congressional committees concerning the relief provided under the JCPOA. For example, in July 2015, Treasury Secretary Jack Lew testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that, under the JCPOA, Iran “will continue to be denied access to the [U.S.’s] financial and commercial market.” Later that same month, the Treasury Department’s Acting Under Secretary for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence, Adam Szubin, testified to the Senate Banking Committee: “Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. banks.”

The message to Congress and the American people was clear: Iran was not given access to the U.S. financial system under the terms of the JCPOA.

U.S. government officials encouraged other countries to do business with Iran. Shortly after the P5+1 reached a deal with Iran in July 2015, officials from the Departments of State and Treasury traveled the globe meeting with foreign financial institutions to encourage business with Iran. Their purpose was to make clear that other countries could conduct transactions with Iran, as long as they avoided U.S. persons, the U.S. financial system, and U.S. sanctioned Iranians. In total, U.S. officials participated in over 200 of these “roadshows” in major cities such as London, Geneva, Tokyo, Berlin, Rome, and Paris. The roadshows amounted to the U.S. government telling the world that Iran was open for business, as long as the rest of the world left the United States out of it.

During these roadshows, U.S. officials also signaled that it would not aggressively enforce violations of the new sanctions regime. For example, during a roadshow in London in March 2015 with representatives from 10 major global financial institutions, the head of the U.S. Treasury Department’s Office of Foreign Asset Control (“OFAC”) assured attendees that “95 percent of the time OFAC sees an apparent violation it results in a simple warning letter or no enforcement action.” He explained OFAC would only take action in egregious situations.

Iran requested access to the U.S. dollar. Foreign banks had problems converting Iran’s assets. Just days after Implementation Day, Bank Muscat contacted OFAC seeking access to the U.S. dollar. The request related to the Central Bank of Iran's ("CBI") desire to convert the $5.7 billion in assets held by Bank Muscat in Omani rials to euros. Because the Omani rial's value is pegged to the U.S. dollar, the conversion through the U.S. financial system required two steps: First, the Omani rials had to be converted to U.S. dollars, and, second, the U.S. dollars would be converted to euros. But a conversion to U.S. dollars on behalf of the CBI was prohibited under U.S. sanctions. Other options existed to convert the funds from rials to euros without using the U.S. financial system. But using the U.S. dollar as an intermediary step was the most efficient means, even though U.S. sanctions prohibited it.

The inability to convert the funds held at Bank Muscat through the U.S. financial system frustrated key Iranian officials. On January 24, 2016, a lead Iranian negotiator, wrote to his U.S. State Department counterpart, complaining that Iran could not convert its assets as it requested. Confused by Iran's frustration, Treasury officials reviewed the JCPOA and determined it was consistent with Iran's position, allowing the Government of Iran to engage in "transfers," "foreign exchange (including Rial related transactions)," and the "purchase or acquisition by the Government of Iran of U.S. bank notes." After reviewing the JCPOA's relevant provisions, one Treasury official wrote in an email, "Yikes. It looks like we committed to a whole lot beyond just allowing the immobilized funds to settle out."

The Treasury Department issued a specific license granting Iran access to the U.S. financial system. Treasury Department officials began working on a specific license authorizing Bank Muscat's transaction. A specific license allows specified transactions to occur that would otherwise violate U.S. sanctions. On February 24, 2016, the Treasury Department issued a specific license to Bank Muscat to authorize the conversion of Iran's rials to euros through "any United States depository institution ... involved as a correspondent bank ... where such foreign exchange conversion provides an indirect benefit to persons subject to the jurisdiction of the Government of Iran." Iran was then free to use a U.S. bank to act as the intermediary (called a "correspondent bank") to convert its assets at Bank Muscat (Omani rials) through the correspondent bank account in the United States (U.S. dollars) to a designated bank in Europe (euros).

OFAC encouraged two U.S. correspondent banks to convert the funds. Even with the license, Iran needed a willing U.S. correspondent bank to convert the Omani rials. Bank Muscat maintained correspondent relationships with at least two U.S. banks. U.S. officials at OFAC contacted both of the banks to encourage them to convert the funds. Convincing a U.S. bank to convert the funds was crucial. To further encourage the banks, one U.S. government official wrote "I agree it would be a good idea to have [Secretary] Lew engage [the U.S. bank]. If they refuse we can suggest [Secretary] Kerry will call, which will drive them nuts."

Both U.S. banks eventually declined, primarily due to the unwillingness to take on the legal and compliance risk posed by the complex conversion, but also reputational concerns in doing business with a comprehensively sanctioned country like Iran. Without a willing U.S. correspondent bank, Iran's assets remained at Bank Muscat.

Treasury and State Department officials sought other ways to move the funds. Discussions involved coordinating with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, the Bank for International Settlements, and the Central Bank of Germany. None of these alternatives were effectuated.

The funds remained at Bank Muscat; Iranian officials remained frustrated. Iranian officials continued to express great frustration that funds could not be converted as requested. In March 2016, one Iranian official wrote to a Senior State Department Official that "OFAC is almost all the time invoked as the reason for other countries' unwillingness to let us have unhindered access to our funds abroad." That same Iranian official also wrote, "Please note that our inability to convert and use our bank deposits is causing challenges, particularly after the [Implementation Day] when we have expected free access and use of our funds abroad." In defense, the Senior State Department Official responded that the United States "exceeded our JCPOA commitments by OFAC's issuing a license to enable Bank Muscat to work with any U.S. financial institution to facilitate the conversion of assets in the banks from rials to other non-dollar currencies." That same Senior State Department Official also explained that the Bank Muscat transaction was "prohibited by U.S. sanctions that are still in place, and which we were clear we would not be removing as part of the JCPOA."

U.S. officials continued to assure Congress that Iran would not be able to access the U.S. financial system. As the Treasury and State Department worked behind the scenes to help Iran access the dollar, the message to Congress remained the same: The JCPOA did not allow Iran to access the U.S. financial system.

In March 2016, Senators Marco Rubio and Mark Kirk wrote to the Treasury Department to seek clarity on "new reports suggesting the Administration is working to give Iran access to the U.S. financial system or to dollar transactions outside of the U.S. financial system." The Treasury Department responded in June 2016:

To be clear, the U.S. Department of Treasury is not working on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system, nor are we assisting Iran in gaining access to dollar payment systems outside the U.S. financial system. The Administration has not been and is not planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system.

Just three months earlier, the same agency issued a specific license for Iran to access to the U.S. financial system and the U.S. dollar.

Eventually, Iranian officials stopped complaining to the State Department about the inability to convert their rials into dollars. In the end, State Department officials believed Iran moved the money slowly over time by converting small amounts of rials directly to euros without using the U.S. financial system. A January 2017 State Department email indicated that Iran still “expressed concern” that the Iranian fund issue remained fully unresolved.

II. FINDINGS OF FACTS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Findings of Fact

- (1) Under the JPOA, Iran transferred roughly $13.4 billion in oil revenue assets to restricted accounts overseas. Iran deposited $8.8 billion of that oil revenue in one restricted account at Bank Muscat in Muscat, Oman.
- (2) Following Implementation Day for the JCPOA, Iran began to seek the benefits of the deal, including requesting access to assets frozen in restricted accounts. While other countries were free to do business with Iran, primary sanctions by the United States remained in place under the terms of the JCPOA. This meant it continued to be illegal for U.S. persons and entities to do business with Iranian persons and entities.
- (3) Iran requested access to the U.S. financial system. Three days after Implementation Day, Bank Muscat contacted OFAC on behalf of the Central Bank of Iran. Bank Muscat sought to convert $5.7 billion in Omani rials into euros on behalf of Iran. Because the rial is pegged to the U.S. dollar, the most efficient conversion was with an intermediary step through a U.S. bank using U.S. dollars. However, other options to convert the rials into euros without using the U.S. dollar existed.
- (4) U.S. government officials testified before Congress that Iran was not granted access to the U.S. financial system under the JCPOA. In July 2015, Treasury Secretary Jack Lew testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that, under the JCPOA, Iran “will continue to be denied access to the [U.S.’s] financial and commercial market.” Later that same month, the Treasury Department’s Acting Under Secretary for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence, Adam Szubin, testified to the Senate Banking Committee: “Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. banks.” Ambassador Thomas Shannon from the State Department testified that there would not be an “exchange of dollars inside the U.S. financial system” and that Iran would not have access to the larger U.S. financial system.

- (5) The Treasury Department issued a specific license to authorize Iran’s assets at Bank Muscat to be converted to U.S. dollars through the U.S. financial system. On February 24, 2016, OFAC issued a specific license to Bank Muscat authorizing Iranian assets worth roughly $5.7 billion to flow through the U.S. financial system. The Bank Muscat specific license expired on February 28, 2017.
- (6) For the duration of the specific license, Bank Muscat was authorized to use the U.S. financial system to convert additional future Iranian deposits, known as “fresh funds.” One Bank Muscat executive wrote this was a “gigantic breakthrough which has assured Iran of almost full global financial inclusion.”
- (7) U.S. government officials encouraged two U.S. banks to convert Iran’s rials. Following the issuance of the specific license, OFAC contacted two U.S. banks to convert Iran’s rials to U.S. dollars. A State Department official even suggested that Secretary Kerry or Secretary Lew should contact the U.S. banks and encourage them to facilitate the conversion. Both banks declined to complete the transaction due to compliance, reputational, and legal risks associated with doing business with Iran.
- (8) The Senior State Department Official negotiating implementation of the JCPOA understood giving Iran access to the U.S. financial system was prohibited by U.S. sanctions and outside the relief under the JCPOA or JPOA. That official wrote to his Iranian counterpart that the specific license “exceeded” the U.S. commitments under the JCPOA. He continued that the Treasury Department authorized the transaction “as a gesture of support” to Iran.
- (9) Treasury Department officials strongly considered issuing a general license authorizing all foreign financial institutions to conduct similar transactions using the U.S. financial system to convert Iranian assets. One official at the National Security Council emailed concerns about linking the general license to the JCPOA. In response, a Treasury Department official disagreed and asserted a general license must be linked to the JCPOA and revoked in the event of a snapback. That general license was never issued once it was evident that U.S. financial institutions did not appear eager to conduct foreign currency exchanges on behalf of Iran.

- (10) Materials prepared for Treasury Secretary Lew to testify before Congress about the JCPOA suggested he disclose the specific license to Bank Muscat “if pressed.” In his testimony, Secretary Lew did not disclose the specific license authorizing Iran to access the U.S. financial system. In fact, the Treasury Department maintained Iran was not given access to the U.S. financial system, nor was the U.S. government working to give them access.
- (11) When the two U.S. correspondent banks declined to convert the funds, other options were considered. The other options considered included Bank Muscat coordinating with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, the Bank for International Settlements, and the Central Bank of Germany. None of these options were effectuated.
- (12) The State Department and Treasury Department held at least 200 meetings or “roadshows” around the world to encourage other countries to do business with Iran. Treasury Department officials downplayed any potential future penalties or fines, stating that 95 percent of the time, OFAC sends a warning letter or takes no action. And at least one European regulator who attended an OFAC roadshow, commented that foreign financial institutions felt “political pressure” to conduct business with Iran and Iranian companies.
- (13) Treasury Department officials proactively contacted foreign financial institutions to provide information about the JCPOA’s sanctions relief. In one example, an OFAC compliance officer proactively contacted a foreign financial institution to make sure they “understood Iran sanctions relief.” The communication left the foreign financial institution confused, since that foreign financial institution “had no business with Iran.”
- (14) Iran’s assets remained at Bank Muscat. Despite issuing the specific license to allow Iran to access the U.S. financial system, Bank Muscat was unable to effectuate the conversion using the U.S. dollar. The State Department indicated Iran converted the funds in small increments using European banks and without accessing the U.S. financial system.

Recommendations

- (1) Informed future negotiations with Iran. The current Administration should be aware of the importance of Iran accessing the U.S. financial system in any future negotiations regarding sanctions relief with Iran. The Administration should brief congressional committees of jurisdiction and oversight committees periodically and on request of the status of any future negotiations.

- (2) Congress should require the Treasury Department to provide notice of any specific license to Congress. The notice to Congress should be provided to all congressional committees of jurisdiction and oversight committees within a reasonable time prior to the license taking effect. The notice should, at minimum, include a copy of the specific license.
- (3) Understand other sanctions relief granted to Iran. The Treasury Department should immediately provide all JPOA and JCPOA related specific licenses and comfort letters to congressional committees of jurisdiction and oversight committees.
- (4) Agencies should increase coordination with regard to sanctions. The State and Treasury Departments should closely coordinate when discussing sanctions relief to ensure that State Department policy goals can be properly executed with Treasury Department tools, such as general or specific licenses.
- (5) Increased policing of U.S. sanctions policies. OFAC should effectively police U.S. sanctions and ensure the current sanctions regime is properly enforced. OFAC officials should also refrain from telling foreign persons and entities that violations of U.S. sanctions only result in an enforcement action five percent of the time.

III. BACKGROUND

A. United States' Sanctions Against Iran

United States' sanctions have been a "significant component of U.S. Iran policy for decades."¹ "The United States has imposed restrictions on activities with Iran under various legal authorities since 1979, following the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran."² While sanctions on Iran were partially lifted following the release of hostages in 1981, the United States continued to apply significant sanctions on Iran through a number of Executive Orders and statutory authorities.³

In 2010, a series of European Union and United Nations finance and trade-related sanctions also increased pressure on Iran's economy as oil output dropped and Iran's economy floundered.⁴ As the sanctions successfully pressured the Iranian economy, the United States undertook efforts to negotiate certain sanctions relief in exchange for concessions regarding Iran's nuclear program.⁵

1. The Joint Plan of Action

On November 24, 2013, a group of countries known as the P5+1—China, France, Germany, Russia, the United Kingdom, and the United States—reached a preliminary understanding with Iran, which was identified as the Joint Plan of Action (“JPOA”).⁶ The U.S. State Department described the JPOA as the “first meaningful limits Iran has accepted on its nuclear program in close to a decade” and sought to constrain Iran's nuclear program while providing the country with “sanctions relief [focused] on a limited number of commercial activities and associated services.”⁷ When announcing the deal, however, U.S. officials maintained that sanction reductions were “limited, temporary, targeted, and reversible.”⁸

The JPOA focused on freezing aspects of Iran's nuclear program to provide time to negotiate a comprehensive understanding.⁹ If Iran complied and refrained from “any further advances of its [nuclear] activities,” the JPOA promised Iran certain, limited financial relief.¹⁰ Specifically, the sanctions relief involved several commercial sectors and activities, including “exports of petrochemical products; Iran's purchase and sale of gold and precious metals; the provision of goods and services to Iran's automotive sector; and the licensing of safety-of-flight inspections and repairs for Iranian civil aviation.”¹¹

One component of the JPOA relief included giving Iran access to some of its oil revenues held outside Iran and outside the United States.¹² Between January 20, 2014 and July 20, 2014, Iran was given access to the oil revenue worth roughly $4.2 billion through several installments.¹³ These installments released oil revenues held in countries such as Japan, South Korea, and India, after which they were transferred to Oman, Switzerland, or the United Arab Emirates.¹⁴ The JPOA also permitted “nearly $15 billion of [Iran’s] revenues during [the JPOA] period [to] go into restricted overseas accounts.”¹⁵ These restricted accounts held Iranian funds “to establish financial channels to facilitate Iran’s import of certain humanitarian goods to Iran, payment of medical expenses incurred by Iranians abroad, payments of Iran’s UN obligations” and other negotiated payments.¹⁶

While the understanding was reached in November 2013, it was not implemented until January 20, 2014, with an initial expiration date of July 20, 2014.¹⁷ That deadline was extended five times until a comprehensive understanding was reached on July 14, 2015.¹⁸

2. The Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action

On July 14, 2015, following nearly 20 months of negotiations, the P5+1, the European Union (“E.U.”), and Iran came to an understanding on a Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (“JCPOA”).¹⁹ The aim was to “ensure the exclusively peaceful nature of Iran's nuclear program."²⁰ The deal touted "the comprehensive lifting of all U.N. Security Council sanctions as well as multilateral and national sanctions related to Iran's nuclear program ... including steps on access in areas of trade, technology, finance, and energy."²¹ The JCPOA sought to "enable Iran to fully enjoy its right to nuclear energy for peaceful purposes under the relevant articles of the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty."²²

Annex V of the JCPOA outlined a multi-step implementation plan that provided for a Finalization Day, an Adoption Day, an Implementation Day, a Transition Day, and an U.N. Security Council Resolution ("UNSCR") Termination Day.²³ Implementation Day occurred on January 16, 2016, following the International Atomic Energy Agency's ("IAEA") and the U.S. Secretary of State's verification and confirmation that Iran "implemented its key nuclear-related measures described in the JCPOA."²⁴ Implementation Day marked the date on which the United States lifted its nuclear-related sanctions related to Iran, as specified in the JCPOA.²⁵

Iran's nuclear-related commitments included restrictions on Iran's enrichment capability.²⁶ For example, Iran was prohibited from installing "additional heavy water reactors or accumulati[ng] ... heavy water" for 15 years.²⁷ Iran was permitted to maintain a heavy water reactor in Arak, Iran, for the purpose of "peaceful nuclear research and radioisotopes production for medical and industrial purposes."²⁸ Finally, Iran had to "allow the IAEA to monitor the implementation of the voluntary measures for their respective durations, as well as to implement transparency measures, as set out in this JCPOA and its Annexes."²⁹

In return, the United States committed to lifting "all nuclear-related sanctions."³⁰ This impacted a variety of U.S. secondary sanctions focusing on

Iranian economic sectors, including finance, banking, insurance, energy and petrochemical, shipping, shipbuilding, precious metals, software, and automobiles.³¹ Among the items included in the JCPOA sanctions relief package were the removal of “bilateral trade limitations on Iranian revenues held abroad, including limitations on their transfer.”³² The United States also “removed over 400 individuals and entities” from OFAC’s List of Specially Designated Nationals and Blocked Persons (SDN List), which included the Central Bank of Iran and additional Iranian financial institutions.³³

Notwithstanding this relief, primary U.S. sanctions impacting Iran generally remained in place. For example, Iran continued to be banned from directly accessing the U.S. financial system, including “U-Turn” transactions.³⁴ “U-Turns” are “transactions with non-Iranian foreign banks that were handling transactions on behalf of an Iranian bank.”³⁵ Before they were banned in 2008, U-Turn transactions were initiated by one non-U.S. financial institution and “passed through the U.S. financial system en route to another offshore, non-Iranian, non-U.S. financial institution.”³⁶

B. United States Sanctions Enforcement

Sanctions remain a critical tool in combatting national security threats and advancing foreign policy objectives. Several U.S. government agencies create, administer, and enforce sanctions. These agencies have separate and distinct roles, but together they establish U.S. policy. Two of the primary federal agencies tasked with administering and enforcing sanctions regimes are the Treasury Department and the State Department.

1. The United States Treasury Department

Congress established the Treasury Department in 1789³⁷ as the executive agency responsible for promoting economic prosperity and ensuring financial security.³⁸ The Treasury Department’s mission is to “maintain a strong economy and create economic and job opportunities by promoting the conditions that enable economic growth and stability at home and abroad, strengthen national security by combatting threats and protecting the integrity of the financial system, and manage the U.S. Government's finances and resources effectively."³⁹ The Treasury Department's wide range of responsibility reflects its central role in the U.S. economic and financial systems.

The Treasury Department also performs the critical national security role of implementing economic sanctions against foreign actors and entities.⁴⁰ Established in 2004, the Treasury Department's Office of Terrorism and Financial Intelligence is responsible for providing policy, strategy, and guidance concerning combatting terrorist financing and enforcing economic sanctions programs.⁴¹ The term "sanction" typically refers to comprehensively or selectively "using the blocking of assets and trade restrictions to accomplish foreign policy and national security goals."⁴²

The Office of Foreign Assets Control ("OFAC"), within the Office of Terrorism and Financial Intelligence, reports directly to the Undersecretary for Terrorism and Financial Crimes.⁴³ OFAC is responsible for administering and enforcing economic and trade sanctions based on U.S. foreign policy and national security goals.⁴⁴ OFAC implements sanctions based on "[p]residential national emergency powers, as well as authority granted by specific legislation, to impose controls on transactions and freeze assets under U.S. jurisdiction."⁴⁵

OFAC focuses its targeting on sanctions that are "expected to generate the most impact in achieving [U.S.] national security and foreign policy goals."⁴⁶ For example, on November 30, 2017, OFAC Director John Smith testified before the House Committee on Financial Services Subcommittee on Monetary Policy and Trade, "when deployed strategically and with precision, sanctions are a highly effective way of pressuring regimes and malign actors to change their behavior."⁴⁷ Director Smith further asserted that:

[B]y freezing the assets of illicit actors, cutting them off from the U.S. financial system, and restricting their ability to interface with the international financial system, the choice to them becomes clear: either modify your behavior or accept the isolation and negative economic effects of remaining on our financial blacklist.⁴⁸

OFAC also has the ability to define “prohibited transactions,” which are “trade or financial transactions and other dealings in which U.S. persons may not engage unless authorized by OFAC or expressly exempted by statute.”⁴⁹ Additionally, OFAC can “block” assets by freezing the exercise of powers and privileges normally associated with the targeted property unless the owner receives OFAC’s authorization.⁵⁰

a. OFAC can Authorize Otherwise Prohibited Transactions using General Licenses and Specific Licenses

In certain situations, OFAC can authorize transactions otherwise prohibited by issuing general or specific licenses.⁵¹ A general license “authorizes a particular type of transaction for a class of persons without the need to apply for a license.”⁵² A specific license is “a written document issued by OFAC to a particular person or entity, authorizing a particular transaction in response to a written license application.”⁵³ Parties engaging in transactions pursuant to licenses “must make sure that all conditions of the licenses are strictly observed.”⁵⁴ General licenses are publicly available, whereas specific licenses are not.⁵⁵

In addition to issuing licenses, OFAC can also issue “comfort letters” that provide assurances that certain transactions are authorized by the Treasury Department or that the proposed transactions are not prohibited or sanctionable.⁵⁶ Comfort letters are designed to alleviate concerns of receiving penalties from the U.S. government for conducting certain transactions, but they do not provide an

2. The United States Department of State

The State Department also plays a critical role in creating and enforcing U.S. sanctions. The State Department's Deputy Assistant Secretary for Counter Threat Finance and Sanctions within the Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs is responsible for coordinating sanctions regimes, developing strategies for implementing specific aspects of sanctions regimes, providing foreign policy guidance to other bureaus and agencies, and promoting financial transparency.⁵⁹ The Economic and Business Affairs Bureau includes two sanctions-related offices: the Office of Economic Sanctions Policy and Implementation and the Office of Threat Finance Countermeasures.⁶⁰

The Office of Economic Sanctions Policy and Implementation is "responsible for developing and implementing foreign policy-related sanctions adopted to counter threats to national security posed by particular activities and countries."⁶¹ It focuses on building international support for economic sanctions, providing foreign policy guidance on sanctions implementation to the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce, and working with Congress to draft legislation that advances U.S. foreign policy goals through sanctions.⁶² The goal is to enforce sanctions in a way that maximizes economic impact on the targeted entity while minimizing damage to U.S. economic interests.

The Office of Threat Finance Countermeasures is responsible for developing policies that seek to minimize the funding available to groups posing threats to U.S. interests and security.⁶³ The office develops policies that target groups that exploit illicit trade to finance operations against legitimate governments. coordinates with a wide range of domestic agencies and international partners in pursuit of U.S. foreign policy and security objectives.⁶⁴

IV. FINDINGS OF FACT

This report details four principal findings. First, after the JPOA and the JCPOA, Iran collected assets worth billions of U.S. dollars in overseas restricted accounts from oil sales. Following the JCPOA's Implementation Day, the Central Bank of Iran requested to convert its funds in Omani rials located at Bank Muscat to euros. Bank Muscat wanted to use the U.S. financial system to efficiently complete the bulk conversion as an intermediary conversion to U.S. dollars between Omani rials and euros. Second, even though other options existed, Treasury Department officials drafted and issued a specific license authorizing Bank Muscat to convert the Iranian assets using the U.S. financial system. The specific license is at odds with senior administration officials' testimony before Congress that Iran would not receive access to the U.S. financial system. Third, Treasury Department officials encouraged at least two U.S. financial institutions to facilitate the conversion authorized by the specific license. Both financial institutions refused. And fourth, Bank Muscat eventually converted the Iranian assets in small amounts without using the U.S. financial system.

A. Iran Collected Billions in Overseas Restricted Accounts

As part of the JPOA and JCPOA negotiated sanctions relief, the United States permitted Iran access to its oil revenue worth roughly $13.4 billion held in restricted accounts outside of Iran.⁶⁵ Iran ultimately distributed those funds to restricted accounts at several financial institutions outside both the United States and Iran—including Oman, Japan, South Korea, India, Switzerland, and the United Arab Emirates.⁶⁶ Bank Muscat, located in Muscat, Oman, received more than 65 percent of the total funds.⁶⁷

Between March 2015 and October 2015, Bank Muscat accepted approximately $8.8 billion in JPOA-related oil revenue in 17 installments.⁶⁸ Bank Muscat also facilitated the repatriation of the equivalent of approximately $2.4 billion in Emirati dirham banknotes by converting Omani rials to Emirati dirham banknotes.⁶⁹ Additionally, using the Bank Muscat assets, the Central Bank of

Oman provided approximately $600 million worth of Omani rial banknotes to Iran and “facilitated several trade-related transactions on behalf of Iran.”⁷⁰

As of Implementation Day, Iran’s balance at Bank Muscat was approximately $5.7 billion in Omani rials—the local currency.⁷¹

B. Bank Muscat Informed OFAC it Required the U.S. Financial System to Convert the Iranian Assets

Following Implementation Day, the CBI requested that Bank Muscat convert its assets at the bank from Omani rials to euros.⁷² This would not be a simple Omani rial to euro exchange. According to an Iranian official, to convert Omani rials to euros, the bank needed to use the U.S. dollar as a “bridge” or “leg.”⁷³ In other words, Bank Muscat would first have to sell Omani rials and buy U.S. dollars, and then sell those U.S. dollars to buy euros.⁷⁴ The purchase and sale of U.S. dollars in this case would therefore require a U.S. financial institution to complete the currency conversion.⁷⁵ The U.S. financial system remained off limits to Iran unless authorized by OFAC under existing law.⁷⁶ The relief specified in the JCPOA, however, did not include such access to the U.S. financial system.

Upon receiving the CBI’s request, Bank Muscat contacted U.S. government officials to seek permission to effectuate Iran’s requested conversion.⁷⁷ In approaching the U.S. government, Bank Muscat claimed it would be impossible to complete Iran’s requested conversion to euros without first changing the Omani rials to U.S. dollars.⁷⁸ According to a contemporaneous internal Treasury Department analysis, the foreign transaction could also be “cheaper and more efficient when financial institutions utilize the [U.S. dollar] to convert two non-[U.S. dollar] currencies.”⁷⁹ A Bank Muscat executive also expressed frustration that the primary sanctions banning the use of the U.S. financial institution created a “challenge to convert one currency to another.”⁸⁰

In this case, the primary hurdle was that the Omani rial is “pegged” to the U.S. dollar.⁸¹ In 1986, Oman created a fixed exchange rate and established a .38 Omani rial peg to the U.S. dollar.⁸² A draft Treasury Department background memorandum, as shown below, described the process for a foreign financial institution to exchange Omani rials to euros with a middle exchange using the U.S. dollar:

1. A client of the Omani financial institution requests an exchange of OMR to EUR and the Omani financial institution debits the client's OMR account;
2. The Omani financial institution sells the OMR and buys USD in the interbank market, and the USD are deposited into the Omani financial institution's USD account (generally held on the books of a U.S. financial institution);
3. In a separate transaction, the Omani financial institution sells USD and buys EUR in the interbank market;
4. The Omani financial institution then completes the transaction requested by its client by crediting the customer's account with EUR.

In this process, the purchase and/or sale of USD generally involves a U.S. financial institution, though the U.S. financial institution would have no actual knowledge or reason to know the identity of the Omani financial institution's client (including whether the client was subject to OFAC sanctions). Given the connection between the two conversions—which occur as a direct result of the sanctioned client's request—it would be consistent with OFAC's past practice to determine that the USD transactions involve the property or interests in property of, or represent a prohibited service provided from the United States to, the sanctioned client.

Even before Implementation Day, Bank Muscat expressed difficulty in planning for the currency conversion to OFAC officials. For example, according to one Bank Muscat executive, “As early as last Thursday 14th Jan[uary] bank representatives communicated with OFAC officials” about currency conversion troubles.⁸⁴ The bank's executive made “several attempts to get a response from OFAC” but was unable to “reach any one in their office.”⁸⁵ While it was initially perceived as a “very straight forward issue” by a lead Iranian negotiator for financial issues, the billions held by Bank Muscat eventually required actions by both the Treasury Department and State Department over the next several months.⁸⁶

C. Treasury Department Officials Assured Congress that Iran would not Receive Access to the U.S. Financial System

In the year leading up to Implementation Day, congressional committees held hearings to discuss the scope and nature of the financial relief that the terms of the JCPOA would provide to Iran. On at least four occasions, administration officials publicly stated that Iranian access to the U.S. financial system was not part of the relief specified in the JCPOA.

First, on July 23, 2015, U.S. Treasury Secretary Jack Lew testified before the U.S. Senate Committee on Foreign Relations concerning the nature of the potential sanctions relief contained in the JCPOA. Secretary Lew stated that the JCPOA would “suspend nuclear-related secondary sanctions,” but that “a number of key sanctions will remain in place.”⁸⁷ Specifically, Secretary Lew explained that “Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. banks.”⁸⁸ He further testified that “Iran, in other words, will continue to be denied access to the world’s largest financial and commercial market.”⁸⁹

Second, on August 5, 2015, Adam Szubin, the Acting Under Secretary of the Treasury for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence, testified before the U.S. Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs that “Iran will be denied access to the world’s most important market and unable to deal in the world’s most important currency,” referring to the U.S. financial system and the U.S. dollar.⁹⁰ He also stated that “Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. banks.”⁹¹

Third, in testimony before the U.S. Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs on September 17, 2015, Mr. Szubin again assured lawmakers that “no Iranian banks can access the U.S. financial system, not to open an account, not to purchase a security, and not even to execute a dollarized transaction where a split-second’s worth of business is done in a New York clearing bank.”⁹²

Fourth, on September 16, 2015, Mr. Szubin gave a public address to the Washington Institute for Near East Policy where he discussed the sanctions that would remain after Implementation Day.⁹³ There, Mr. Szubin stated:

Iran will not be able to open bank accounts with U.S. banks, nor will Iran be able to access the U.S. banking sector, even for that momentary transaction to, what we call, dollarize a foreign payment. ... That is not in the cards. That is not part of the relief offered under the JCPOA.⁹⁴

Both Secretary Lew and Mr. Szubin testified that Iran would not have access to the U.S. financial system. This public testimony mirrored what OFAC and State Department officials told foreign financial institutions and other investors around the world, as detailed in the following section.

D. OFAC Repeatedly Warned Other Foreign Financial Institutions that the U.S. Financial System Remained Off Limits to Iran at “Roadshows”

Soon after the P5+1 reached an understanding on the JCPOA’s terms on July 14, 2015, Treasury and State Department officials began meeting with foreign financial institutions and investors and other business development organizations concerning the details of the sanctions relief in the JCPOA.⁹⁵ These “roadshows,” as they became commonly known, provided OFAC officials opportunities to provide information to foreign financial institutions concerning the details of the sanctions relief under the JCPOA.⁹⁶ OFAC officials repeatedly advised that the U.S. financial system remained off limits for foreign financial institutions conducting business on behalf of Iran.⁹⁷ However, as explained below, those same officials also disclaimed jurisdiction over bulk purchases of U.S. dollars held abroad and downplayed the likelihood of any future penalties or fines.

Both Treasury and State Department officials viewed these roadshows as an effective way to convey the JCPOA's relief and invested in sending officials around the world.⁹⁸ From August 6, 2015, to July 12, 2016, Treasury and State Department officials organized and participated in over 200 roadshows in various cities across the world including but not limited to Seoul, Geneva, London, Tokyo, Berlin, Dubai, Muscat, Rome, Paris, Helsinki, Stockholm, Mumbai, New Delhi, and Brussels.⁹⁹

The intended audience for these meetings was typically foreign financial institutions. And one of the most asked questions at these meetings concerned details about access to the U.S. dollar. Treasury Department meeting notes document that foreign financial institutions frequently asked about dollar clearing through the U.S. financial system.¹⁰⁰ Dollar clearing is the "process of transmitting, reconciling, and in some cases, confirming transactions" by using the U.S. dollar.¹⁰¹ To address the dollar clearing issue, an OFAC official "laid down two bright line rules, explaining that for non-US persons the only restrictions are: (1) don't deal with US person[s] or [the US] financial system, [and] (2) don't do business with someone on the SDN list."¹⁰²

U.S. government officials repeated this particular advice—to not use the U.S. financial system for transactions involving Iran—multiple times to bankers and business development leaders in countries including Switzerland, England, and Germany.¹⁰³ For example, meeting notes taken during a March 2016 roadshow in Switzerland state that John Smith, then the Treasury Department's OFAC Director, reiterated the "Rules of the Road for non-U.S. entities:"

• Rules of the Road for non-U.S. entities. Acting OFAC Director Smith provided two general rules of the road with respect to the remaining U.S. sanctions on Iran: (1) don't involve the U.S. financial system or U.S. persons, and (2) don't do business with SDNs.

However, at the same time, the Treasury Department was quick to note that Iranian access to the U.S. dollar was not completely prohibited. For example, according to a Treasury Department summary of the meeting, at one roadshow meeting in Hong Kong, “bankers also asked about the ability to provide bulk U.S. dollar bank notes to Iran and how that would be viewed by OFAC.”¹⁰⁵ OFAC officials “indicated that the sale of U.S. dollar bank notes is authorized, but cautioned that offering U.S. dollar bank notes to Iran may involve an indirect service to an Iranian person which could violate the Iran Transactions and Sanctions Regulations.”¹⁰⁶

In addition to disclaiming jurisdiction over U.S. dollars held abroad by non-U.S. persons, OFAC officials also downplayed the likelihood of any future penalties or fines. OFAC roadshow notes document how U.S. government officials signaled to foreign entities that OFAC would rarely bring legal action or level fines for arranging financial transactions with Iranian individuals or entities. For example, a State Department email explained “the most important” roadshow was in London with “over 20 representatives from at least 10 major financial institutions” and U.K. regulators. At that roadshow, according to meeting notes, Mr. Smith told the audience:

[A] really good way of reassuring people about OFAC enforcement, first by clarifying the egregious nature of the behavior that led to the big fines on European banks and, more importantly, by informing them that 95% of the time OFAC sees an apparent violation it results in a simple warning letter or no enforcement action.¹⁰⁷

In an interview with the Subcommittee, Mr. Smith further explained that the Treasury Department only has the resources to focus on egregious violations.¹⁰⁸

Despite “encouraging words” from OFAC and the State Department, many international banks feared transacting with Iran due to “remaining uncertainties” and “significant operating risks,” according to a public report.¹⁰⁹ In fact, prior to an “intense” Germany roadshow, at least some attendees had the perception that “State and Treasury were delivering different messages on sanctions relief.”¹¹⁰ U.K. regulators also later expressed that banks were frustrated about “hearing different things from different parties” and, that at least some banks felt “political pressure” to “get back in” business with Iran.¹¹¹

OFAC even conducted proactive outreach to foreign financial institutions that never sought compliance advice from the Treasury Department. This outreach provided information on the JCPOA-related sanctions relief and compliance with remaining sanctions. In one instance, a compliance officer for a foreign financial institution called and asked an OFAC official why he received an email regarding Iran when the financial institution “had ‘no business with Iran.’”¹¹² The OFAC official explained that OFAC proactively contacted the financial institution because while “banks set their own policies based on their individual risk appetite, [OFAC] wanted to make sure that [the] head office understood the Iran sanctions relief, and [that OFAC was] available to answer any questions they might have.”¹¹³ The OFAC official continued:

I asked him to make sure that head office understands that with the lifting of the Iran secondary sanctions, non-U.S. persons are permitted to do business with Iran keeping in mind that sanctions remain on transacting with SDNs, and that Head Office’s transactions with Iran should not be routed through the U.S.¹¹⁴

After the roadshows, OFAC fielded and responded to follow-up inquiries regarding dollar clearing. For example, one OFAC compliance official received a follow-up question after an OFAC roadshow asking specifically about dollar clearing using the U.S. financial system.¹¹⁵ The OFAC compliance official wrote in an email:

Please note, however, that the U.S. primary embargo remains in place, and it remains prohibited for non-U.S. persons to send Iran-related transactions to or through the United States financial system that are prohibited pursuant to the Iranian Transactions Sanctions Regulations, or to involve a U.S. person in the transaction, unless the transaction is exempt from regulation or authorized by OFAC.¹¹⁶

The OFAC compliance official continued, “Transactions in [euros], [British Pounds], and other currencies that do not clear through the U.S. financial system are generally not problematic unless they involve the foreign branch of a U.S. financial institution (e.g. Citibank London, JPM Chase Paris, etc.),”¹¹⁷ Again, even after roadshows, OFAC guidance indicated that the U.S. financial system remained off limits.

While roadshows provided OFAC officials opportunities to alleviate concern about financial penalties or fines, those same officials also repeatedly reiterated that the U.S. financial system remained off limits—even for foreign financial institutions conducting business on behalf of Iran.¹¹⁸ This public guidance, however, is in contrast to the actions taken behind the scenes by Treasury and State Department officials to grant Bank Muscat access to the U.S. financial system on behalf of Iran.

E. U.S. and Iranian Officials Discussed the Iranian Assets at Bank Muscat

The $5.7 billion worth of Iranian assets held at Bank Muscat remained effectively trapped after Implementation Day. The Iranian government viewed the Bank Muscat conversion issue as a major obstacle and as a failure by the United States to adhere to the terms of the JCPOA.¹¹⁹ According to one high level Iranian negotiator, Iran “expected and understood” that the relief provided by the JCPOA would secure Iran’s “right of conversion without any qualifications and conditions.”¹²⁰ The failed currency conversion was a serious stumbling block just days after the JCPOA’s Implementation Day.

On January 24, 2016, a lead Iranian negotiator wrote to several State Department and OFAC officials expressing the need to complete the Bank Muscat conversion.¹²¹ He stated, “Please note that our inability to convert and use our bank deposits is causing challenges, particularly after the [Implementation Day] when we have expected free access and use of our funds abroad.”¹²² The Iranian negotiator continued, “Every body [sic] here is surprised and confused about the underlying reasons so much that my boss intended to raise the issue with Dr. Zarif.”¹²³ Dr. Zarif is the Iranian Minister of Foreign Affairs.¹²⁴ He ended his email by offering to elevate the situation: “If you think it helps for [Dr.] Zarif to talk to Secretary Kerry, please advise.”¹²⁵ OFAC OFFICIAL 1 replied that OFAC was “aware of the urgency of the situation and are discussing it.”¹²⁶

In a separate internal Treasury Department email chain discussing possible solutions to this issue, OFAC OFFICIAL 2 requested research to help describe “the JCPOA relief we’ve committed to.”¹²⁷ OFAC OFFICIAL 1 provided OFAC OFFICIAL 2 and other Treasury Department officials with excerpts of “language from the JCPOA with respect to our commitments” that she thought would be applicable to the Bank Muscat conversion issue.¹²⁸ She highlighted the JCPOA’s preamble: “The E3/EU+3 will refrain from imposing discriminatory regulatory and procedural requirements in lieu of the sanctions and restrictive measures covered by this JCPOA.”¹²⁹ OFAC OFFICIAL 1 also cited other sections of the JCPOA’s main text and Annex II regarding financial and banking measure relief.¹³⁰ She also included the preamble’s section viii that states the parties “refrain from any action inconsistent with the letter, spirit and intent of this JCPOA that would undermine its successful implementation.”¹³¹ Finally, OFAC OFFICIAL 1 cited the JCPOA’s Annex II provisions concerning “Financial and Banking Measures:”

7.2. Financial and banking measures [fn] (See Sections 4.1.1 to 4.1.7)
Engage in activities, including financial and banking transactions, with the Government of Iran, the Central Bank of Iran, Iranian financial institutions and other Iranian persons specified in Attachment 3 to this Annex, including the provision of loans, transfers, accounts (including the opening and maintenance of correspondent and payable through accounts at non-U.S. financial institutions), investments, securities, guarantees, foreign exchange (including Rial related transactions), letters of credit and commodity futures or options, the provision of specialised financial messaging services and facilitation of direct or indirect access thereto, the purchase or acquisition by the Government of Iran of U.S. bank notes, and the purchase, subscription to, or facilitation of the issuance of Iranian sovereign debt. After receiving OFAC OFFICIAL 1’s email detailing the relevant JCPOA language, OFAC OFFICIAL 2, apparently not fully comprehending the nature and scope of the JCPOA’s financial relief, replied:

Two days later, with the Bank Muscat issue still unresolved, a State Department official received a proposal to host an Omani delegation in Washington, D.C., who “very urgently want to speak to officials on the U.S. side about how to release they [sic] money they hold to the Iranians.”¹³⁴ The State Department official ended the email by stating he expected “the delegation to be reasonably high-level.”¹³⁵ OFAC OFFICIAL 1 summarized the current state of the currency conversion in an email excerpted below:

136

In early February 2016, a lead Iranian negotiator again wrote OFAC OFFICIAL 1 stating that “every body [sic] concerned at the CBI [Central Bank of Iran] is getting already frustrated about the time it has taken to convert one currency to another currency other than the US$.”¹³⁷ The Iranian negotiator reiterated that two weeks had elapsed since he first raised the issue with OFAC.¹³⁸ State and Treasury Department officials, however, assured Bank Muscat and the Iranian government that the U.S. government was working on finding a solution to the currency conversion problem.¹³⁹

F. Treasury Department Officials Drafted a Specific License Authorizing the Use of the U.S. Financial System

As the Iranian assets remained at Bank Muscat, State Department, Treasury Department, and other U.S. government officials devised a solution that would allow the currency conversion using the U.S. financial system. OFAC officials began drafting a specific license authorizing the conversion of the funds using the U.S. financial system.¹⁴⁰

As OFAC drafted the specific license, there was an internal discussion at OFAC concerning how to describe the assets held by Bank Muscat. For example, one OFAC official inquired if the funds that “hit the U.S. institutions” were to be classified as Bank Muscat’s funds “rather than any Iranian person’s funds.”¹⁴¹ However, Treasury and State Department officials in several emails referenced the funds as “Iranian assets.”¹⁴² OFAC OFFICIAL 1, for example, wrote that she suspected the “GOI [government of Iran] will be moving all their money out of BM [Bank Muscat] pretty quickly anyway.”¹⁴³

While OFAC worked to complete the specific license, Iran continued to pressure the United States concerning its funds at Bank Muscat. For example, Foreign Minister Zarif sent a letter to Secretary Kerry expressing dissatisfaction with the delays with Bank Muscat.¹⁴⁴ Secretary Kerry and Foreign Minister Zarif were even scheduled to meet to address the Bank Muscat issue, among other topics.¹⁴⁵ To prepare Secretary Kerry, on February 10, 2016, OFAC OFFICIAL 1 drafted the below talking points, in pertinent part:

team from Oman is visiting you next week to finalize resolution of the long outstanding ‘conversion’ issue.”).

¹⁴⁰ As background, the Treasury Department can issue both specific and general licenses. A general license typically “authorizes a particular type of transaction for a class of persons without the need to apply for a license.” A specific license, on the other hand, is “a written document issued by OFAC to a particular person or entity, authorizing a particular transaction in response to a written license application.” Resource Center: Basic Information on OFAC and Sanctions, U.S. Dep’t of Treasury (Oct. 31, 2017), https://www.treasury.gov/resource-center/faqs/Sanctions/Pages/faq_general.aspx#basic

• Bank Muscat Issue

OFAC is in the final phases of discussions with Bank Muscat to issue a license that will allow Bank Muscat to proceed with the transactions requested by the Central Bank of Iran. OFAC has been on the phone with Bank Muscat yesterday and today and is waiting to hear back from Bank Muscat on a final request from Bank Muscat before issuing the license. In addition, OFAC's Acting Director is meeting next Tuesday with the Executive President of the Central Bank of Oman and the Chief Executive of Bank Muscat.

Susan Rice, National Security Adviser, then forwarded the information directly to Secretary Kerry.¹⁴⁷

On February 23, 2016, the Central Bank of Iran requested Bank Muscat move "significant" amounts of money in two separate payment requests to two different foreign financial institutions.¹⁴⁸ Bank Muscat would not comply with the Central Bank of Iran's request until it had the specific license.¹⁴⁹ That same day, the Senior State Department Official stressed that Treasury Department officials should "not hold back" the license as leverage on other issues as there would be other opportunities in the future.¹⁵⁰

In addition to the specific license, both State and Treasury Department officials had ongoing discussions about potentially issuing a general license. Discussions contemplated authorizing a general license for the "conversion of two non-USD currencies through the limited use of the USD as an intermediate currency."¹⁵¹ Indeed, an Iranian official requested a general license to avoid having to go through this "painstaking process every time [Iran] need[s] to convert our assets into a currency other than U.S. dollar."¹⁵²

OFAC officials also worked on crafting a general license during the same time as the specific license. Mr. Smith indicated in an email to the State Department that a general license would prevent giving one bank and country an unfair advantage.¹⁵³ Mr. Smith even contemplated withholding the specific license until OFAC issued the general license, but leaned towards "issuing the specific license ... and resolving that urgent issue."¹⁵⁴ In March 2016, after certain U.S.

correspondent banks were reluctant to complete the currency conversion, as discussed in more detail later. OFAC OFFICIAL 2 expressed concerns about the potential effectiveness of a general license.¹⁵⁵ OFAC OFFICIAL 1 stated that OFAC was trying to determine whether “the [General License] in its current iteration [was] viable in that we want to make sure that the [General License] is effective and used.”¹⁵⁶ One month later, in April 2016, OFAC indicated it was not issuing a general license.¹⁵⁷

G. The Treasury Department Issued a Specific License to Convert “Iranian Assets” through the “U.S. Financial System”

After Bank Muscat and an Iranian official expressed concern that Bank Muscat could not convert the Iranian assets without using the U.S. financial system, Treasury Department officials took measures to authorize such a conversion. Despite recognizing that “such transactions are prohibited by U.S. sanctions that are still in place, and which [the U.S. government was] clear [it] would not be removing as part of the JCPOA,” on February 24, 2016, the Treasury Department, in coordination with the State Department and the National Security Council (“NSC”), issued specific license No. IA-2016-325832-1 to Bank Muscat.¹⁵⁸

On February 23, 2016, OFAC and State Department officials discussed over email the specific license from the Treasury Department to Bank Muscat to authorize the transaction using the U.S. financial system. One Senior State Department Official wrote, “I’d heard yesterday that license approval of the FOREX [or foreign exchange] arrangement for Bank Muscat is imminent. [An Iranian official] reports Bank Muscat continues to block the conversion because it says that the arrangement has not been approved.”¹⁵⁹ Mr. Smith responded that after discussions with the National Security Council, the specific license would be issued the next day.¹⁶⁰

The specific license explicitly permitted not only Bank Muscat, but its foreign exchange counterparties and “any United States depository institution or United States registered broker or dealer in securities involved as a correspondent bank” to engage in the conversion of the funds at issue.¹⁶¹ Under “Section 1—Authorization,” the specific license permitted those entities:

[T]o engage in any transactions necessary to allow the conversion of funds held at Bank Muscat in a non-U.S. dollar (USD) currency into a different non-USD currency where such foreign exchange conversion provides an indirect benefit to persons subject to the jurisdiction of the Government of Iran, including persons whose property and interests in property are blocked solely pursuant to Executive Order 13599...¹⁶²

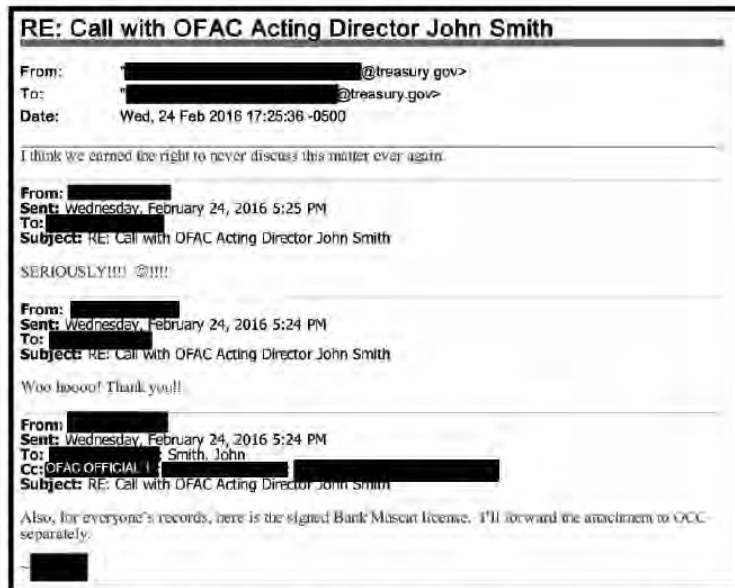

The specific license detailed precisely how the currency conversion would occur:

- (1) Bank Muscat sells a non-USD currency and buys USD from a non-U.S. foreign exchange counterparty in the interbank market in its own name;
- (2) the non-U.S. foreign exchange counterparty delivers the USD to a Bank Muscat account maintained at a United States depository institution or United States registered broker or dealer in securities;
- (3) Bank Muscat sells the USD and buys a different non-USD currency from a non-U.S. foreign exchange counterparty in the interbank market in its own name; and
- (4) that non-U.S. foreign exchange counterparty delivers the different non-USD funds into a foreign currency account Bank Muscat maintains on the books of a non-U.S., non-Iranian financial institution located in a jurisdiction in which the funds can be used in the local payment system, as described in the Application.¹⁶³

The specific license was intended to alleviate the significant pressure Iranian officials raised with both State and Treasury Department officials. And at least two Treasury Department OFAC compliance officers expressed relief once it was issued, stating:

Immediately after it was finalized, the Treasury Department delivered the specific license to Bank Muscat and communicated the decision to the other relevant domestic and foreign parties.¹⁶⁵ The next day, February 25, 2016, a Treasury Department official emailed the license to a Bank Muscat executive, indicating that the bank should “provide a copy of the license to the U.S. correspondents” that Bank Muscat would involve in the proposed transaction.¹⁶⁶ The official continued:

OFAC believes that – by disclosing the [Central Bank of Iran’s] indirect¹⁶⁷ interest in the licensed transactions to Bank Muscat’s own U.S. correspondents, providing them a copy of the license, and fulfilling the remaining conditions of the license – Bank Muscat provides a sufficient degree of transparency to allow these U.S. financial institutions to comply with the sanctions laws and regulations administered by OFAC.¹⁶⁸

That same day, a Senior State Department Official wrote a two-sentence email to his Iranian counterpart, stating, "OFAC informed Bank Muscat and the Central Bank of Oman today that they have a license to convert Iranian assets in its accounts to Euros through the US financial system. Hope this helps."¹⁶⁹ And a chart the Treasury Department produced to the Subcommittee, shown below, details a proposed funds flow and the use of U.S. financial system.

1. A Senior State Department Official Recognized the Specific License Authorized a Transaction Otherwise “Prohibited by U.S. Sanctions”

Notwithstanding the specific license, Iran’s financial negotiator continued to express concerns about Iran’s ability to convert its funds held outside Iran. An Iranian official requested OFAC issue a general license rather than a specific license in the future so that it “relives [sic] us from going through this painstaking process every time we need to convert” assets into a different currency.¹⁷⁰ In effect, a general license would be a blanket authorization for foreign financial institutions to conduct similar currency conversions that Bank Muscat was authorized to do.¹⁷¹ An Iranian official expressed frustration with his government’s inability to convert the funds, even after the specific license was issued:

I do understand that we both will face a number of challenges immediately after the implementation. However, the nature and extent of these challenges are going beyond any reasonable expectation as far as we are concerned and I do request you to address all these issues in [a] manner which resolves them fundamentally.¹⁷²

A Senior State Department Official responded to the Iranian official two days later on February 28, 2016, signifying how extraordinary the specific license was in light of the negotiated JCPOA relief. That Senior State Department Official explained to his Iranian counterpart that he and his colleagues were “pleased to be helpful where we can in facilitating Iran’s reconnection to the international financial system,” but that the U.S. government was not responsible for decisions “foreign financial institutions take in processing Iranian transactions.”¹⁷³ That Senior State Department Official then explained that such “transactions are prohibited by U.S. sanctions that are still in place, and which we were clear we would not be removing as part of the JCPOA. Nevertheless, as a gesture of support for Iran’s getting access, we helped on this as we will on other cases.”¹⁷⁴

The Iranian official, however, continued to press U.S. government officials that even with the specific license, Iran was having difficulty converting its funds. For example, he raised the broader issue of financial liquidity concerns and Iran’s general access to its funds held abroad. He wrote to the Senior State Department Official that he was not “... in a position, and don’t intend, to confirm or reject such claims but one thing is clear: OFAC is almost all the time invoked as the reason for other countries’ unwillingness to let us have unhindered access to our funds abroad.”¹⁷⁵ Nearly a month later, the Senior State Department Official again reiterated in an email to his Iranian counterpart that the Bank Muscat specific license was not required by the JCPOA:

I am aware that the assets in Oman have unfortunately not yet been converted as CBI is seeking, but I hasten to assure you that it is not because of any fault of the U.S. government in not lifting sanctions. In fact, in addition to lifting every sanction we promised to do on Implementation Day, we have exceeded our JCPOA commitments by OFAC's issuing a license to enable Bank Muscat to work with any U.S. financial institution to facilitate the conversion of assets in the banks from rials to other non-dollar currencies. You may be aware that step has aroused enormous controversy in the U.S. political arena as a "concession" to Iran that is undeserved in the aftermath of the missile launches so publicly threatening to Israel, and continued arms shipments to Houthis in spite of UN Security Council resolutions. Nevertheless, as President Obama, Secretary Kerry and Secretary Lew have all mentioned publicly in the past week, the Obama administration is committed to working to enable Iran's realizing all of the benefits it should receive in exchange for its taking the historic measures it has in its nuclear program. That is a message that we have also been repeating in every major world financial capital with almost weekly trips of senior State and Treasury Department officials, many of which have recently been reported prominently in the press.

In an interview with the Subcommittee, the Senior State Department Official noted his exchange was part of pressing the Iranians on multiple fronts.¹⁷⁷ He clarified that this exchange was for effect as a negotiator to ensure Iran appreciated the efforts being made to meet the expectations of the JCPOA.¹⁷⁸ He used the phrase "exceeded our JCPOA commitments" because there was nothing in the JCPOA that required the issuance of the specific license.¹⁷⁹ He also explained that this was "posturing" in the middle of a negotiation.¹⁸⁰ It was important, according to the Senior State Department Official, that the Iranians felt like they were getting the benefits under the terms of the deal and getting access to the restricted funds was important to the JCPOA. His email also acknowledged an awareness of non-nuclear related issues such as arms shipments to Houthis and missile launches.¹⁸¹

2. The Specific License Permitted Converting Future or "Fresh" Funds Using the U.S. Financial System

The specific license authorized not only the transactions necessary for the conversion of Iranian assets already deposited at Bank Muscat, but also for unlimited future Iranian deposits at Bank Muscat until the license expired. In effect, the specific license granted the Iranians an endless currency conversion pipeline using the U.S. financial system through Bank Muscat until the license expired. The Treasury Department authorized future conversions due to Bank Muscat's concerns. In an email from an OFAC Sanctions Compliance and Evaluation employee to Mr. Smith and other senior Treasury Department officials. Bank Muscat asked OFAC about possible future deposits or conversions:

Bank Muscat requested that its specific license not only authorize conversion of funds it holds for Iran currently at Bank Muscat, but also the conversion of funds related to trade transactions with Iran going forward. ... Bank Muscat is concerned that Iran will move its approximately $5.7 billion worth of JPOA funds out of Bank Muscat and it will adversely affect the bank's balances if it cannot accept fresh funds from Iran to finance prospective trade.¹⁸²

To resolve this "fresh funds" issue, Mr. Smith, in a meeting with an Omani official, "noted that the way [OFAC] resolved the issue of fresh funds was to allow for their transfer under this license and explained that the license allows for both existing and fresh funds to flow through Bank Muscat."¹⁸³ Bank Muscat viewed the addition of the provision allowing the conversion of "fresh funds" as a momentous step. As one Bank Muscat executive wrote, "When [Bank Muscat's] Legal team reviewed the specific license, they commented that this was a 'gigantic' breakthrough which has assured Iran of almost full global financial inclusion."¹⁸⁴

Mr. Smith also noted that he understood "the Omanis were disappointed after their meeting at OFAC where they asked whether we could allow for Oman to be the only jurisdiction to control the flow of Iranian funds into the international financial system."¹⁸⁵ Mr. Smith told the Omani Deputy Chief of Mission that while Bank Muscat was the only bank at that time allowed to conduct the currency conversion in this matter, there were efforts for a broader fix to resolve the currency conversion issue to "allow for banks worldwide to engage in similar transactions."¹⁸⁶

3. Iranian Concern Continued Even After OFAC Issued the Specific License

By cable, Secretary Kerry asked the U.S. Embassy in Oman to deliver a message to the Omani Foreign Minister. The Secretary's message stated:

[T]he obstacle is our primary U.S. embargo, which continues to prohibit U.S. financial institutions from processing transactions involving Iran, necessitating a license from the Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC). I am pleased to report, though, that OFAC has now issued a specific license to Bank Muscat, which we believe will remove the obstacles that prevented these foreign exchange transactions from occurring.¹⁸⁷

While the specific license authorized the transaction, it would not “become active until it is shared with and accepted for use by” Bank Muscat’s correspondent bank.¹⁸⁸ And, as a Iranian negotiator recognized in an email to OFAC OFFICIAL 1, finding a willing U.S. financial institution remained problematic: “[The State Department] advised us on 26th Feb 2016 that ‘... OFAC informed Bank Muscat and the Central Bank of Oman today that they have a license to convert Iranian assets in its accounts to Euros through the US financial system. Hope this helps.’ Unfortunately it HAS NOT HELPED.”¹⁸⁹

OFAC OFFICIAL 1 replied that even though OFAC issued the specific license, it was OFAC’s understanding that Bank Muscat’s U.S. correspondent bank “needs time to do due diligence and get the requisite approvals from their management.” OFAC OFFICIAL 1 continued, “There is no further role for OFAC in the process at this point as this is an internal compliance matter on the part of the financial institutions involved.”¹⁹⁰ Bank Muscat needed at least one U.S. financial institution to complete the currency conversion or the specific license would have little effect.

H. Treasury Department Officials Encouraged Two U.S. Financial Institutions to Complete the Currency Conversion; the U.S. Financial Institutions Declined

In the weeks after the Treasury Department issued the specific license, OFAC officials encouraged at least two U.S. financial institutions to facilitate the conversion currency for Bank Muscat. Bank Muscat attempted to complete the currency conversion with two financial institutions that it maintained a correspondent banking¹⁹¹ relationship with: U.S. BANK 1 and U.S. BANK 2.¹⁹² Notwithstanding the Treasury Department’s involvement, both U.S. financial institutions declined to complete the currency conversion for reasons discussed below.

There was significant pressure on both the State and Treasury Department officials to ensure Bank Muscat converted the Iranian assets as the Central Bank of ¹⁹¹ As background, correspondent banking is the provision of banking services by one bank to another bank. It enables banks to conduct business and provide services for their customers in jurisdictions where the banks have no physical presence. See Staff of S. Iran requested. High level Iranian officials made clear to U.S. officials that converting the Iranian assets worth billions of dollars was absolutely vital.¹⁹³ The Treasury Department even classified the conversion as a “Priority No. 1” issue that could have “broad impact across multiple activities and may delay the implementation of the JCPOA.”¹⁹⁴ In short, locating a willing U.S. financial institution to facilitate the dollar conversion was imperative.

Thus, Treasury Department officials engaged with two U.S. financial institutions to encourage them to facilitate the currency conversion. A Senior State Department Official was clear in an email to several OFAC officials that “... you all have been in touch with some banks to encourage their participation with Bank Muscat on that particular case.”¹⁹⁵ Additionally, just days after the specific license was issued, a Bank Muscat executive wrote in an email asking if OFAC would “reach out” to both U.S. financial institutions.¹⁹⁶ Over the next several weeks, OFAC then proceeded to arrange nearly a dozen phone calls with sanctions experts and business line executives at the two U.S. financial institutions.¹⁹⁷

OFAC officials initiated contact with a representative of U.S. BANK 1; however, that bank quickly determined that it would not facilitate the currency conversion because of legal risks associated with Iranian assets.¹⁹⁸ U.S. BANK 1, according to a Bank Muscat email, cited a previous court case in which assets worth $1.75 billion were blocked or seized in a U.S. bank account in New York.¹⁹⁹ U.S. BANK 1 was concerned a lien related to a prior legal judgment would “attach” the funds once they arrived in the United States and the bank could be forced to hold those funds to satisfy the prior judgment. An OFAC email later confirmed that U.S. BANK 1 did not want to conduct the conversion because of “attachment issues”²⁰⁰—referring to the legal process of securing assets to satisfy an outstanding judgment.

A March 15, 2016, email between two U.S. BANK 1 employees further elaborated on both the legal risk and nature of OFAC’s outreach. U.S. BANK 1’s Director for Global Sanctions wrote to the Regional Head of Sanctions:

OFAC called us up last week and asked us to help Bank Muscat move up to several billion dollars in Iranian money through the U.S. financial system. After we explained the attachment risk, they reconsidered but

I mention this to show that U.S. policy is not necessarily that nothing be done vis-à-vis Iran.²⁰¹

That U.S. BANK 1 executive later told the Subcommittee that OFAC reached out to them and asked if they would process the transaction.²⁰² While the U.S. BANK 1 executive did not think that OFAC's contact was inappropriate, he elaborated that, to his knowledge, this was something that had never been done before.²⁰³ U.S. BANK 1, according to its executive, ultimately turned down OFAC because of reputational risk associated with conducting business with Iran and legal risk of litigants suing Iran for terrorism related incidents.²⁰⁴

After U.S. BANK 1 declined, the pressure increased to find a willing U.S. correspondent bank to facilitate the conversion. One State Department official wrote in an email asking if there was "anything new on Bank Muscat and their correspondent? Our friends are complaining."²⁰⁵ Finding another willing U.S. financial institution was complicated. As one OFAC official explained, OFAC could play no further role in the process as it was now an "internal compliance matter on the part of the financial institutions involved."²⁰⁶ Notwithstanding this position, a State Department official proposed having Secretary Kerry or Secretary Lew contact the remaining U.S. correspondent bank.²⁰⁷ On April 9, 2016, in an email shown below, a State Department Official wrote to two State Department officials suggesting that it would be "a good idea" to have Secretary Lew "engage" U.S. BANK 2.²⁰⁸ He also stated that if the Treasury Department did not comply with the request, he would suggest Secretary Kerry call.²⁰⁹

I agree it would be a good idea to have Lew engage [redacted]. If they refuse, we can suggest Kerry will call, which will drive them nuts. I'll ping Treasury and suggest as a first step.

The Senior State Department Official indicated later in the same email that Secretary Kerry was "more than eager to engage."²¹⁰ In an interview with the Subcommittee, the Senior State Department Official did not know if either Secretary Kerry or Secretary Lew called or engaged the U.S. financial institution directly. The Senior State Department Official did state that he believed "drive

OFAC OFFICIAL 1 then indicated that U.S. BANK 2 was the other U.S. correspondent bank available to facilitate the conversion.²¹² From February to April 2016, U.S. BANK 2’s compliance, business, and legal executives considered whether to convert the funds. Even though OFAC told U.S. BANK 2 executives it was “supportive of the activity/transactions,” U.S. BANK 2 eventually declined to conduct the currency conversion due to the compliance risk posed by the difficulty of consistently executing the proposed complex transactions.²¹³ U.S. BANK 2 was also cognizant of concerns with the optics of dealing with Iranian assets.²¹⁴

On February 25, 2016, an OFAC official contacted U.S. BANK 2’s Compliance Executive to let them know that “they are supportive of the activity/transactions under the license and that they will put Bank Muscat in touch with me to talk about the potential transactions.”²¹⁵ The Compliance Executive stated they told OFAC that U.S. BANK 2 “would be taking similar steps to what we did in the past” to review the license and the proposed transaction’s details.²¹⁶ In the course of a broader discussion about the proposed business, the Compliance Executive also noted that U.S. BANK 2 “may once again be the subject of press articles even though the activity is licensed for dealing with Iran, although here indirectly.”²¹⁷

The next day, on February 26, 2016, a Bank Muscat executive emailed the Compliance Executive to “discuss the specific license.”²¹⁸ Later, on March 1, 2016, Bank Muscat sent U.S. BANK 2 a detailed description of precisely how the proposed currency conversion would take place.²¹⁹ On March 18, 2016, U.S. BANK 2’s Compliance Executive wrote in an internal email, “Today, OFAC called me about the status and also to ask if we would support the [foreign exchange] transactions if they also additionally issued a General License to all entities to engage in the same activity.”²²⁰ The same executive indicated that:

These will be large sums of money and may involve both legacy Iranian funds and also new funds from proceeds of fresh oil sales. This will most likely end up in the press in the future so I want to make sure that

Ten days later, on March 28, 2016, U.S. BANK 2's Compliance Executive indicated that while OFAC "confirmed that the flows appear to be consistent with the terms of the license" U.S. BANK 2 "does not have an appetite to engage in the activities at this time."²²² In an interview with the Subcommittee, U.S. BANK 2's Compliance Executive, explained that while OFAC authorized the transaction, U.S. BANK 2 declined to facilitate the deal for primarily because the transaction itself was complicated and created difficulty monitoring the flows of money.²²³ U.S. BANK 2's Compliance Executive also stated that doing business with Iran could present reputational risks as Iran is a comprehensively sanctioned country.²²⁴ In the end, according to an internal document, U.S. BANK 2 declined to handle [the currency conversion] based on [U.S. BANK 2's] uncertainty about how to manage and monitor the flow given the currency conversions."²²⁵

I. The Federal Reserve Bank Received Inquiries Concerning Bank Muscat's Currency Issue, but did not Facilitate the Conversion

After Bank Muscat's two U.S. correspondent banks refused to facilitate the currency conversion, both OFAC and Bank Muscat sought alternative solutions. One of those alternatives was to use the Federal Reserve Bank of New York (the "Federal Reserve Bank"), which is part of the Federal Reserve System, the central bank of the United States. The Federal Reserve System can provide certain financial services to the U.S. government, U.S. financial institutions, and foreign official institutions.²²⁶

A Senior State Department Official, in an email to Mr. Smith and other Treasury Department officials, expressed the importance of exploring alternatives after the U.S. correspondent banks refused. On April 11, 2016, that Senior State Department Official wrote that the Bank Muscat issue remains a top Iranian priority and asked "[s]ince no U.S. bank appears willing to avail itself of the OFAC license to facilitate the Bank Muscat transaction, is there any news on an alternate approach to help resolve the issue?"²²⁷ Mr. Smith replied that OFAC was still "actively engaged on alternatives for resolving the Bank Muscat issue, but we have not found a solution yet."²²⁸ A Bank Muscat executive then proposed using the Federal Reserve Bank as a direct alternative to the U.S. correspondent banks that refused to complete the conversion, as shown in a State Department meeting note below:

• We had a call with OFAC on Wednesday April 6, where we discussed the position of the US correspondent banks. We put forward the idea of bank muscat opening an account with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York (Fed) for the same role which we had envisaged U.S. Bank 2 or U.S. Bank 1 to play. We have a further call with OFAC on Monday April 11, 2016 to discuss this matter and are hopeful that we will be allowed to transact with the NY Fed.

The Federal Reserve Bank was an obvious partner in this currency conversion process as it previously facilitated another JCPOA-related transaction for the purchase of Iranian "heavy water."²³⁰ In the JCPOA, the Iranian government committed to refrain from accumulating heavy water "beyond Iran's needs" and "sell any remaining heavy water on the international market for 15 years."²³¹

According to a news report detailing the heavy water purchase, the Treasury Department previously declined to publicly disclose the currency used in the purchase.²³² Treasury Department documents now show that the U.S. government authorized a U.S. dollar-originated purchase of Iran's heavy water and relied on the Federal Reserve Bank to effectuate the purchase. On June 20, 2016, OFAC issued a "comfort letter" to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York concerning a series of transactions and conversions to facilitate the $8.6 million purchase of 32 metric tons of heavy water "from Iran for import into the United States."²³³ The comfort letter responded to the Treasury Department's Bureau of the Fiscal Service's plan to originate a transfer to the Federal Reserve Bank.²³⁴ The Federal Reserve Bank would then "enter into a foreign exchange" transaction with a counterparty to purchase the euro equivalent of the U.S. dollar amount.²³⁵

With respect to the Bank Muscat currency conversion, the Federal Reserve Bank received three separate inquiries from: (1) OFAC; (2) the Bank for International Settlements; and (3) the Central Bank of Germany. The Federal Reserve Bank examined and considered all three inquiries; however, it never reached a final determination on the legal characterization of any of the proposed transfers.²³⁶

First, in mid-April 2016, OFAC officials contacted the Federal Reserve Bank and requested assistance to complete an Omani currency conversion.²³⁷ The problem, as a Federal Reserve Bank official told the Subcommittee, was that the Omani rial is pegged to the U.S. dollar.²³⁸ This meant that any conversion of Omani rials to euros would necessarily include intermediary steps involving the U.S. dollar, which is commonly characterized as a “dollar leg.” OFAC “expressed frustration” with the dollar leg because there was no way to avoid using the U.S. financial system to complete the conversion to euros.²³⁹ However, according to Federal Reserve Bank officials, after initial conversations with OFAC, the issue faded without resolution.²⁴⁰ The Federal Reserve Bank did not receive any additional inquiries relating to the proposed currency transfer for several months.²⁴¹

Second, in December 2016, the Bank for International Settlements (“BIS”) contacted the Federal Reserve Bank regarding the conversion issue.²⁴² BIS is an international financial organization headquartered in Basel, Switzerland, whose mission is to act as “a bank for central banks.”²⁴³ In that role, BIS is able to act as “a prime counterparty for central banks in their financial transactions” or serve as “an agent or trustee in connection with international financial operations.”²⁴⁴

According to Federal Reserve Bank officials, BIS and the Omani government discussed a potential foreign exchange through Oman’s account held at the BIS. The Federal Reserve Bank, as a board member of BIS, had a standing objection since 2002 that prohibited BIS from conducting U.S. dollar transactions with Iranian entities. As a board member, the Federal Reserve Bank could object to transactions taking place in its “home currency”—i.e. the U.S. dollar.²⁴⁵ Thus, the BIS legal team asked if the Federal Reserve Bank would object to the proposed transaction. Before the Federal Reserve Bank reached any formal decision on the matter BIS disengaged from the preliminary conversations and never proposed the transfer.²⁴⁶

Third, in April 2017, the Central Bank of Germany contacted the Federal Reserve Bank concerning the currency conversion issue.²⁴⁷ According to Federal Reserve Bank officials, a German commercial bank (“German Bank A”) approached the Central Bank of Germany about conducting a “series of small conversions” of Omani rials to euros.²⁴⁸ German Bank A would facilitate these conversions without using the U.S. dollar or U.S. financial system.²⁴⁹ Simply put, the proposed transaction was arranged as a loan. German Bank A would lend the Central Bank of Iran euros, but allow repayment of the euros with Omani rial through a German Bank A account held in Oman.²⁵⁰

The Central Bank of Germany contacted the Federal Reserve Bank because it was possible that proceeds from the conversions could end up in the Central Bank of Germany’s account at the Federal Reserve Bank.²⁵¹ The Central Bank of Germany told the Federal Reserve Bank officials that German Bank A obtained an OFAC comfort letter indicating U.S. approval of the proposed transaction because there would “no longer be any Iranian interest in the proceeds.”²⁵² Nevertheless, the Central Bank of Germany wanted to make sure that the Federal Reserve Bank shared the same opinion that any proceeds from the transfer would no longer be tainted by Iranian interest, which could trigger sanctions. Federal Reserve Bank then contacted OFAC to discuss the proposed structure and the comfort letter.²⁵³ But, again, the discussions concerning the proposed transfers dwindled and eventually ceased.²⁵⁴ The Federal Reserve Bank never reached a formal decision on the legal characterization of any of the proposed transfers.²⁵⁵

J. After Issuing the Specific License, Treasury and State Department Officials Again Denied that Iran was Granted Access to the U.S. Financial System Under the JCPOA

Prior to the implementation of the JCPOA, Treasury and State Department officials testified that under the JCPOA Iran would not have access to the U.S.

financial system.²⁵⁶ After Implementation Day and the issuance of Bank Muscat's specific license, Treasury Department officials again asserted that Iran was not granted access to the U.S. financial system under the terms of the JCPOA. Secretary Lew, Mr. Szubin, and Ambassador Thomas Shannon all testified on the details concerning sanctions relief afforded to Iran under the JCPOA.

To prepare Secretary Lew for his testimony, Treasury Department staff created a "Talking Points" document concerning the implementation of the JCPOA with details of the financial relief.²⁵⁷ That document suggested Secretary Lew could discuss the need for authorizing Iran to receive access to the dollar under the terms of the JCPOA, but only "if pressed." Under the "Release of Iran's Previously Restricted Funds" header, Secretary Lew's background document included the following section, with several edits proposed by one OFAC official:

[IF PRESSED] Additional License to Allow Foreign Exchange Transactions

Post Implementation Day, foreign financial institutions and central banks approached the Department of the Treasury requesting permission to allow foreign exchange transactions involving non-designated Iranian financial institutions and the Central Bank of Iran. An indirect part of such foreign exchange transactions needed to go through the U.S. financial system. We realized that, due to the centrality of the U.S. financial system, frequently foreign exchange transactions – the process of converting most non-U.S. Dollar (USD) currencies into a different non-USD currency – use USD as an intermediate currency. In better enable the implementation of the nuclear-related sanctions relief we committed to under the JCPOA, in order to fulfill our commitments under the JCPOA to lift secondary nuclear-related sanctions on banking and financial activities with Iran, and to allow for trade between Iran and non-U.S. persons, we are thinking through ways on how to allow for the conversion of two non-USD currencies to use through the use of the USD as an intermediate currency. We are not looking to expand the scope of the sanctions relief under the JCPOA but rather to enable the implementation of the sanctions relief we committed to under the JCPOA.

The background document provided to Secretary Lew also included information regarding the specific license issued to Bank Muscat, along with the possibility of Treasury issuing a general license, as explained below:²⁵⁹

²⁵⁶ See Section C.

²⁵⁷ PSI_BM_000469.

²⁵⁸ PSI_BM_000482 (yellow emphasis in original).

²⁵⁹ PSI_BM_000479 (One OFAC official stated that naming the bank "seems to raise Trade Secrets act issues" if the information was for anything other than background for the Secretary).

Licensing Foreign Exchange Transactions Involving Non-designated Iranian Financial Institutions

OFAC has already issued one specific license to Bank Maseatone financial institution to allow for the conversion of previously blocked Iranian funds and the fresh flow of additional funds, where one indirect portion of the foreign exchange transactions touches U.S. financial institutions. Treasury is reviewing and discussing a draft of a general license that will authorize U.S. depository institutions and U.S. registered brokers or dealers in securities to process certain transactions in connection with foreign exchange transactions by non-U.S., non-Iranian financial institutions to convert funds held in one non-USD currency to a different non-USD currency for the indirect benefit of non-designated Iranian financial institutions, including persons whose property and interests in property are blocked solely pursuant to Executive Order 13599. This general license will not authorize transactions involving any person on OFAC's SDN List or whose property and interests in property are blocked pursuant to any laws or regulations administered by OFAC other than the ITSR.

The NSC weighed in on the nature of Secretary Lew's testimony concerning both the specific and general licenses. NSC officials expressed concern about linking either license to the JCPOA. On March 3, 2016, just days after the Treasury Department issued the specific license, a Treasury Department official wrote in an email that "NSC seemed to express some discomfort about linking the [foreign exchange] license to the JCPOA."²⁶¹ This prompted another Treasury Department official to reply:

[N]ot sure we want to link it with the JCPOA, since it is applicable to any transaction that falls within the authorization – and, since we are selling this as a "financial reality" more than a JCPOA necessity, can we really say it will be part of a snapback.²⁶²

OFAC OFFICIAL 1, however, disagreed and wrote, "For background, we need to link it to the JCPOA: We are only issuing [the general license] because of the JCPOA and it would be revoked in the event of a snapback."²⁶³ One OFAC official responded, "Thanks OFAC OFFICIAL 1. Apparently I have been asleep on this one—I didn't think it was because of the JCPOA, but brought to light because of it. Makes me dislike it even more."²⁶⁴

Secretary Lew's March 22, 2016 testimony to the House Financial Services Committee provided no details about the specific license to Bank Muscat, or the consideration of issuing a general license as outlined in the background document and talking points. This hearing took place nearly one month after the Treasury Department issued the specific license to Bank Muscat. During the hearing, Congressman Ed Royce stated:

In July, you testified to the Senate that Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, or hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing agreements with U.S. banks. Iran, in other words, will continue to be denied access to the world's largest financial and commercial market. And I have received reports from the Administration that it is now considering providing Iran with access to the U.S. financial systems. So are these reports which contradict your previous testimony correct, and is the Administration planning to ease restrictions on Iran's access to U.S. banks?²⁶⁵

In response to Congressman Royce's inquiry, Secretary Lew declared that the JCPOA caused Iran to "roll back its nuclear program" and that part of the JCPOA was for "Iran to have nuclear sanctions lifted."²⁶⁶ The Secretary did not directly answer whether Iran would have access to the U.S. financial system. Congressman Royce then pressed the issue again and asked whether the U.S. would give Iran access to "the U.S. dollar or U.S. financial systems."²⁶⁷ In his response, Secretary Lew did not rely on his "talking points" or reference the general or specific licenses. Instead, he stated that the United States continued "to look at how we comply with the [JCPOA] to make sure that Iran gets relief under the nuclear portions while we keep pressure on Iran on these other issues."²⁶⁸

Later during the same hearing, Chairman Jeb Hensarling asked Secretary Lew: "Do you believe that these banks are going to be able to access—I didn't get a clear answer from you—that they can have access and work with American financial institutions?"²⁶⁹ Secretary Lew responded:

I think that what I said in the earlier response is that we will comply with the [JCPOA] and lift the nuclear sanctions; we will keep other sanctions in place. Part of the agreement was to give Iran access to money that it has a right to. We will work on making that happen. It is not going to be our goal to block transactions that are legitimate under the JCPOA, but we will enforce on other areas like terrorism and the like.²⁷⁰

Two months later, Congressman Royce again questioned a Treasury Department official—this time it was Mr. Szubin.²⁷¹ Congressman Royce started by addressing Secretary Lew's previous testimony:

I asked the Treasury Secretary—I think it was 2 months ago—if he stood by his testimony during the agreement's consideration in which we were assured [Iran] would not have access [to the U.S. financial system]. Instead of shutting the door right there, Secretary Lew said his focus was on making sure Iran gets relief. And 2 months since, the President still has not responded to my letter on this question.²⁷²

Congressman Royce continued, "And the concern is that while Iran wouldn't be allowed direct access to the dollar, you could structure a scheme offshore that would have similar impact."²⁷³ Mr. Szubin interjected and replied,

I just wanted to clarify that Secretary Lew has made himself clear on the record in public, and of course, we look forward to responding to your letter to be clear in writing as well. But he has said exactly what I have said here today, and I know he was looking forward to me being here to be able to relay his views on this. *Iran will not have access to our financial system.*²⁷⁴

Finally, on April 5, 2016, Ambassador Thomas Shannon, the Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs for the State Department, testified at the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.²⁷⁵ Senator Marco Rubio described a hypothetical scenario similar to the actual Bank Muscat currency conversion authorized by the specific license. Senator Rubio stated, "Now, I think the President and everyone's been pretty clear what [Iran is] not allowed to do. They're not allowed to go through a U.S. bank to turn the rial into a dollar and then the dollar into a Swiss franc. That's pretty clear. I think that's been outlined."²⁷⁶ Senator Rubio then asked about a different hypothetical scenario concerning foreign transactions that would not require the U.S. financial system at all. Amb. Shannon stated that he “was not sure” and that he:

[W]ould have to check, because if it doesn't touch a U.S. bank, if it doesn't touch the U.S. financial system -- because what our -- our sanctions legislation has gone [sic] and what -- what we have been able to accomplish in terms of -- of limiting Iran's access to our larger financial system is we have not permitted U-turn authorization, and no, there is no exchange of dollars inside the U.S. financial system, and we have not allowed an access to our larger financial system.²⁷⁷

Months before Secretary Lew, Mr. Szubin, and Amb. Shannon testified in front of congressional committees, the Treasury Department, issued the specific license to Bank Muscat permitting the conversion of Iranian assets using the U.S. financial system.

Members of Congress also sent letters to the Treasury Department requesting information concerning Iranian access to the U.S. financial system. Senators Kirk and Rubio sent at least two letters to Secretary Lew in March and May 2016 asking for assurances that the United States was not working to enable Iranian access to the U.S. dollar. The Treasury Department's two responses again reassured Congress that the U.S. government was not working to provide Iran access to the U.S. financial system.

First, on March 30, 2016, Senators Kirk and Rubio wrote a joint letter to Secretary Lew stating that they were “gravely alarmed by news reports suggesting the Administration is working to give Iran access to the U.S. financial system or to dollar transactions outside of the U.S. financial system.”²⁷⁸ The letter continued, “Senior officials in the Treasury Department have repeatedly assured Congress that the Administration will not allow Iran direct or indirect access to the U.S. financial system.”²⁷⁹ Senators Kirk and Rubio's letter then requested assurances from the Treasury Department that the United States “will not work on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system.”²⁸⁰

The Treasury Department responded on May 11, 2016, stating, “As we have said consistently, we are not planning to reinstate the ‘U-turn’ authorization or to give Iran access to the U.S. financial system under the JCPOA.”²⁸¹ The Treasury letter further stated, “We also continue to vigorously enforce the many sanctions that remain against Iran, including our primary sanctions that generally prohibit Iranian banks from clearing U.S. dollars through the U.S. financial system or holding correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions.”²⁸²

Second, on May 19, 2016, Senators Kirk and Rubio sent a follow-up letter to Secretary Lew on the same issue. The Senators expressed disappointment that the Treasury Department did not provide a clear assurance that the United States was not working to directly or indirectly give Iran access to the U.S. dollar or financial system.²⁸³ The Treasury Department responded nearly three weeks later on June 7, 2016.²⁸⁴ The letter response, signed by Thomas Patrick Maloney, a Senior Advisor to the Office of Legislative Affairs opened with the following paragraph:

Thank you for your letter seeking assurances regarding Iranian access to U.S. dollars. To be clear, the U.S. Department of the Treasury is not working on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system, nor are we assisting Iran in gaining access to dollar payment systems outside the U.S. financial system. The administration has not been and is not planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system.²⁸⁵

The Treasury Department sent this letter roughly three months after it issued the specific license authorizing the conversion of Iranian assets through the U.S. financial system.

Finally, in July 2016, 35 bipartisan Senators wrote a letter to President Obama to express concern that the Administration was “considering accommodation of certain dollar-based transactions for Iran following implementation of the [JCPOA], despite sanctions imposed on Iran because of illicit activity separate from its nuclear enrichment program.”²⁸⁶ The letter continued:

We welcome your Administration’s assurance that Iran will not gain direct access to the U.S. financial system. As Iran seeks greater access to the global financial system, we urge you to take all action necessary to preserve the strength of U.S. sanctions imposed for Iran's illicit non-nuclear activities—including preventing any indirect access to the U.S. financial system or the illegal use of dollars in Iranian trade.²⁸⁷

The letter then urged the President to “ensure the maximum of existing sanctions on Iran, including the restriction on dollar-based transactions for Iran, until Iran changes its nefarious behavior. If Iran wants direct or indirect access to the U.S. financial system, Iran can cease money laundering, proliferating weapons, developing ballistic missile, and support terror.”²⁸⁸

K. Iranian Funds Remained at Bank Muscat into 2017

Without a willing U.S. correspondent bank, the Iranian funds held by Bank Muscat could not be converted using the U.S. financial system. The funds remained at Bank Muscat into 2017. A January 2017 State Department email indicated that Iran still “expressed concern” that the Iranian fund issue still had not been resolved.²⁸⁹ That same email indicated that the State Department “would work the issue expeditiously.”²⁹⁰ In a follow-up interview, the Senior State Department Official told the Subcommittee he believed that Bank Muscat and Iran converted the funds using European banks and in small increments.²⁹¹ Sandra Oudkirk, now a Deputy Assistant Secretary with the Department of State's Bureau of Energy Resources, also told the Subcommittee in an October 2017 interview that she believed Bank Muscat eventually found a way to make small fund transfers without the use of the U.S. financial system.²⁹²

Opinion The Senate needs straight answers from this Biden nominee

Jack Lew has some explaining to do.

On Oct. 18, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will hear testimony from the former Obama administration treasury secretary, who is nominated to be U.S. ambassador to Israel at an obviously critical moment. Lew must explain why, in 2015, he promised the same committee that he would not allow Iran access to the U.S. financial system under the recently announced nuclear deal yet secretly tried to do just that — by working in turn $5.7 billion in Iranian assets into easily convertible currency via U.S. banks.

Lew's maneuvering as treasury secretary was exposed in a 2018 report from the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, led by then-Sen. Rob Portman (R-Ohio). The report was widely covered at the time but is now largely forgotten. Senators might want to read the report (including the classified annex) before asking Lew now about its troubling findings.

Here is what subcommittee investigators found — just the facts:

Follow this author's opinions

On July 23, 2015, Lew testified before the Foreign Relations Committee that Iran "will continue to be denied access to the [U.S.] financial and commercial market." He promised that "Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. banks."

Yet seven months later, on Feb. 24, 2016, Lew's Treasury Department "granted a specific license that authorized a conversion of Iranian assets worth billions of U.S. dollars using the U.S. financial system," the subcommittee's report noted. Without this license, which was not disclosed to Congress, the transaction would be an illegal evasion of international sanctions. The license would have allowed Iran to convert $5.7 billion in Omani rials, held by Iran at Bank Muscat in Oman, into euros by first turning them into highly convertible U.S. dollars through a U.S. bank.

Not only that, but the license further authorized Bank Muscat to use the U.S. financial system to convert unlimited additional future Iranian deposits — so-called fresh funds.

This clear effort to circumvent U.S. sanctions fell through, investigators found, only because U.S. banks declined to participate. Treasury officials contacted two banks to encourage them to convert the Omani rials, but "both banks declined to complete the transaction due to compliance, reputational, and legal risks associated with doing business with Iran." Treasury also sought assistance to convert the funds from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

After failing in this effort to help Iran free up these funds, Lew testified on March 22, 2016, before the House Financial Services Committee — and did not disclose that he issued the license.

Portman's subcommittee found that Lew's talking points for that hearing warned against candor, advising Lew to reveal the existence of the license only "if pressed." But, the report states, "in his testimony, Secretary Lew did not disclose the specific license authorizing Iran to access the U.S. financial system. In fact, the Treasury Department maintained Iran was not given access to the U.S. financial system, nor was the U.S. government working to give them access."

On March 30, 2016, Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.), a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, wrote to Lew expressing alarm at reports that "the Administration is working to give Iran access to the U.S. financial system or to dollar transactions." Treasury officials assured Rubio in June 2016 that "the U.S. Department of Treasury is not working on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system, nor are we assisting Iran in gaining access to dollar payment systems outside the U.S. financial system."

Investigators further found that Lew sent officials to participate in more than 200 "roadshows" in major cities — including London, Geneva, Tokyo, Berlin, Rome and Paris — seeking to assure banks that his department would not aggressively enforce U.S. sanctions against banks doing business with Iran.

The investigators offered no opinion as to whether Lew lied to Congress. That was not their job. Their role was to uncover and present the facts. Even supporters of the White House fighting for its safety against terrorists backed by Iran, Lew's conduct should be disqualifying. As Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) said, "He helped Iran evade American sanctions, and he lied to Congress about it." How can we send an ambassador to Jerusalem who tried secretly to free up billions for Iran after promising not to? How can senators who recently objected to returning $6 billion to Iran now vote for the man who attempted to return $5.7 billion to Iran? And how can members of the Foreign Relations Committee endorse an ambassador without confidence that his words can be trusted?

If Lew can't explain his conduct, he should not be confirmed.

Opinion Obama took lying to new heights with the Iran deal

By Matt A. Thissen

June 8, 2016 at 8:01 a.m. EDT

When it comes to the Iran nuclear deal, the Obama administration increasingly appears to have been a bottomless pit of deception.

First, President Barack Obama failed to disclose to Congress the existence of secret side deals on inspections when he transmitted the nuclear accord to Capitol Hill. (They were only uncovered by chance when then-Rep. Mike Pompeo (R-Kan.) and Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) learned about them during a meeting with International Atomic Energy Agency officials in Vienna.) Then, we learned that the Obama administration had secretly sent a plane to Tehran loaded with $400 million in Swiss francs, euros and other currencies on the same day Iran released four American hostages, which was followed by two more secret flights carrying another $1.3 billion in cash.

Now, in a bombshell revelation, Republicans on the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, led by Sen. Rob Portman (R-Ohio), have revealed in a new report that the Obama administration secretly tried to help Iran use U.S. banks to convert $5.7 billion in Iranian assets, after promising Congress that Iran would not get access to the U.S. financial system — and then lied to Congress about what it had done. (Full disclosure: My wife works for Portman.)

In July 2015, Obama Treasury Secretary Jack Lew assured the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that, under the nuclear accord, Iran “will continue to be denied access to the [U.S.] financial and commercial market” and that “Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. banks.” A few weeks later, one of Lew’s top deputies, Adam Sabbin, used the exact same words in testimony to the Senate banking committee.

But Senate investigators found that on Feb. 24, 2016, the Obama Treasury Department “granted a specific license that authorized a conversion of Iranian assets worth billions of U.S. dollars using the U.S. financial system” — exactly what Lew and Sabbin said would not happen — including unlimited future Iranian deposits at Bank Muscat in Oman until the license expired.

Follow this author's opinions

Not only that, Senate investigators found that officials from the Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC), which regulates U.S. banks’ compliance with U.S. sanctions law, “encouraged two U.S. correspondent banks to convert the funds.” The report says “both banks declined to complete the transaction due to compliance, reputational, and legal risks associated with doing business with Iran.”

Then, after issuing the license, the Obama administration explicitly denied to Congress that it had done so. Lew and Sabbin both failed to disclose the license in congressional testimony while continuing to assert that the Obama administration would not give Iran access to U.S. financial institutions — when they had just tried to do so. And in a June 2016 letter to Sens. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) and Mark Kirk (R-Ill.), Treasury officials declared “The U.S. Department of Treasury is not working on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system, nor are we assisting Iran in gaining access to dollar payment systems outside the U.S. financial system. The Administration has not been and is not planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system.” This was patently false.

Investigators also found internal State Department emails, in which officials admitted that the Obama administration had “exceeded our JCPOA commitments” by authorizing Iranian access to U.S. banks. Furthermore, the report reveals that the Obama administration put on more than 200 “roadshows” across the world where they encouraged foreign financial institutions to do business with Iran “as long as the rest of the world left the United States out of it.” According to the report, during a roadshow in London, OFAC Director John Smith “downplayed the likelihood of any future penalties or fines,” telling the audience “that 95% of the time OFAC sees an apparent violation it results in a simple warning letter or no enforcement action.”

In other words, the Obama administration: (1) told Congress it would not allow Iran access to U.S. financial institutions; (2) issued a special license allowing Iran to do exactly that; (3) unsuccessfully pressured U.S. banks to help Iran; (4) lied to Congress and the American people about what it had done; (5) admitted in internal emails that these efforts “exceeded” U.S. obligations under the nuclear deal; (6) sent officials, including bank regulators, around the world to urge foreign financial institutions to do business with Iran; and (7) promised that they would get nothing more than a slap on the wrist for violating U.S. sanctions.

How bad is this? Remove the words “Obama” and “Iran” and replace them with “Trump” and “Russia” and imagine the outrage that would ensue over the same revelations. Democrats would be holding news conferences, and the story would be front-page news.

We hear a lot these days from the media about the danger of presidential lies. Well, when it comes to the Iran deal, the Obama administration took lying to new heights. And no, that’s not Fake News.

Foot-dragging on sanctions relief jeopardising historic agreement to curtail nuclear weapon production, Tehran says.

A US official denied that his country was holding up the removal of sanctions [AP]
Published On 26 Sep 2016 26 Sep 2016

The head of Iran's atomic energy agency has warned that his country's landmark nuclear deal with five world powers could be jeopardised by foot-dragging on a pledge of sanctions relief in exchange for Tehran's commitment to curb atomic activities.

Ali Akbar Salehi said on Monday that "comprehensive and expeditious removal of all sanctions" outlined in the agreement "have yet to be met," even though his country is honouring all its obligations under the historic pact.

Salehi didn't blame particular countries in comments to the International Atomic Energy Agency's general conference. But other Iranian officials have faulted the United States for delays in lifting financial sanctions.

Salehi said that the deal's "durability" depended on the other side's "reciprocal and full implementation".

Iran complains that international financial sanctions are not being lifted quickly enough under the agreement that stipulates a removal of these and other penalties imposed over Tehran's nuclear programme, in exchange for its agreement to curb atomic pursuits that could be used to make a bomb.

Iranian President Hassan Rouhani most recently sounded that theme last week at the United Nations General Assembly.

While US financial institutions remain under tight restrictions as part of non-nuclear related sanctions, Rouhani said other banks complain about confusing signals from the US Treasury Department that create a "lot of doubt" about the legality of doing business with Tehran.

"As one thing they [the US Treasury] tell them 'you are free to engage with Iran in banking activity'," he said. "At other times, they ... enter the arena with threats.

"They frighten the big banks," he said.

But a senior US official said Washington is delivering on its commitments.

US Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz said that if Iran was disappointed in the pace of sanctions-lifting, it was because of international caution about doing business with Tehran.

"We have carried out fully our responsibilities beyond the letter of the agreement," he told reporters on the sidelines of the UN nuclear meeting.

"But the international banking system, international business enterprises, are going to ... not only have clarity on where the lines are drawn on the sanctions, but they're going to have to have more business confidence, if you like, which is going to take obviously more time than Iran would like to see."

Moniz said the US State and Treasury departments "at their highest levels" have held briefings with European banks "where they have made very clear that these sanctions have been lifted".

Rouhani claims the U.S. is violating its commitments under nuclear deal

By Carol Morello
 Washington Post, September 22, 2016 at 6:42 p.m. EDT

NEW YORK - Iranian President Hassan Rouhani on Thursday accused the United States of failing to uphold its end of the historic nuclear agreement by delaying licenses for legitimate transactions and warning banks they could still run afoul of U.S. sanctions.

In a lengthy news conference with reporters in New York, Rouhani allowed that the U.S. government has granted Airbus and Boeing permission to sell aircraft to Iran, a transaction announced Wednesday. But he said it should have been granted eight months ago, when the nuclear deal lifting sanctions for curbs on Iran's nuclear program was implemented. He called the delay "severe," and said the U.S. Treasury Department had reminded banks that U.S. sanctions remain in place for missiles and human rights violations.

"They frighten the big banks with the threat of potential action," he said.

Large international banks with lots of exposure in the United States have acknowledged being concerned about violating U.S. sanctions and incurring huge fines. But they also have said they are reluctant to invest in Iran in large part because of a culture of corruption with virtually no transparency as required in modern day banking.

Along with Russia, Iran is the biggest backer of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad as well as a member of a multinational group trying to stem the violence and negotiate an end to the war. But Rouhani said he could not back a proposal by U.S. Secretary of State John F. Kerry to ground Russian and Syrian warplanes so humanitarian supplies could be safely delivered.

"It has nothing to do with grounding flights," he said, speaking through an interpreter. "If you ground flights, all you do aid the terrorists. They have mortar rounds, tanks, missile systems and artillery. The only thing they lack is an air force.

"Grounding flights is a step against the righteous and for the terrorists."

Earlier in the day, Rouhani addressed the United Nations in which he criticized what he portrayed as a deliberate attempt by Washington to block Iranian access to the international banking system.

Rouhani cited as one example an April Supreme Court ruling that Iran's central bank must pay almost $2 billion to victims of terrorist attacks linked to Iran. The court held that Congress acted within its authority in passing a law enabling families of Americans killed in those attacks to recover damages awarded them in several lawsuits. Among them were relatives of those who died in the Marine Corps barracks bombing in Beirut in 1983.

Rouhani started his speech with a mention of the terrorist attack on New York City that happened 15 years ago this month.

"On that day, no one imagined that this occurrence would lead to larger disasters, resulting in a devastating war in the Middle East and the spread of insecurity across the globe," he said. "This war has sown the seeds of borderless terrorism everywhere on earth."

Rouhani also slammed neighboring Saudi Arabia, its regional rival that has been engaged in a war of words with Iran over numerous issues: the wars in Syria and Yemen and the death of many Iranians who were among at least 750 people who died on pilgrimage to Mecca during a stampede last year.

"If the Saudi government is serious about its vision for development and regional security, it must cease and desist from divisive policies, spread of hate ideology and trampling upon the rights of neighbors, accept its responsibility for the protection of the lives and dignity of pilgrims and construct its relations with the nations in the region on the basis of mutual respect and accountability" Rouhani said.

Iran, US at Odds Over Nuclear Sanctions Relief

April 18, 2016 6:37 PM

UPDATE April 19, 2016 1:12 AM

Pamela Dockins

STATE DEPARTMENT - Iran's concerns about its perceived lack of sanctions relief and Syria's faltering political talks will be focal points for Secretary of State John Kerry when he sits down for talks Tuesday with his Iranian counterpart.

Kerry and Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif will meet in New York, at the start of a trip for Kerry that will include stops in Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

Iranian officials have complained that their country is not getting the sanctions relief specified in the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), the landmark nuclear agreement that was implemented in January.

"All of the countries should take necessary measures to remove the obstacles to the implementation of the nuclear deal," Zarif said at a Saturday news conference with EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini.

"We have seen the Americans' attitude, so we will put some pressure on them, so should the EU, to pave the way for cooperation between the non-U.S. banks and Iran," he added.

The U.S. has been "fulfilling" its commitment to the JCPOA, said White House spokesman John Earnest on Friday. He said giving Iran access to the U.S. financial system was "not part of the deal."

At the State Department on Monday, spokesman John Kirby acknowledged that he expects the sanctions issue to be on Tuesday's agenda for Kerry and Zarif.

"We are obviously aware of the concerns that they have expressed about the status of sanctions relief, and the secretary is very mindful that this topic will come up," he said.

Ahead of the talks, Kerry said in a speech to the pro-Israel group J Street that Iran has so far received about $3 billion as a result of the deal to constrain the Iranian nuclear program. He said that is far less than figures given by critics and reiterated that the agreement showed the power of prioritizing diplomacy.

"Despite the skeptics' most dire predictions, we are in a place that some people thought was unimaginable and others unacceptable," Kerry said.

The meeting between Kerry and Zarif also comes at a time when the U.N.-facilitated process for a political transition in Syria appears to be showing signs of fray. Their meeting also comes at a time when the U.N.-facilitated process for a political transition in Syria appears to be showing signs of fray.

The Syrian opposition announced that it has postponed its participation in the political talks because of what it says are the Syrian government's cease-fire violations.

The two sides have been holding indirect talks in Geneva.

Iran supports the Syrian government while the U.S. has supported the moderate opposition. But Tehran and Washington are part of the International Syria Support Group, which has been backing the process for a political transition.

After his meeting with Zarif, Kerry travels to Cairo, where he will discuss bilateral and regional issues with officials including President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi.

He then will join U.S. President Barack Obama in Riyadh for a Gulf Cooperation Council summit.

United States Senate
WASHINGTON, DC 20510

March 30, 2016

Secretary Jacob Lew
U.S. Department of the Treasury
1500 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Secretary Lew:

We are gravely alarmed by news reports suggesting the Administration is working to give Iran access to the U.S. financial system or to dollar transactions outside of the U.S. financial system. Any such efforts would benefit Iran's financiers of international terrorism, human rights abuses, and ballistic missile threats while also ignoring the Treasury Department's finding under Section 311 the USA PATRIOT Act that Iran's entire financial sector is a jurisdiction of primary money laundering concern, and undermining ongoing calls by the Financial Action Task Force (FATF) for countermeasures to protect international financial sectors from Iran's terrorist financing. As co-authors of the Iran Terrorism and Human Rights Sanctions Act of 2016 (S.2726) and the Iran Ballistic Missile Sanctions Act of 2016 (S.2725), we believe the United States should instead increase pressure on the Iranian regime in order to hold it fully accountable for its threatening and destabilizing activities outside of the nuclear realm.

As you know, the United States has led efforts within the international financial community to highlight the dangers of Iran's financial system. On November 25, 2011, the Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) issued a finding that Iran is a jurisdiction of primary money laundering concern under the USA PATRIOT Act's Section 311. On February 19, 2016, the Financial Action Task Force renewed its February 2009 call for its members and other jurisdictions to apply countermeasures to protect their financial sectors from money laundering and financing of terrorism risks emanating from Iran.

That said, we are aware the Iranian regime is urging the United States to provide access to the American and international financial systems. Iran's leaders have complained both publicly and privately that foreign companies and financial institutions are avoiding business deals with Iran because they fear U.S. sanctions. Most notably, Iranian Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei said in his Persian New Year address: "In Western countries and places which are under U.S. influence, our banking transactions and the repatriation of our funds from their banks face problems ... because [banks] fear the Americans."

Senior officials in the Treasury Department have repeatedly assured Congress that the Administration will not allow Iran direct or indirect access to the U.S. financial system, and we believe this prohibition to be prudent in light of the Iranian regime's continued state sponsorship of terrorism, threatening ballistic missile activities, and egregious violations of human rights. In testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on July 23, 2015, you said: "Iranian banks will not be able to clear U.S. dollars through New York, hold correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions, or enter into financing arrangements with U.S. banks." And in testimony before the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs on September 17, 2015, Acting Under Secretary of the Treasury Adam Szubin assured lawmakers that "no Iranian banks can access the U.S. financial system; not to open an account, not to purchase a security, and not even to execute a dollarized transaction where a split seconds worth of business is done in a New York clearing bank" (emphasis added).

We request corresponding assurances from you that the United States will not issue a general license authorizing "U-turn transactions" for Iran, in which a U.S. bank processes a transaction for a foreign financial institution on behalf of Iran while the Iranian part of the transaction does not touch the U.S. financial system directly. It is important that we maintain the prohibition against "U-turn transactions" that was implemented on November 6, 2008. Because Iran remains under the USA PATRIOT Act's Section 311 finding and FATF's call for international countermeasures, the United States cannot and should not be seen to undermine the global consensus on Iran's financial system.

We also request assurances from you that the United States will not work on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system, including assisting Iran in gaining access to dollar payment systems outside the U.S. financial system. Such actions would fundamentally undermine our nation's own reputation as a global leader on anti-money laundering and countering the financing of terrorism, and also provide Iran legitimacy in the international financial system that it has not earned, especially as the regime in Tehran has not addressed its use of Iranian financial institutions and foreign financial institutions to conduct illegitimate transactions, nor its lack of anti-money laundering or countering the financing of terrorism (AML/CFT) controls. Granting Iran the ability to process transactions in U.S. dollars would also be a bad precedent given Iran's current status with a finding as a jurisdiction of primary money laundering concern and the FATF's call for countermeasures. It is critical to preserve the U.S. dollar's status as the world's reserve currency, including by ensuring that countries engaged in destabilizing activities do not have the privilege of processing transactions in U.S. dollars.

We look forward to your response in timely manner to our requests.

Sincerely,

Marco Rubio

The Honorable Mark Kirk
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Kirk:

Thank you for your letter regarding press reports that the Administration is considering providing Iran with access to the U.S. financial system. As the Administration has stated, these reports are false. The Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) between the P5+1 (China, France, Germany, Russia, the United Kingdom, and the United States), the European Union (EU), and Iran has cut off all of Iran's potential pathways to developing a nuclear weapon, which has greatly increased the security of the United States and our allies. As you know, in exchange for Iran verifiably completing its nuclear-related commitments under the JCPOA, we have met our JCPOA commitments by lifting nuclear-related sanctions on Iran as set out in the JCPOA. As long as Iran continues to meet its nuclear commitments, we will continue to meet our JCPOA sanctions lifting commitments.

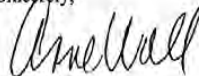

The recent rumors in press reporting about preparations to issue a general license to reinstate the "U-turn" authorization or to give Iran access to the U.S. financial system are wrong. The Administration fully stands by our previous statements. As we have said consistently, we are not planning to reinstate the "U-turn" authorization or to give Iran access to the U.S. financial system under the JCPOA. President Obama confirmed during a press conference that the Administration is not considering granting Iran access to the U.S. financial system. We also continue to vigorously enforce the many sanctions that remain against Iran, including our primary sanctions that generally prohibit Iranian banks from clearing U.S. dollars through the U.S. financial system or holding correspondent account relationships with U.S. financial institutions. These sanctions are an important part of our government's toolkit to protect the integrity of our robust and globally influential financial sector.

We continue to maintain pressure on Iran through a variety of means, including but not limited to sanctions. We have in place all the authorities we need to sanction Iran's support for terrorism, its ballistic missile program, its human rights abuses, and other concerning activities—and we continue to use those authorities to oppose Iranian actions that threaten our interests. Indeed, since the JCPOA was announced on July 14, 2015, the Administration has levied unilateral sanctions against over 30 additional Iran-related individuals and entities, including those involved in Iran's ballistic missile program and its support for terrorism. This is in addition to the over 200 individuals and entities that remain on OFAC's SDN List after implementation of the JCPOA.

Thank you for your letter. If you have any additional questions, please contact me or have your staff contact Luke Ballman, Office of Legislative Affairs, at (202) 622-1900.

Sincerely,

WASHINGTON, DC 20510

Secretary Jacob Lew
U.S. Department of the Treasury
1500 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Secretary Lew:

Thank you for your letter and we acknowledge receipt of your assurances that the Obama Administration will not "reinstate the 'U-turn' authorization or give Iran access to the U.S. financial system". However, we are disappointed that you ignored the request in the March 30th letter from Senators Rubio and Kirk to provide "assurances that the United States will not work on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system, including assisting Iran in gaining access to dollar payment systems outside the U.S. financial system." We do not support the consideration of Treasury Department nominees until our request is directly answered.

Despite the best efforts of officials from State and Treasury, most foreign banks and businesses have decided to stay away from Iran. The reason for this is clear: Iran is a high-risk jurisdiction due, among other reasons, to its lack of money laundering and terrorist financing controls, continued deceptive financial practices, and the persistent role of the IRGC in the economy. As Stuart Levey, chief legal officer of HSBC Holdings who served previously as Under Secretary of the Treasury for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence under Presidents Bush and Obama, wrote in the Wall Street Journal on May 12, 2016, the Administration "wants non-U.S. banks to do business with Iran without a U.S. repudiation of its prior statements about the associated financial-crime risks." Levey added: "No one has claimed that Iran has ceased to engage in much of the same conduct for which it was sanctioned, including actively supporting terrorism and building and testing ballistic missiles. But now Washington is pushing non-U.S. banks to do what it is still illegal for American banks to do."

In its determined effort to provide Iran's terror-sponsoring regime with benefits that were not expressly included in the ill-conceived Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, the Administration is on a path toward undermining the reputation of the United States as a global leader in anti-money laundering and countering terrorism financing. Access to the U.S. dollar is not an international right. But if Tehran wants access, the onus should be entirely on Iran to clean up its act—including by verifiably ending its sponsorship and financing of terrorism, its ballistic missile program, and its human rights abuses against the peoples of Iran and other nations—and reduce the risks that any financial transaction with Iran poses to the global financial community.

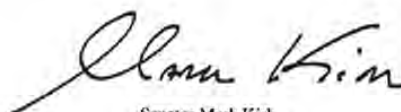

Yet Iran refuses to address grave and growing concerns about its destabilizing activities and deceptive financial practices. And, sadly, the Administration appears to be more focused in capitulating to Tehran than in forcing Iran's terror regime to fundamentally change its behavior. It's high time for the U.S. to stop making unreciprocated concessions and to start holding Iran fully accountable for continuing its dangerous and destructive behavior.

We look forward to your response in timely manner to our request.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20220

June 7, 2016

The Honorable Marco Rubio
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Rubio:

Thank you for your letter seeking assurances regarding Iranian access to U.S. dollars. To be clear, the U.S. Department of the Treasury is not working on behalf of Iran to enable Iranian access to U.S. dollars elsewhere in the international financial system, nor are we assisting Iran in gaining access to dollar payment systems outside the U.S. financial system. The administration has not been and is not planning to grant Iran access to the U.S. financial system.

Treasury does not exercise sanctions jurisdiction over transactions denominated in U.S. dollars; rather, we exercise jurisdiction over transactions involving U.S. persons or that transit the U.S. financial system. The free flow of the U.S. dollar, as the international currency of choice for international trade, works in the broader economic, financial, and strategic interests of the United States. As a practical matter, most U.S.-dollar-denominated transactions worldwide transit the United States and therefore are under our jurisdiction. To be clear, until Iran has addressed other concerns we have with its behavior outside of the nuclear file, the U.S. financial system (including the branches of U.S. financial institutions abroad) will remain off limits to Iran and U.S. persons will not be able to provide financial services or products to Iran without explicit authorization.

We have expressly stated this throughout public guidance we issued on the JCPOA Implementation Day. I would draw your attention in particular to the frequently asked questions (FAQs) A.3, C.6, C.7, C.14, and M. 9, which reiterate the sanctions that remain in place (A.3 and C.14), and the facts that (i) U.S. persons remain broadly prohibited from engaging in transactions or dealings with Iran unless the activities are exempt from regulation or authorized by OFAC (A.3 and M.9), (ii) the U-turn is not being reinstated (C.6), and (iii) foreign financial institutions cannot clear U.S. dollar transactions involving Iranian persons through U.S. persons or the U.S. financial system (C.7). These FAQs have been on OFAC's website since Implementation Day and can be found here https://www.treasury.gov/resource-center/sanctions/Programs/Documents/cpoa_faqs.pdf. I also attach a copy for your reference.

As you note, Iran is a high-risk jurisdiction and has been designated as such by the international standard setting body on anti-money laundering and counterterrorist financing — the Financial Action Task Force (FATF). In addition, the guidance we released on Implementation Day expressly states that the JCPOA does not impact the November 2011 finding by Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network that Iran is a Jurisdiction of Primary Money Laundering Concern (see FAQ C.14). The concerns that remain regarding Iran's economy, such as transparency issues, corruption, and regulatory obstacles, have given businesses and banks pause when considering whether to engage with Iran. We have been clear with audiences here and abroad that Iran has a lot of work to do to address these areas of concern if it wants to attract investment and trade. We are encouraging our European partners to make clear to Iran that Iran must address the shortcomings in its financial system if it wants to reintegrate into the international economy.

It is in our national security interest to ensure the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) works as intended. Iran has upheld its end of the deal, and we must uphold ours. The United States has fulfilled its commitments under the JCPOA to lift certain nuclear-related secondary sanctions and authorize certain activities in exchange for Iran verifiably living up to its commitments in the JCPOA. To that end, we published over 80 pages of guidance related to the sanctions that were lifted on Implementation Day of the JCPOA, as well as to the sanctions that remain in place. In addition, since Implementation Day, Treasury, in coordination with the Department of State, has engaged in outreach to government counterparts and private sector actors around the world to explain what sanctions have been lifted and what sanctions remain in place. When we speak to the private sector, including financial institutions, about the sanctions relief under the JCPOA, it is not to encourage them to do business with Iran, which is a business decision they need to make on their own. Rather the purpose of such discussions is to provide further clarity on what is permitted and the sanctions that remain in place, including those related to Iran's support for terrorism, its ballistic missile program, its human rights abuses, and its destabilizing activities in the region.

We appreciate your interest in this matter. If you have any questions please contact me or have your staff contact Luke Ballman, Office of Legislative Affairs, at (202) 622-1900.

THOMAS L. FRIEDMAN

Why a Gaza Invasion and 'Once and for All' Thinking Are Wrong for Israel

THE 16-2023

By Thomas L. Friedman
Opinion Columnist

When The Times's Israel correspondent Isabel Kershner recently asked an Israeli Army tank driver, Shai Levy, 37, to describe the purpose of the looming Israeli invasion of Gaza, he said something that really caught my ear. It was "to restore honor to Israel," he said. "The citizens are relying on us to defeat Hamas and remove the threat from Gaza once and for all." That caught my ear because, over the years, I've learned that four of the most dangerous words in the Middle East are "once and for all."

All these Islamist/jihadist movements — the Taliban, Hamas, ISIS, Al Qaeda, Palestinian Islamic Jihad, Hezbollah, the Houthis — have deep cultural, social, religious and political roots in their societies. And they have access to endless supplies of humiliated young men, many of whom have never been in a job, power or a romantic relationship; a lethal combination that makes them easy to mobilize for martyrdom.

And that's why, to this day, none of these movements have been eliminated once and for all. They can, though, be isolated, diminished, delegitimized and decapitated — as America has done with ISIS and Al Qaeda. But that requires patience, precision, lots of allies and alternatives that have legitimacy within the societies from which these young men emerge.

And so let me say loudly and clearly what I have been saying quietly in my past few columns: I am with President Biden when he told "60 Minutes" that it would be a "big mistake" for Israel "to occupy Gaza again."

I believe that such a move could turn Israel's humiliating tactical defeat at the hands of Hamas, which included unimaginable barbarism, into a long-term moral and military strategic crisis. It's one that could entrap Israel in Gaza, draw the U.S. into another Middle East war and undermine three of America's most important foreign policy interests right now: helping Ukraine wrestle free of Russia to join the West, containing China and shaping a pro-American bloc that includes Egypt, Israel, moderate Arab countries and Saudi Arabia, which could counterbalance Iran and fight the global threat of radical Islam.

If Israel goes into Gaza now, it will blow up the Abraham Accords, further destabilize two of America's most important allies (Egypt and Jordan) and make normalization with Saudi Arabia impossible — huge strategic setbacks. It will also enable Hamas to really fire up the West Bank and get a shepherd's war going there between Jewish settlers and Palestinians. Altogether, it will play directly into Iran's strategy of sucking Israel into imperial overstretch and in that way weakening the Jewish democracy from within.

Iran's No. 1 strategic objective with Israel has always been to ensure that Israel remains enmeshed in the West Bank, gets drawn into reoccupying southern Lebanon and, in Iran's most fevered dreams, reoccupies Gaza. Such an Israel would be so morally, economically and militarily entangled, it could never threaten Iran's nuclear program and hegemonic ambitions.

What should Israel do to ensure that an attack like the one launched by Hamas never happens again? I don't know right now. I just know that whatever the answer is, it's not mobilizing 360,000 traumatized Israeli reservists to launch into an urban war in one of the most densely populated places in the world. This will crush the Israeli economy and its international standing.

All these dilemmas must push Biden to sharpen his stance on the crisis.

Biden must realize that Benjamin Netanyahu is unfit to manage this war as a rational player. After such a colossal defeat, the most powerful and unifying thing Netanyahu could have done was call new Israeli elections in six or nine months — and announce that he would not be running; he is ending his career in politics, and therefore Israelis can trust that whatever decisions he makes about Gaza and Hamas now will have only the Israeli national interest in mind; he will not have in mind his own interest in staying out of jail on corruption charges, which requires his holding on to the right-wing crazies in his government (who actually fantasize about Israel reoccupying Gaza and rebuilding the Israeli settlements there) by chasing some big, short-term military victory that he can take to the Israeli electorate as a compensation for the debacle that just happened.

As one of Israel's best military writers, Amos Harel of Haaretz, wrote on Friday: "There is an unusual combination of people at the top in Israel. On one hand, there is an unfit prime minister, a nearly Shakespearean figure who is facing the personal danger of an ignominious conclusion to an arguably brilliant career. Facing him are a military brass who are smitten and consumed with guilt feelings (and if only Netanyahu would bother displaying a smidgen of that). That's not a perfect recipe for considered decision making."

If Israel were to announce today that it has decided for now to forgo an invasion of Gaza and will look for more surgical means to eliminate or capture Hamas's leadership while trying to engineer a trade for the more than 150 Israeli and other hostages whom Hamas is holding, it would not only avoid further traumatizing its own society, as well as Palestinian civilians in Gaza; it would also give Israel and its allies time to think through how to build — with Palestinians — a legitimate alternative to Hamas.

Such a move would earn Israel a lot of support globally and enable the world to see Hamas for what it is: the ISIS of the Palestinian territories.

"In today's world, whatever happens on the battlefield can be overturned in the information realm, so the battle of the story matters as much as the battle on the ground," said John Arquilla, a retired professor of strategy at the Naval Postgraduate School. "If Israel overreacts in Gaza, it will drain out whatever residual good feelings toward Israel exist, and that is Hamas's big bet. Israel has built so much, enjoys so much and contributes so much to the world and has so much more to contribute. To risk all that in an act of revenge or rage that will not fundamentally alter its strategic dilemmas is exceptionally unwise."

But, as I said, if Israel still decides it must enter Gaza to capture and kill Hamas's leadership, it must only do so if it has in place a legitimate Palestinian leadership to replace Hamas — so Israel is not left governing there forever. If that happens, every day that the sun doesn't shine in Gaza, the water doesn't flow, the electricity doesn't operate and hunger or disease becomes widespread will be the fault of every Israeli and even every Jew in the world. Is Israel ready for that burden?

While Biden is right to support Israel, he must get clear answers from Netanyahu now, before it's too late: Once Israel topples Hamas, who will govern Gaza? If Israel intends to govern Gaza, will it pay for the rebuilding of the infrastructure that it is destroying? And if not, who will? How long does Israel intend to allow the humanitarian crisis to unfold in southern Gaza? Does Israel plan to build settlements in Gaza? Does Israel respect Gaza's borders? Does it have a plan to help rebuild the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank?

The West Bank Palestinian Authority, under President Mahmoud Abbas, is weak, corrupt and increasingly illegitimate; it can't manage the West Bank, let alone Gaza — which is how Netanyahu wanted it, so he could always say he did not have any partner for peace.

But this is not all on Netanyahu. Believe it or not, folks, Palestinians have agency, too, and the corruption that the Palestinian Authority has tolerated, and the fact that Abbas banished the most effective leader it ever had, the former prime minister Salam Fayyad, is also a huge factor — something every friend of the Palestinians should be saying loudly, not just blaming Israel.

But all that said, Israel has to completely rethink how it relates to the Palestinians in the West Bank — and therefore the whole settler movement as well — if it wants to replace Hamas in Gaza. If the settler movement continues to set the terms of what is permissible in Israeli politics, another disaster is looming in the West Bank.

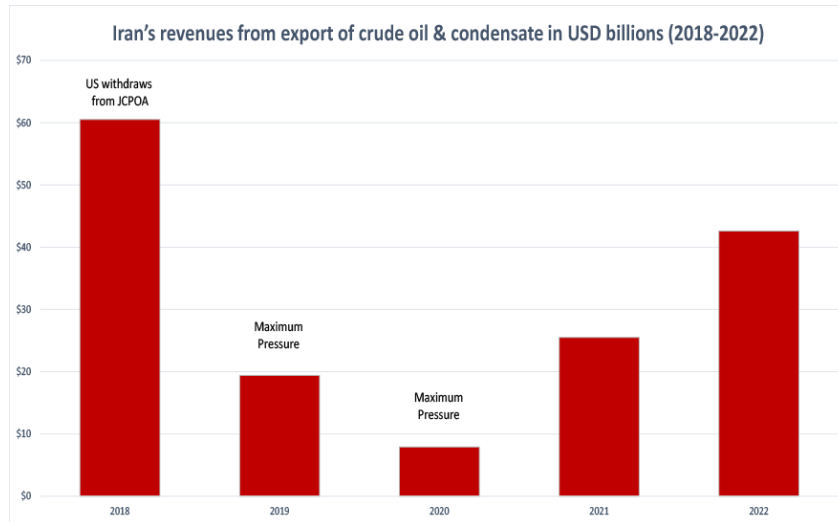

My bottom line? Just ask this question: If Israel announced today that it was forgoing, for now, a full-blown invasion of Gaza, who would be happy, and who would be relieved, and who would be upset? Iran would be totally frustrated, Hezbollah would be disappointed, Hamas would feel devastated — its whole war plan came to naught — and Vladimir Putin would be crushed, because Israel would not be turning up ammunition and weapons the U.S. needs to be sending to Ukraine. The settlers in the West Bank would be enraged.

Meanwhile, the parents of every Israeli soldier and every Israeli held hostage would be relieved, every Palestinian in Gaza caught in the crossfire would be relieved, and every friend and ally Israel has in the world — starting with one Joseph R. Biden — would be relieved. I rest my case.

TO IRAN'S COMPLICITY IN THE OCTOBER 7, 2023 HAMAS ATTACKS ON ISRAEL

Hamas wouldn't have been able to function at all had it not been for propping up by the Iranian regime.—NSC Coordinator for Strategic Communications John Kirby, Press Briefing October 11, 2023.

Iran is complicit in this attack in a broad sense because they have provided the lion's share of the funding for the military wing of Hamas, they have provided training, they have provided capabilities, they have provided support, and they have had engagement and contact with Hamas over years and years. And all of that has played a role in contributing to what we have seen.—National Security Advisor Jake Sullivan, Press Briefing October 10, 2023.

NOMINATIONS

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19, 2023

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:00 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Jeff Merkley, presiding.

Present: Senators Merkley [presiding], Cardin, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Booker, Schatz, Van Hollen, Ricketts, Young, and Cruz.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF MERKLEY, U.S. SENATOR FROM OREGON

Senator MERKLEY. Good morning. This hearing in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

Today we will consider the nominations of five highly qualified individuals for positions of importance and sensitivity for America's interests at home and abroad: Richard Riley to be Ambassador to Somalia, Mark Toner to be Ambassador to Liberia, David White to be Deputy Director of the Peace Corps, Ambassador Herro Mustafa Garg to be Ambassador to Egypt, and Paul Martin to be Inspector General at USAID.

Let me express my thanks on behalf of the committee to you, our nominees, for your dedicated public service and for being here today. And also thank you to your families. I know they share in the celebration of this moment just as they share in the challenges of your service. A grateful nation thanks to you all.

Before I introduce our nominees I will give a few words about what it means to fill these posts. Then I will turn that over to Mr. Young.

In Washington and around the world, including some of the most diplomatically delicate places critical U.S. posts remain empty. They sit empty at a time when democracy, freedom, and rule of law and human rights are under assault by extremists and authoritarians.

Currently, we have a backlog of at least 23 nominees pending on the Senate floor and many more in committee. Many of those nominees are career Foreign Service officers who have served in both Republican and Democratic administrations.

In the coming weeks and months we will inevitably add to that list. To give you a sense of the urgency of this backlog today as conflict engulfs the Middle East the United States currently does not have confirmed Ambassadors in Lebanon, in Egypt, and in Israel.

USAID remains without an assistant administrator for the Middle East and the State Department's coordinator for counterterrorism still awaits confirmation.

This is unacceptable. The United States cannot expect to lead the free world if the United States does not even have someone in the room. If we seek to build lasting peace around the world then we need talented and experienced public servants like those with us here today on the job as quickly as possible.

In these difficult times we must take action to expeditiously advance nominees for all of our critical national security posts.

I will now introduce the nominees after which I will proceed to opening statements from Senator Young and then testimonies from the nominees.

Richard Riley currently serves as minister-counselor for economic affairs at the U.S. Embassy in Ottawa, Canada. He is nominated to be our next Ambassador to Somalia, a country confronting many challenges but one which also has made fragile progress over the last decade.

Mark Toner most recently served as a minister-counselor for public diplomacy at the U.S. Embassy in Paris. Mr. Toner also serves as Peace Corps volunteer in Liberia—has also served as a Peace Corps volunteer in Liberia where he is nominated to be our next Ambassador.

David White currently serves as Special Assistant to the President in the White House Office of Presidential Personnel. He has served on the National Security Council where he facilitated government-wide efforts to resettle nearly 90,000 Afghan allies. He is nominated to be the next Deputy Director of the Peace Corps.

Ambassador Herro Mustafa Garg has served as a U.S. Ambassador to Bulgaria and was previously the deputy chief of mission at the U.S. Embassy in Portugal.

She grew up in North Dakota and speaks Kurdish, Arabic, Farsi, Greek, Hindi, Bulgarian, Portuguese, and, I am sure, English. Ambassador Garg is nominated to be our next Ambassador to Egypt, a critical post in today's turbulent Middle East.

And finally, we will consider Paul Martin, a lifelong public servant who has served as the Inspector General for NASA since 2009. He is nominated to be the next Inspector General at the United States Agency for International Development.

Congratulations again on your nominations and thank you for joining us today and your service to the nation. With that, let me turn things over to Senator Young for his opening remarks.

STATEMENT OF HON. TODD YOUNG,
U.S. SENATOR FROM INDIANA

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

First, I want to thank all of you. I want to thank you for your service. I want to thank your families for being here for this important hearing.

The sacrifices you make by accepting these posts are enormous, I know, and please know that we are grateful for your continued service.

Today's hearing comes at a time of great uncertainty and conflict throughout the world. These conflicts are going to have profound impacts on the posts you will take if confirmed.

In the Sahel and sub-Saharan regions of Africa the danger that is posed by terrorist groups continues to rise. While compounded by democratic backsliding, with our help our allies continue to combat this threat and we must continue to support them to defeat terrorism at its source.

Of course, the conflict in Israel is on the minds of everyone in this room. Many of the nominees here today will have to work with their counterparts to ensure this conflict does not grow to include other actors.

I hope that I can count on all of you to continue to support our ally Israel wherever appropriate. It is critical that we continue to prioritize humanitarian assistance throughout the world. Our aid has to continue to flow to those it is intended to reach and stay out of the hands of those who seek to abuse it.

Especially now we must work to make sure that our programs continue to be effective in promoting American values. The positions you are nominated to fill are some of the most critical we have in supporting U.S. interests abroad.

If confirmed it will be up to all of you to continue to support those interests. The geopolitical landscape of today is one of increasing uncertainty and I am confident that all of you are up to that challenge.

With that, I once again thank our nominees for being here today. I look forward to our discussion.

Chairman?

Senator MERKLEY. All nominees will now be offered the opportunity to provide their testimony. We ask them to be—each of you to be as brief and concise as possible, to summarize your statement within five minutes. Your full statements will be included in the record without objection.

And we will start with Mr. Riley. Welcome.

STATEMENT OF RICHARD H. RILEY IV, OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF SOMALIA

Mr. RILEY. Good morning, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, Senator Young, and distinguished members of the committee.

I am honored to come before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the federal republic of Somalia.

I am deeply grateful to the President and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me. My wonderful wife of 37 years, Cheryl Wong, my sister and brother Lisa Schwarz and Shawn Riley and their families are all watching online. I am also very proud that my beloved daughter Eden Riley is here with me today. I want to thank all my family for their love and support.

Mr. Chairman, I have been privileged to have served in the U.S. Foreign Service for 31 years. I joined in 1986 and have faithfully served in 12 countries in Asia, Europe, North Africa and the Middle East, including two tours in Iraq, three tours in Afghanistan, assistant chief of mission in Kabul, deputy chief of mission in Yemen, and last year as consul general in one of our most remote and dangerous posts the U.S. Consulate General in Peshawar, Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa.

I volunteered for these assignments because I always wanted to serve where our nation's vital interests are most at stake. I believe my extensive experience including senior leadership positions in four Muslim majority countries and four war zones has allowed me to work very successfully with our U.S. military, USAID, and other interagency colleagues to fight against terrorist threats worldwide.

Our work together in all these countries also strengthened good governance, supported democracy, and brought much needed humanitarian relief to millions of people. I believe my three decades of experience has prepared me well to lead our extraordinary interagency team in Somalia today.

Mr. Chairman, Somalia is making progress on its long road to recovery from state collapse. Since the May 2022 election of President Hassan Sheikh Mohamud we have seen renewed commitment on the part of Somali authorities and the Somali people to rid themselves of al-Shabaab and their extreme ideology.

Local communities supported by the Somali Government, African Union military forces and other international partners including, of course, the United States have retaken more territory in the last 14 months than in the previous several years combined.

Key transportation corridors have reopened, allowing for free movement of goods and services and economic revitalization.

However, al-Shabaab remains a resilient and capable adversary. Recent setbacks against the group have led the federal government to request a pause in the ongoing drawdown of African Union forces scheduled to withdraw completely by the end of next year.

Sustainable gains require the expansion of governance, service delivery, and political reconciliation. Fundamental questions related to federal structures and authorities and the constitution must be addressed.

Economic growth is also imperative to expand employment opportunities for the two-thirds of Somalis who are under the age of 30. Improved oversight of the banking sector, government revenue generation, public sector financial management are vital for the Government to access international financial institutions for lending for infrastructure development and poverty reduction and promote foreign direct investment.

We are encouraged that the Government in Mogadishu agrees these are top priorities and is taking action to address them. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting its efforts to advance good governance and institution building.

The United States has a stake in Somalia's success. We have a shared interest in eliminating al-Shabaab and ISIS from Somalia, which threaten U.S. persons and interests throughout East Africa.

A stable democratic Somalia would enable the return of hundreds of thousands of refugees requiring international assistance. There are strong connections between our peoples with hundreds of thousands of Somali Americans in communities across the U.S., many of whom returned to Somalia in recent years to help rebuild and pursue economic opportunities.

Mr. Chairman, the security challenges in Mogadishu remain significant. I have dedicated much of my career to advancing U.S. interest in countries under hazardous conditions and have always made the safety, security, and morale of my staff, U.S. personnel, and Americans my top priority.

If confirmed I am committed to ensure appropriate safeguards are in place to enable our Embassy to accomplish our mission safely and effectively.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, members of the committee, I thank you for this opportunity to appear before you. I look forward to your questions.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Riley follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF RICHARD H. RILEY

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to come before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Somalia. I am deeply grateful to the President and Secretary Blinken for their confidence in me.

My wonderful wife of 37 years, Cheryl Wong, sister and brother, Lisa Schwarz and Shawn Riley and their families are all watching online. I am also very proud that my beloved daughter, Eden Riley is here with me today. I want to thank all my family for their love and support.

Mr. Chairman, I've been privileged to serve in the U.S. Foreign Service for over 31 years. I joined in 1986 and have faithfully served in twelve countries in Asia, Europe, North Africa, and the Middle East, including two tours in Iraq, three in Afghanistan, Assistant Chief of Mission in Kabul, Deputy Chief of Mission for Yemen, and last year as Consul General in one of our most remote and dangerous posts—U.S. Consulate General Peshawar, Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa. I volunteered for these assignments because I always wanted to serve where our Nation's vital national interests are most at stake. I believe my extensive experience, including senior leadership positions in four Muslim-majority countries in four war zones, has allowed me to work very successfully with our U.S. Military, USAID, and other interagency colleagues to fight against terrorist threats worldwide. Our work together in all these countries also strengthened good governance, supported democracy, and brought much needed humanitarian relief to millions. I believe my three decades of experience has prepared me well to lead our extraordinary interagency team in Somalia today.

Somalia is making progress on its long road to recovery from state collapse. Since the May 2022 election of President Hassan Sheikh Mohamud, we have seen renewed commitment on the part of Somali authorities and the Somali people to rid themselves of al-Shabaab and their extreme ideology. Local communities supported by the Somali Government, African Union military forces, and other international partners, including the United States, have retaken more territory in the last 14 months than in the previous several years combined. Key transportation corridors have reopened, allowing for the free movement of goods and services and economic revitalization. However, al-Shabaab remains a resilient and capable adversary. Recent setbacks against the group have led the federal government to request a pause in the ongoing drawdown of African Union forces, scheduled to withdraw completely by the end of next year.

Sustainable gains require the expansion of governance, service delivery, and political reconciliation. Fundamental questions related to federal structures and authorities and the constitution must be addressed. Economic growth is also imperative to expand employment opportunities for the two thirds of Somalis under the age of 30. Improved oversight of the banking sectors, government revenue generation, and public sector financial management are vital for the Government to access international financial institution lending for infrastructure development and poverty reduction and promote foreign direct investment. We are encouraged that the current government in Mogadishu agrees these are top priorities and is taking action to address them. If confirmed, I am committed to supporting its efforts to advance good governance and institution building.

The United States has a stake in Somalia's success. We have a shared interest in eliminating al-Shabaab and ISIS from Somalia, which threaten U.S. persons and interests throughout East Africa. A stable, democratic Somalia would enable the return of hundreds of thousands of refugees requiring international assistance. There are strong connections between our peoples, with hundreds of thousands of Somali Americans in communities across the U.S., many of whom have returned to Somalia in recent years to help rebuild and pursue economic opportunities.

Somalia also continues to suffer the aftereffects of an historic drought that has destroyed the lives and livelihoods of thousands of Somalis. The tremendous generosity of the American people, who have funded the majority of international relief efforts, helped prevent famine and far greater death toll. If confirmed, I am committed to helping to break Somalia's dependency on international humanitarian aid by building the resilience of the Somali people to withstand natural disasters as well as the Somali Government's ability to respond.

The security challenges in Mogadishu remain significant. I have dedicated much of my career to advancing U.S. interests in countries under hazardous conditions and have always made the safety, security, and morale of my staff, U.S. personnel, and Americans my top priority. If confirmed, I am committed to ensure appropriate safeguards are in place to enable our Embassy to accomplish our mission safely and effectively.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, members of the committee, I thank you for this opportunity to appear before you. I look forward to your questions.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Mr. Riley.
And Mr. Toner?

STATEMENT OF MARK TONER, OF PENNSYLVANIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF LIBERIA

Mr. TONER. Chairman Merkley, Ranking Member Young, other members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today as the President's nominee to serve as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Liberia.

I am grateful for the trust and confidence the President and Secretary Blinken and placed in me with this nomination and look forward to work closely with the members of this committee and with your staffs to promote and protect U.S. interests in Liberia.

I would like to begin by acknowledging my family, my friends, my colleagues, all who helped get me here. That includes my parents, both members of the Greatest Generation, my siblings—all five of them—my wonderful daughters—all four of them—my large extended family, but most importantly of all my wife Mimi who is here with me today. She has never wavered in her support and her love through all the ups and downs of foreign service life.

I have a strong personal connection, as you mentioned, Mr. Chairman, with Liberia having served there as a Peace Corps volunteer in the late '80s. It was a formative experience that kindled my desire to become a Foreign Service Officer.

During that time, I had the privilege to work alongside many dedicated Liberian health professionals, people who showed up every day to work under difficult circumstances without any guarantee of a regular paycheck.

These are the people who continue to inspire me through their commitment, their courage, and their determination.

If confirmed it would be an honor to return now as the next Ambassador—U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Liberia with which United States shares a special bond rooted in our deep historical ties and preserved through our shared commitment to democracy, human rights, health security, economic prosperity, and regional stability.

Liberia is also a country shaped by years of conflict, terror, disease, and hardship. It speaks to the Liberian people's resilience when in 2017 the country achieved a significant milestone by carrying out the first peaceful transition of power between two elected presidents in over 70 years.

The next—that next or the next test is now underway as Liberians cast their ballots just last week to elect the next president. President Weah and his challengers pledged to hold an election that is peaceful, free, and fair and we, the United States, and our partners are doing everything in our power to hold them accountable for delivering on that commitment.

The United States is the largest bilateral donor to Liberia with more than $5 billion in bilateral assistance since 2003. That assistance has paid concrete dividends in the economic, education, security, and public health sectors.

But that progress has also been heavily eroded by growing lawlessness and corruption within the current administration. If confirmed I will lead our Embassy's efforts to hold corrupt government officials accountable and keep Liberia on a path to self-reliance so that ordinary Liberians can see the benefits of private-sector growth and accountable government and the country remains the United States' most steadfast partner in Africa.

If confirmed, my team and I will also work to increase investment opportunities for U.S. businesses and to promote inclusive economic development focused on job creation, providing much needed opportunities for a population in which the median age is 19 years.

But the onus ultimately is on Liberia's political leaders to increase transparency and tackle corruption seriously as both are integral to establishing the conditions necessary to attract responsible long-term foreign investment.

We must apply the same approach to human rights as Liberia's justice sector works to address reported cases of gender-based violence, some of the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking, as well as the legacy of war crimes.

These abuses must be confronted for their own sake as well as to ensure a broader system of accountability, good governance, and rule of law.

If confirmed, I look forward to building on the outstanding work the previous Ambassador and his excellent team have done to assist with the many challenges facing Liberia.

I am optimistic the United States can work with its partners in the Liberian Government and the people to help strengthen their democracy and secure a brighter, more prosperous future for the next generation of Liberians.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the opportunity to appear before you and the other members of the committee and I look forward to your questions.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity to appear before you and the other members of the committee, and I look forward to your questions.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Mr. Toner, and I am sure your experience in the Peace Corps in Liberia will be very significant and in terms of a foundation for understanding the issues in Liberia.

And speaking of the Peace Corps we now have Mr. David White nominated to be Deputy Director of the Peace Corps. Welcome.

STATEMENT OF DAVID E. WHITE, JR., OF NEW YORK, NOMINATED TO BE DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF THE PEACE CORPS

Mr. WHITE. Thank you.

Chairman Merkley, Ranking Member Young, and esteemed members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I want to begin by thanking President Biden for the honor and privilege of being nominated to serve as Deputy Director of the Peace Corps. I also want to thank Director Carol Spahn for her leadership of the agency and her confidence and support throughout this process.

I am also deeply grateful to the thousands of Peace Corps volunteers around the world for their service as well as the dedicated career staff who bring their best each day in support of those volunteers.

I would not be here without my family. I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to my parents, David and Kathy White, for their support, as well as to my wife, Dana McKinney White, for her partnership and so much more.

I also want to acknowledge my mother, my brother Dan, and my in-laws Fred and Ivy McKinney, and friends and colleagues who are in the audience today as well, and I appreciate their support.

"The Peace Corps represents some, if not all, of the best virtues in this society. It stands for everything that America has ever stood for. It stands for everything we believe in and hope to achieve in the world." Those words by Sargent Shriver, the first director of the Peace Corps, remain as true today as they were then.

The Peace Corps' commitment to public service is one that I have long admired and sought to emulate in my own career. I am a proud third-generation military veteran so perhaps it's no surprise that at the age of 17, I began my career in public service as a West Point cadet.

It was there that I deepened my desire to serve something greater than myself and it's where I learned the values of "Duty, Honor, Country."

After graduating from the Academy, I went on to serve as a cavalry officer in the U.S. Army. I had the immense privilege of leading women and men in combat in Kandahar, Afghanistan.

Without a doubt, my combat deployment was one of the most formative leadership tests of my career. Each day, I faced new challenges spurred by life in a combat zone—balancing our mission to establish and safeguard a fragile peace with the safety and wellbeing of my soldiers.

My service in Afghanistan cemented my belief that, despite our differences, be they language, culture, or beliefs, all people yearn for the same basic freedoms—that is, safety and security, economic opportunity, an education for their children, and the right to exercise their faith free from persecution.

Of course, this recognition of our common principles is not unique to my service in Afghanistan. As Peace Corps volunteers know first-hand, effective service requires a commitment to move past our differences and reach common ground to achieve a lasting impact.

This expanded worldview and greater mutual understanding benefits not only individual volunteers and their host communities—it benefits all Americans. Over the last 62 years, nearly a quarter of a million volunteers have partnered with local communities on development projects that have substantially improved countless lives.

Their work is evidence of the great importance of pursuing peace and friendship around the world. Whether it be building relationships with remote rural communities or partnering to recover from setbacks caused by COVID-19, the Peace Corps' work is as crucial as ever to meet the challenges of the day and prove the value of American leadership in the world.

If confirmed, I will work tirelessly with Director Spahn and my colleagues to achieve the Peace Corps' strategic goals of strengthening local capacity, sharing America with the world, and bringing the world back home.

In doing so, we have to recognize that there is more that we can and must do. We must do more to reimagine our approach to service so that volunteers and host communities alike are best matched to make the most lasting impact.

We must do more to build a Peace Corps that draws on the rich skills and experiences of its dedicated staff and volunteers to strive for equity and inclusion throughout our work.

And finally, we must do more to enhance the quality of our systems that support volunteers and deliver consistently on the health, safety, and service commitments we make in each partnership.

In closing, I am deeply grateful for your consideration in support of my nomination. If confirmed, I pledge to lead with integrity, compassion, and an unwavering commitment to the Peace Corps' mission to promote world peace.

Let us extend America's hand in friendship to show our partners, both old and new, that we are committed to tackling the world's toughest problems together.

Thank you, and I look forward to any questions that you may have.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Mr. White.

And we will turn from the Peace Corps to the nomination of Ambassador Mustafa Garg to be Ambassador in Egypt. Welcome.

STATEMENT OF HERRO MUSTAFA GARG, OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO ARAB REPUBLIC OF EGYPT

Ms. GARG. Chairman Merkley, Ranking Member Young, distinguished members of the committee, I am humbled to appear before you today as the President's nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Arab Republic of Egypt.

I am grateful to the President and to the Secretary for the confidence they have placed in me to undertake this role. I have tremendous respect for this committee and I have seen firsthand your strong commitment to advancing our national interests and, if confirmed, I look forward to continuing to work closely with you.

My family and I came to the United States as refugees from the Kurdistan region of Iraq when I was three. We had little more than the shirts on our backs and hopes and dreams.

My parents sacrificed so much for me and my siblings to be able to pursue that American dream. That is why I am particularly honored to appear before this committee as the first American Ambassador of Kurdish descent.

The approach of thinking big and maintaining optimism are what have shaped me into the person that I am today and, if confirmed, will guide my vision in Egypt. Family is extremely important to me and I am blessed to have the love and support of so many family members here with me today: my husband, Ravneesh, our two daughters, my parents, my three brothers, my sister-in-law, my niece, and, of course, friends and mentors.

It is with great pride that I have dedicated 25 years to public service, much of this in the Middle East. I studied Arabic in Jordan, worked in the UAE, Lebanon, and Iraq, and helped advance U.S. priorities in the Middle East at the White House under both Republican and Democratic administrations.

If confirmed, I look forward to bringing that experience to this important role in Egypt.

Senators, the remarks I had prepared to deliver earlier this month are different than the remarks I am delivering today. The unprecedented scale of brutality unleashed by Hamas on October 7th has led to an escalation with mounting deaths of Israeli and Palestinian civilians and over 30 nationalities still searching for or mourning the loss of loved ones.

This is truly a tragedy. Egyptians like to refer to their country as Om el Donia, the mother of the world. We are witnessing in real time Egypt's vital role as we strive to protect American citizens, secure the immediate and unconditional release of hostages, prevent harm to civilians, and prevent the conflict from spreading.

We are partnering with Egypt to address urgent humanitarian needs in Gaza and enable the safe passage of Americans and those who are at immediate risk through the Rafah crossing.

Equally important is the U.S.-Egypt partnership on an affirmative vision for a Middle East region focused on peace and security, negotiating a two-state solution and furthering regional integration.

Bilateral security cooperation with Egypt underwritten by FMF assistance for over four decades is an investment in self-reliant, capable, and accountable Egyptian armed forces aligned with U.S. priorities and values.

If confirmed I will implement this cooperation while continuously reflecting that the U.S.-Egypt relationship will be strongest with tangible and lasting progress on protecting human rights and respect for fundamental freedoms, in particular further releases of political prisoners and reforms to pretrial detention.

I pledge to consistently raise these important concerns with the Government of Egypt and to prioritize engagement with Egyptian civil society.

The U.S.-Egypt partnership is multifaceted and constantly adapting to meet present challenges. Today Egypt is the world's largest wheat importers on the frontlines of the global repercussions of Putin's brutal aggression.

Egypt and the United States have stood together in support for Ukraine, and from my service as Ambassador to Bulgaria I know well how vital our partnerships are to address Russia's destabilizing role.

The U.S. Embassy in Cairo is among the largest in the world with a talented and dedicated team of American and local staff that, if confirmed, I would be proud to lead, and thank you to the staff for their 24/7 work right now. Thank you to them and thank you to their families.

The safety and security of the Embassy team and U.S. citizens in Egypt, if confirmed, will always be my foremost priority.

Thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today and I look forward to your questions.

I have tremendous respect for this committee and have seen first-hand your strong commitment to advancing our national interests. I studied Arabic in Jordan, worked in the UAE, Lebanon, and Iraq, and helped advance U.S. priorities in the Middle East at the White House under both Republican and Democratic Administrations. If confirmed, I look forward to bringing that extensive experience to this important role in Egypt.

The unprecedented scale of brutality unleashed by Hamas on October 7 has led to an escalation, with mounting deaths of Israeli and Palestinian civilians and over 30 nationalities still searching for or mourning the loss of loved ones. This is truly a tragedy that underlines the importance of having confirmed ambassadors in place throughout the region, to elevate our ability to maintain sustained engagement and advancement of U.S. national interests.

Egyptians like to refer to their country as "Om el Donia," the Mother of the World. We are witnessing in real time Egypt's vital role as we strive to protect American citizens, secure the immediate and unconditional release of hostages, prevent harm to civilians, and prevent the conflict from spreading. We are partnering with Egypt on a crucial vision for addressing urgent humanitarian needs in Gaza and enabling the safe passage of Americans and those who are at immediate risk through the Rafah crossing. Bilateral security cooperation with Egypt, underwritten by Foreign Military Financing assistance over four decades, is an investment in self-reliant, capable, and accountable Egyptian Armed Forces aligned with U.S. priorities and values. If confirmed, I will implement this cooperation while continuously reflecting that the U.S.-Egypt relationship will be strongest with tangible and lasting progress on protecting human rights and respect for fundamental freedoms, in particular, releases of political prisoners and reforms to pre-trial detention. I pledge to consistently raise these important concerns with the Government of Egypt, to prioritize engagement with Egyptian civil society, and to support those working to build a prosperous and secure future for all Egyptians.

As this ongoing cooperation reflects, the U.S.-Egypt partnership is multifaceted and constantly adapting to meet present challenges. Today, Egypt, as the world's largest wheat importer is on the frontlines of the global repercussions of Putin's brutal aggression, grappling with spiraling food prices and renewed agricultural supply disruptions since Russia's withdrawal from the Black Sea Grain Initiative. Egypt and the United States have stood together in support for Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity, and a shared urgency to achieve a just and lasting peace. From my service as Ambassador to Bulgaria, I know well how vital our partnerships are to address Russia's destabilizing role.

Amid the costs of Russia's war, the Government of Egypt developed a comprehensive economic reform plan that won support from the IMF last year and, with U.S. backing, unlocked agreement on a $3 billion support package. If implemented, these reforms would stabilize foreign exchange markets and facilitate private sector-led growth. If confirmed, I will support implementation of these crucial steps to help Egypt weather this crisis, improve the investment climate, and promote even stronger commercial ties for U.S. firms with Egypt, our largest export market in Africa.

The U.S. Embassy in Cairo is among the largest in the world, with a talented and dedicated team of American and local staff that, if confirmed, I would be proud to lead. The safety and security of the Embassy team and U.S. citizens in Egypt will always be my foremost priority.

Thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today and I look forward to your questions.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Ambassador.

And we are now going to turn to Mr. Martin, and Mr. Martin is being nominated to be the Inspector General of AID, the Agency for International Development.

Welcome.

STATEMENT OF THE HON. PAUL K. MARTIN, OF MARYLAND, NOMINATED TO BE INSPECTOR GENERAL, UNITED STATES
AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. MARTIN. Great. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Young, and members of the committee.

I am honored to be nominated to serve as Inspector General for the United States Agency for International Development. If confirmed I commit to working closely with this committee to provide timely and comprehensive information related to the programs and operations of USAID and the other agencies under the OIG's oversight mandate.

At the outset I would like to recognize my family for their love and support. My wife, Rebekah Liu, and our daughters Anna, Emily, and Grace.

I also want to express deep appreciation to my colleagues at the NASA Office of Inspector General whom I have had the pleasure of working with for the past 14 years.

I have dedicated the bulk of my professional life to public service at three important government agencies: the United States Sentencing Commission, the Department of Justice Office of the Inspector General, and now NASA OIG, and since late March 2020 I have also served as vice chair of the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee, an entity created by Congress to support independent oversight of the $5 trillion in emergency pandemic federal relief.

As the committee considers my nomination I am energized by the prospect of working with, learning from, and helping lead USAID OIG's dedicated staff located across five continents as the office works to safeguard the integrity and effectiveness of the U.S. Government's international development and global humanitarian assistance efforts.

If confirmed, I would look to increase the OIG's oversight of the tens of billions of dollars in assistance provided by USAID to Ukraine since the onset of Russia's invasion in February '22.

Congress and the American public deserve to know that the OIG is laser focused on ensuring that USAID programs in Ukraine are working as intended and are not compromised by corruption.

Similarly, the OIG must continue rigorous oversight of U.S. foreign assistance programs in many other vulnerable parts of the world through its audits, inspections, and investigations and this would include investigations into misuse of USAID funds programmed through nongovernment organizations and the United Nations.

A high priority would be oversight of USAID programs in Gaza and the West Bank, particularly any allegations that U.S.-provided humanitarian assistance has been diverted to terrorist organizations.

Finally, the OIG must maintain a cooperative yet independent working relationship with USAID leadership while building a professional environment at the OIG that attracts and retains talented employees who have a heart for the office's oversight mission.

I am thankful for and humbled by this nomination and the opportunity, if confirmed, to serve alongside the USAID OIG team to strengthen America's foreign assistance programs around the globe.

Thank you.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Martin follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. PAUL K. MARTIN

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Risch, and members of the committee, I am honored to be nominated to serve as Inspector General for the United States Agency for International Development (USAID). If confirmed, I commit to working closely with this committee in providing timely and comprehensive information relating to the programs and operations of USAID, and the other agencies under the USAID OIG's oversight mandate: the Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC), the Inter-American Foundation (IAF), and the U.S. African Development Foundation (USADF).

At the outset, I would like to recognize my family for their steadfast love and support: my wife, Rebekah Liu, a senior attorney at the Securities and Exchange Commission; and our daughters Anna, Emily, and Grace. I also want to express deep appreciation to my colleagues at the NASA Office of Inspector General (OIG) for their professionalism and accomplishments overseeing the world's premier science, space exploration, and aeronautics agency.

I have dedicated the bulk of my professional life to public service. I moved to Washington, D.C. in 1985 after a 3-year stint as a reporter at a South Carolina daily newspaper. At that time, President Reagan had appointed then-U.S. District Court Judge William W. Wilkins, Jr. as Chairman of the newly formed United States Sentencing Commission, and I was fortunate enough to be one of the agency's first employees. I worked alongside Judge Wilkins, then-Circuit Court Judge Stephen Breyer, five other Commissioners, and a handful of staff to create a new agency that developed the initial set of federal sentencing guidelines. Among other roles, I served as the Commission's Deputy Staff Director where I helped supervise a staff of more than 100 lawyers, researchers, guidelines trainers, and data technicians. Along the way, I attended law school at night at Georgetown University where I received a Juris Doctor but, much more significantly, where I met my wife, Rebekah.

I moved to the Department of Justice (DOJ) OIG in 1998. During my time there, I served in a variety of positions, including Deputy Inspector General for 6 years. I was proud to work with my OIG colleagues in conducting critical oversight of DOJ activities, particularly the transformation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks.

In November 2009, I was honored to be confirmed by the Senate as Inspector General for NASA where I currently work with 190 dedicated auditors, investigators, attorneys, data analysts, and support personnel to provide high-quality oversight of the nation's civilian space program.

Finally, since late March 2020 at the outset of the COVID-19 pandemic, I have also served as Vice Chair of the Pandemic Response Accountability Committee (PRAC), an entity created by Congress to coordinate independent oversight of the $5 trillion in emergency federal pandemic relief spending.

As the committee considers my nomination, I am energized by the prospect of working with, learning from, and helping lead USAID OIG's dedicated staff located across five continents as the office continues to ensure the integrity and effectiveness of the U.S. Government's international development and global humanitarian assistance efforts.

If confirmed, I see four main areas where the OIG can continue to add significant value:

- First, the OIG must continue its aggressive oversight of the tens of billions of dollars in assistance provided by USAID to Ukraine and its people since the onset of Russia's invasion in February 2022. Congress and American taxpayers deserve the OIG's full attention to ensure that USAID programs in Ukraine are working as intended, account for risk, and are not compromised by corruption. This likely means increasing the office's tempo of audits, evaluations, and investigations into USAID funds provided to Ukraine and expanding the office's joint oversight efforts with our OIG colleagues at the Departments of Defense and State under the Lead Inspector General authority.
- Second, in addition to Ukraine, the OIG must also continue rigorous oversight of U.S. foreign assistance programs in the many other vulnerable parts of the world. To me, successful oversight is oversight that (1) is helpful to agency management and contains practical recommendations for improvement; (2) provides substantive, timely, and relevant to Congress and the public; and (3) ensures transparency and accountability about how USAID and the agencies under the OIG's oversight purview spend taxpayer dollars. As world events prompt emergency and long-term responses from USAID, the OIG should highlight findings from its past work to inform USAID on the key risks and challenges when it establishes new, or expands existing, programs.
- Third, the OIG, through its global ability to conduct investigations overseas, must continue to ensure the integrity of U.S. foreign assistance efforts by holding accountable those who corrupt or defraud taxpayer-funded programs. This includes investigations into misuse of U.S. aid dollars programmed through both nongovernmental organizations and the United Nations. Against the backdrop of the recent horrific terrorist attacks in Israel, OIG oversight of USAID programs in Gaza and the West Bank, including investigations into allegations that USAID dollars have been diverted to terrorist organizations, must continue to be a priority. These efforts will fall in large measure on the professionalism and expertise of our investigative and audit teams dedicated to the region.
- Finally, in fulfilling its statutory oversight role, the OIG must maintain a professional, cooperative, yet independent working relationship with USAID, MCC, IAF, and USADF leadership and staff. Looking inward, the OIG also must continue to build a highly professional environment that attracts and retains the most talented employees with the right mix of skills and a heart for the OIG's oversight mission.

I am thankful for and humbled by this nomination and the opportunity, if confirmed, to serve alongside the USAID OIG team to strengthen American foreign assistance programs around the globe.

Thank you.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Mr. Martin. We all know how important the role of inspector generals are, as you noted, to make sure that the aid gets where it needs to go and does not feed any form of corruption. Thank you.

Before we start our series of five-minute rounds I have a few questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and that we will expect and will be seeking from you, and I would ask each of you to provide just a yes or no answer.

And so I will pose the question, just have each of you respond to it. Do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. Do you commit to keep this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator MERKLEY. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator MERKLEY. Do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by committee and its designated staff?

[All witnesses answer in the affirmative.]

Senator MERKLEY. As you imagined, yes is the answer we were hoping from each of you.

[Laughter.]

Senator MERKLEY. So thank you very much.

We are now going to start our five-minute rounds of questions. I am hoping to get a question in to each of your during my five minutes, which means your answer to complicated things has to be pretty brief—a challenge.

But here we go, starting with you, Mr. Riley. Somalia has not held a one-person one-vote election. Its government institutions are considered weak and sometimes corrupt. The relationship between the federal government and the states remains complicated.

If confirmed how do you intend to help Somalia develop democratic, accountable, transparent, and efficient institutions?

Mr. RILEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your question.

I would focus on the three mutually reinforcing goals that we have with our U.S. policy currently in Somalia and if I am confirmed I will certainly continue to push for achievement of those three goals.

The first is building security. That has to happen. It is continuing to happen as we continue to support a number of ways which I can elaborate later as we start to help the government build up its security forces.

The second overarching goal is to establish good governance. Without good governance you are not going to have the institutions necessary to deliver the services and the things that the people of Somalia need.

And the third goal is to foster inclusive economic growth such that the Government can generate—start to generate its own revenue so that it can wean itself off of international assistance that it is currently dependent heavily on.

So those are the overarching goals that we have in Somalia, Mr. Chairman, and I would continue to push if confirmed to achieve those goals.

I would say that under President Hassan Sheikh Mohamud, who came into office in May of 2022, we are making—they are making progress in all of these areas. There are some fits and starts in all of this but I would say that the president has pushed forward on all of these areas which are synonymous with the approach that we as the United States are taking and trying to assist the president and his government both at the federal level and the federal member state level to achieve these goals.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Mr. RILEY. Yes, sir.

Senator MERKLEY. I did travel to Somalia and I am well aware of the enormous complexities and I know you appreciate them as well.

Mr. RILEY. Yes, sir.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Turning to Mr. Toner, what is your assessment of that recent election process and there is a new round—the final round, I think—coming next month.

You referred to the goal of the elections being peaceful, free, and fair. I think these are the first that are not conducted under U.N. supervision since the end of the civil war.

What is your message to Liberians and to voters as we prepare for this runoff?

Mr. TONER. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I hope—respectfully, I hope you will understand my reluctance to pronounce on the conduct of the elections. The first round took place last week. Those votes are still being tabulated by the national electoral committee so I do not want to get out ahead of the process.

Senator, I would only add that our message—the U.S. Government's message has been clear and consistent throughout the election season and that has been that the Liberian people deserve elections that are free, fair, and peaceful.

I would add that the first round seems to have gone off without any real cases of violence and that is encouraging.

If confirmed, Senator, I will make it my priority to work with the new leadership of Liberia on the range of the number of challenges it faces, Senator, which is why it is so important that the Liberian people see that next administration as credible and which is why the process matters so much.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. And I know the elections are being held in the context of some democratic backsliding across the continent and an election with serious deficiencies in neighboring Sierra Leone. A lot of work to do there. The integrity in elections is so important to the legitimacy of the Government.

Mr. White, in your testimony you said that the Peace Corps proves the value of American leadership and has the strategic goals of increasing local capacity, sharing America with the world, and bringing the world back home.

I went to Vietnam this last year and they had their first class of Peace Corps ever. So as I was growing up we had generations of young Americans going to Vietnam to fight a war and now we have a class that is there and a new class arriving—that are arriving and I believe they are only dedicated to English proficiency—supporting English.

Can you give a little sense of how expanding the Peace Corps into Vietnam serves these goals that you have mentioned?

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

I will tell you that I know that my colleagues at the Peace Corps are, of course, very excited about the tremendous progress in Vietnam. In the case such as these, of course, we are looking at models like South Korea and we think of Vietnam's future as being a very bright one.

More broadly, I do believe in the capacity for good of American global leadership. Peace Corps, of course, plays an important role in that. When I think about our national security objectives, our foreign policy priorities, I think about the three D's, so to speak—defense, diplomacy and development.

Peace Corps has a huge role to play in both diplomacy because the volunteers are really grassroots diplomats, if you will, and development as well, from everything from community economic development to sustainable agriculture and so many other respects.

And so, I would say the Peace Corps through Vietnam and other areas in the Indo-Pacific and around the globe has a very large role to play and I thank you for its support.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

My time is up and I am going to ask everyone else if you cannot get—I got that question in just under the five-minute bell. Thank you for your response. And I will ask everyone to stick to the five minutes.

I apologize, Ambassador, that I did not get to you yet, and Mr. Martin, but there may be more opportunity to do so.

Let me hand the microphone over to my colleague, Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Chairman.

Ambassador Mustafa Garg, the ongoing conflict between Israel and Gaza will have consequences throughout the region. Egypt will have an important role to play so I want to first touch on ensuring the safe exit of U.S. citizens and other nationals from Gaza through the Rafah crossing between Gaza and Egypt. I know you alluded to this in your testimony.

Ambassador, for starters, if confirmed will you commit to prioritizing this mission and can you tell the committee what on-the-ground actions our Embassy in Cairo can take to support this overall mission?

Ms. GARG. Thank you very much, Mr. Senator, for that very important question.

Absolutely. The safety and security of American citizens is an utmost priority. I am heartened by the fact that the President has nominated Ambassador Satterfield to be our Special Envoy in the region.

Ambassador Satterfield is someone I have known for over 20 years and he is actively working on this issue, and as you have seen both the President and the Secretary have been actively engaged with all of the parties to find a way forward.

My understanding is that upon his return from Israel the President had a good conversation with President el-Sisi and they have agreed on allowing the humanitarian assistance into Gaza and our citizens out. They are working on the mechanism to do that but the general agreement is there.

Senator YOUNG. Maybe you could unpack some of that. By the way, Ambassador Satterfield, I would say, is an inspired choice. His work was exemplary in Yemen and I know in other areas. So glad you will be working actively with him should you be confirmed.

What role specifically do you believe the United States can play in working with the Egyptians to ensure that this humanitarian access is sustained? What role should the Embassy take in conducting oversight and maintaining control over aid that is provided?

Ms. GARG. So our role a very, very active role. My understanding about the situation on the ground at the border is that it is fluid, it is layered, and the concerns of the Egyptians regarding the influx of the refugees, the border security and, of course, Israel's own security is extremely important.

So all of that combined is, unfortunately, delaying what we would have loved to have seen earlier this week, the aid going in and our citizens coming out along with the other people at risk.

So active engagement with all of the parties and with the U.N. is extremely important to make sure this important mission is achieved.

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you. My expectation will be that you and other members of the administration will have the tools they need to be successful.

Ms. GARG. Thank you, sir.

Senator YOUNG. But to the extent that this committee can be helpful I know you—

Ms. GARG. Thank you, sir.

Senator YOUNG [continuing]. And others will let us know as soon as possible.

Mr. Martin, in light of this conflict between Israel and Hamas and Hamas' control over Gaza it is going to increasingly be important for us to impose the strictest scrutiny over our assistance to Gaza but also to the West Bank.

If confirmed do you commit to taking additional steps including onsite verification where possible to ensure that U.S.-funded or enabled assistance to the Palestinian people is not diverted or even used for terrorist activities?

Mr. MARTIN. Absolutely, Senator. It would be one of the highest priorities of the office.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

And then, if confirmed, what actions will you take to pursue a comprehensive and forensic audit of U.S. assistance to Gaza and the West Bank including through multilateral agencies like UNRWA to ensure that past funds have not been diverted or abused by the leadership of the Palestinian Authority?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir. Good question. That is one of the questions I have coming in—if confirmed into the organization.

So I think the USAID OIG has ongoing work in several of those areas and so I look to, if confirmed, understanding what that work is and increasing that work because the transparency through the United Nations and other agencies is critically important.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I am glad you are looking into that. Would you commit to once you get clarity on that matter reporting back to the committee what sort of actions you might be able to take in that regard?

Mr. MARTIN. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Senator Young.

Senator Schatz?

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much, Chairman.

Mr. White, thank you for your willingness to serve. The United States is trying to build and rebuild goodwill in the Pacific after years of neglect, and people to people ties are central especially in island nations.

I understand at least four countries—FSM, Kiribati, the Marshalls and Palau—have invited the Peace Corps back. Do I have your commitment to prioritize these requests?

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

If confirmed, I will certainly work with you carefully and closely to ensure that we are prioritizing important countries.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you. I also understand that the Solomon Islands agreement has hit some roadblocks. Do you—are you tracking that at all yet?

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Senator. I am not privy to the details there. But if confirmed, I will certainly get you that information.

Senator SCHATZ. Okay. And I think this is workable but it is a roadblock and I think one of the experiences we have had over the last I would say eight-ish years is that relatively solvable problems fester just from a lack of personal attention and sometimes physical presence in the region.

I know as well as anyone how hard it is to get to Honolulu in 10 hours if you are lucky, and then it is going to be another, in some instances, 10, 15, 18 hours depending on layovers and reliability and all the rest of it.

So I really do think physical presence of the United States Government manifested by the Peace Corps is critical and I am hoping I can have your commitment on that.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, Senator. Absolutely.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

Ms. Garg, Egypt is ranked 168th out of 180 countries by Reporters Without Borders and is currently imprisoning 19 journalists.

With the challenges posed by wartime misinformation and disinformation I think it is—we have seen in the last couple of weeks how rotten the information ecosystem has become and I would like you to speak both to press freedom but sort of the first cousin of that is just finding a reliable source of information and a dissemination strategy that will actually work because I do not think you can play whack-a-mole with all the nonsense out there.

I think what you have to do is just be reliable and hope that that has its own gravitational pull. So I am wondering if you can give me your thoughts in that area.

Ms. GARG. Thank you very much, Mr. Senator, for that very important question and I am going to respond in two parts.

The first is on the very important rights of journalists and freedom of expression, which throughout my career I have defended so I will continue to do so.

The second is on the misinformation piece, and coming from Bulgaria where that was a very important part of the job as well I agree with you completely that it is incumbent upon us not only to find reliable sources but to be the ones who do the speaking ourselves to talk about the truth, and I will definitely use my podium and Arabic to try to get that message across in the region because it is vitally important that we are also telling our side of the story.

Senator SCHATZ. So I hear your commitment and I appreciate your commitment. But I am—I figured you would say that.

I guess my question is what do we do specifically, because I think everyone operates under the principle that press freedom is essential and especially in times of conflict it is essential to get good information out.

I am interested in, okay, so how do we operationalize that other than every time we have a bilateral talk about press freedom, prioritize imprisoned and imperiled journalists. All of those are things that we currently do but, frankly, the information environment and the press freedom environment continues to deteriorate.

So how do we change course? Do you have any techniques or strategies or even preliminary thoughts along those lines?

Ms. GARG. I can just tell you from previous experience some thoughts on that, sir, which is if confirmed and after working with the team on the ground and evaluating the environment, looking at what additional training might be necessary, looking at which outlets—for example—maybe it is online outlets that might have more reliable sources rather than TV, for example.

So once that survey is done and then it would be to try to use the outlets that have greater credibility in order to get our messages across.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

Just one final thought, and I do not mean this in a hectoring or critical way. I do not think we have a theory of the case yet. I do not think we have a theory of the case. I do not think the administration does yet. I think this challenge has emerged so quickly that it is understandable that we are still in a sort of strategy development phase.

But let us develop the strategy because I am unsatisfied with even my own response, which is essentially, hey, what about press freedom. That is fine. But everyone is going to nod and say, yes, press freedom is important and things keep going in the wrong direction.

So I do think we need to rethink all of our strategic approaches to communications generally but press freedom in particular. Thank you.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Senator Schatz.

Senator Ricketts?

Senator RICKETTS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I want to thank all of our nominees here today for your commitment to serve our great nation and for your past service and to your families and especially Foreign Service folks.

As the previous governor of Nebraska we went on a number of trade missions and the Foreign Service folks who helped us out in all those countries just did a fantastic job and really appreciate the sacrifices you make living away from the country, living away from friends and family and that sort of thing.

And then, Mr. White, thank you for your service to our country in the military. Really appreciate that. And Ambassador Mustafa Garg, thank you for sharing your story about coming to America and your family's story and, again, reminding us what a great country we have where someone who has got big dreams and willing to work and achieve so much. So thank you for reminding us what a great country we have.

Since the brutal and illegal war that Russia launched on Ukraine we have seen the United States Congress appropriate about $100 billion in aid to Ukraine and this aid has been absolutely instrumental for Ukraine's ability to be able to resist that terrible invasion.

And with that great aid also needs—comes the need for great oversight. We got to make sure that the money is being spent well and especially in the areas if we think about humanitarian and economic aid because it is not as tangible to see the results there or to be able to account for those results.

And the American taxpayers need to know where their money is going and so it is important that we have strong oversight for the amount of dollars that we are spending there.

So I am guessing, Mr. Martin, you know this question is coming to you.

Mr. MARTIN. I was afraid of that.

[Laughter.]

Senator RICKETTS. Obviously, you have got a long career and coming from the private sector—not even everybody in the private sector understands the importance of oversight and auditors. But, obviously, the Inspector General is a very key role that we have to have to be able to make sure the tax dollars are being spent appropriately.

Obviously, you are going to be a part of the joint strategic oversight plan, which is part of what the inspector's duty roles in the DOD and the State Department.

But what are your plans with regard to further oversight in Ukraine?

Mr. MARTIN. Right. Thank you, sir.

So there is individual responsibility for the three offices of inspector generals: State Department, Department of Defense, and USAID OIG. So we each have our individual audits and investigations ongoing.

But then collectively the three offices come together and form what is called Operation Atlantic Resolve, which is this overseas contingency operation mechanism where the three IGs work with Ukrainian officials on the ground to track the funds, both military and humanitarian assistance, to Ukraine to make sure they are being used for their intended purpose.

Again, if confirmed I would go in, see what the USAID is doing, no doubt increase the efforts that we are doing individually, and then work cooperatively with State and the Department of Defense IG.

Senator RICKETTS. What do you view is going to be the biggest challenges to doing that in Ukraine? What are going to be the obstacles for oversight?

Mr. MARTIN. Yeah, I think it is actually boots on the ground. USAID OIG, as my understanding, has two criminal investigators at the Embassy in Kyiv and we would like to get up to six more auditors and investigators on the ground.

But the number of folks who are permitted at the Embassy is controlled for security reasons by the State Department. So we need more boots on the ground permanently there.

Senator RICKETTS. So is there something Congress can do to be helpful on that? For example, if we create a special investigator general or whatever is that something that—Inspector General, is that something that would be helpful to be able to get more boots on the ground or are there other things we could be doing?

Mr. MARTIN. I actually think creating a special Inspector General for Ukraine oversight would be less helpful.

Senator RICKETTS. Really?

Mr. MARTIN. Because you have the three inspector generals who have the authority and who already have the mechanisms and the agreements with Ukrainian officials. To superimpose a new inspector general on top of that I think would be counterproductive—the amount of time it would take to set that office up, the inevitable conflicts with the other inspector generals who are doing work there. So I think it is best to continue to rely on the three offices of inspector general who currently have jurisdiction there.

Senator RICKETTS. So is there anything else Congress can be doing to be able to be helpful to make sure we are providing you the resources you need for oversight? Because we—I think right now we have supplied about $13 million to be able to do oversight. Is there anything else we need to be doing?

Mr. MARTIN. No. I think, again, it is the security situation on the ground for us getting more individuals, more auditors, more investigators in there. My sense is that the offices of inspector general are funded well enough at this point but I would suggest that any additional supplemental appropriations to Ukraine have a small sliver for the oversight component as well.

Senator RICKETTS. So it sounds like what you want to do, though, is work with the State Department to get more of those inspectors in there because they are the ones that are the gatekeepers on how many can get in. Is that accurate?

Mr. MARTIN. A hundred percent.

Senator RICKETTS. All right. Great. Well, thank you very much, Mr. Martin. I appreciate it.

Mr. MARTIN. Thank you, sir.

Senator RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman?

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Senator Ricketts.

And now we are turning to Senator Murphy.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Let me add my thanks to the entire panel for your careers of service and your willingness to continue to serve. None of these are easy places that you are headed to.

I wanted to spend a little bit more time on Egypt with you, Ambassador Garg. Many of us who have received briefings about the inability to flow humanitarian assistance into Gaza have been disturbed at how hard it has been to convince our ally—our ally Egypt—to do the right thing and allow for aid to flow.

This is a country that we, obviously, spend over a billion dollars on second only to Israel in terms of taxpayer commitment to military support.

I was a little concerned about your opening statement in which you said that our security cooperation with Egypt is an investment in, quote, “self-reliant, capable, and accountable Egyptian Armed Forces aligned with U.S. priorities and values.” It does not feel like the Egyptian military is aligned with U.S. values.

This is a military that was willing to do a pretty large-scale deal with Russia, only undone by vigorous, tactical U.S. diplomacy. This is a military that is used by the regime to try political dissenters in military courts.

Reports are that there are upwards of 30,000, 40,000, 50,000 people in jail for their political views and the military is very much a part of that repressive—that campaign of repression.

So I just wanted to ask you to drill down on that statement. It is hard for me to imagine that you believe that the Egyptian military is aligned with U.S. values. Everything we see suggests that they are not, and we need an Ambassador in Egypt who understands that we are in a fight to try to make sure that our dollars ultimately try to press and enact real reform.

Ms. GARG. Senator, I agree with you that this is a significant investment. I would say that there is a tremendous range of administration priorities where Egypt does have a significant role, whether it is in Ukraine, whether it is elections in Libya, whether it is the conflict in Sudan and, of course, what we are seeing in Gaza right now, whether it is counterterrorism in the Sinai, whether it is non-proliferation, and it is hard to imagine a path forward on any of these issues where we bypass Egypt.

Senator MURPHY. So that is not what I am asking. What I am asking is if—I agree, we have a number of important lines of effort with Egypt. My question is do you believe that the Egyptian military shares our values?

Ms. GARG. We do believe that the—on the specific case of what you are talking about in Gaza the Egyptian Government does want to see aid to enter and our citizens and other people at risk to leave.

The mechanism is in discussion right now between us, the Egyptians, the Israelis, and other international organizations. But we do believe they have that same goal. It is the mechanism that is still being worked out.

The President did have a good conversation with el-Sisi yesterday. We do have the commitment for that to happen.

Senator MURPHY. Okay. Maybe—

Ms. GARG [continuing]. On human rights—

Senator MURPHY [continuing]. Okay.

Ms. GARG [continuing]. I share with you, Senator Murphy, the concerns and this is an issue—as you know, is a priority for the administration. It will be a priority for me.

Human rights is a part of national security. They are not two separate things. They are together, and I commit to continuing this discussion with the Egyptians so that we do see tangible progress on these very important issues that will strengthen our relationship in the future.

Senator MURPHY. So before my time—before my time is up—so maybe it is hard to make a broad statement on whether they share our values or not because as you point out there are areas in which we hope that they do share our values like getting humanitarian aid into Gaza.

But on the issue of the treatment of political dissent—let me try to narrow it so that we can come to a conclusion—on the issue of treatment of political dissent do you believe that the Egyptian military shares our values on how we treat military—how we treat political dissent?

Ms. GARG. Senator, there is no doubt there is room for improvement there. There is no doubt on that issue, and if confirmed I commit to doing what I can along with the Embassy to really make progress on that very, very important issue of political dissent.

Senator MURPHY. I think you are in a tough spot. You have to be careful about what you say. I appreciate that. I think you are going to do a great job on the ground. I want our diplomats to tell the truth about what is happening in politically repressive countries and maybe that will be a little bit easier in the future. But I appreciate your willingness to go and do a tough job. I look forward to working with you.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to all five of our nominees today and thank you to your families for their support of your long careers in public service.

I am grateful for your willingness to take on what are often difficult terms of service in challenging and occasionally dangerous places. I will try to briefly address questions to a few of you. I would welcome the chance to question thoroughly all of you but within the boundaries of five minutes it is a challenge.

Mr. White, I am particularly enthusiastic about our making progress here on the committee with Peace Corps reauthorization, something that has not happened in a number of years, and I am excited about our steady reengagement with the world through the Peace Corps.

I think it has, as you mentioned in your opening statement, laid the foundation for more than a quarter million Americans to serve across the world across many decades.

I will never forget my first meeting with the president of Ghana who, before Senator Isakson and I could say anything else, said “I want you to know the only reason I am today president is because of two young Americans who came to my remote village and taught English and science,” and his quote was, “The United States is a country that became great not by what you took from us but by what you gave to us and that is because of the Peace Corps.”

Your own record of service in our military, your skills and training and experience I think make you well qualified for this role. I would just be interested in how you see us getting to the 10,000 volunteer target, what you think are the barriers to recruitment, and how does increasing Peace Corps engagement in the Global South also help advance some of our strategic interests in terms of competing with other countries that have different values and different priorities?

Mr. WHITE. Well, thank you, Senator, first of all, for the kind words and for the question as well.

I do believe in, of course, American global leadership and its capacity for good and I think some of those examples you gave are so many and I have heard so many other examples of world leaders and everyday people whose lives have been enriched by Peace Corps.

I do think that we need to continue to do great work in recruiting folks to serve in the Peace Corps. As it relates to public service writ large, we are seeing, I think, as we are all aware, less folks who are signing up to serve.

I notice that, of course, different aspects of the military, of course. The Marines seem to do quite well and I have a lot of family members, including a nephew serving overseas, in the Marine Corps.

But I think Peace Corps has taken a really great turn and executed an excellent marketing strategy now with the Go Bold initiative, as you and your colleagues may have seen plastered all around here in D.C., but also in other places around the country, inspiring people to serve, inspiring folks to heed that clarion call that President Kennedy gave so many years ago.

I think it is absolutely vital that we also ensure that we are getting a broad cross section of folks from across this country so we can bring the best of America abroad and abroad back home.

Senator COONS. Thank you. I have just two minutes left.

So briefly, Mr. Toner, if I might. I have been to Liberia four times. It is a country that has a diaspora community in Delaware. Go Irish. Your own education, I think, laid the foundation for your service then in the Peace Corps. I am thrilled you are returning to Liberia.

I would just be interested very briefly in how you think you in your role if confirmed can support democratic institutions in a country that has suffered from an incredibly destructive civil war that really destroyed much of the civil institutions.

I was close to the two-term president who laid a lot of the foundation for that but I am very concerned about the direction, particularly given the dynamics of this election.

Briefly, how would you promote democratic institutions?

Mr. TONER. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I think as you noted, Senator, given where Liberia came from in 2003, a lot of progress has been made but there is a lot that needs to be done.

Senator, if confirmed I would focus like a laser beam on corruption. I believe corruption is probably the biggest single impediment to progress not only on the democracy building front but also on the economic development front and that will be a clear focus for me if I am confirmed.

Senator COONS. Thank you. And I think, frankly, more broadly we do better in the Global South if we were credibly seen as an advocate and ally for those who stand against corruption.

We restrain our businesses with the FCPA. We might as well get more credit for the fact that we do business in the developing world in a cleaner more transparent way.

Ambassador Garg, if I might. I am about to travel to Egypt. It is a country I have been to many, many times and I value deeply our close partnership and relationship.

But as Senator Murphy's questioning highlighted, we have a real disagreement, a real tension, over political prisoners, the suppression of dissent. I intend to raise this again with el-Sisi.

There has been public reporting that Egypt, which is neutral in the war in Ukraine, has considered selling arms to the Russians. Has decided, hopefully, not to. They are an enormous consumer of grain from Russia and Ukraine. They are a critical regional leader. They play an important role in relations with Sudan.

What will you most prioritize in your service as Ambassador and how will you ensure that you strike that right balance between advocating for human rights and civil liberties and sustaining an enduring partnership that is key to Israeli-Egyptian relations and its security?

Ms. GARG. Thank you for that question. I will just say I think human rights are part of our national security and in my previous assignments I have demonstrated that we can accomplish both, as an example in previous assignment, military modernization, energy diversification, and rule of law reform.

Having a confirmed Ambassador on the ground elevates our ability to raise these issues consistently, which is absolutely important, and if confirmed I commit to doing that, sir.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Ambassador Garg. I will have some questions for the record, if I might.

Mr. Riley, Mr. Martin, I apologize for not also engaging with you. Effective and engaged oversight on our robust programming is critical. Somalia is a nation that badly needs a skilled and seasoned representative of the United States.

I hope we will quickly confirm all of the nominees today. Thank you for your patience with my going over, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Senator Coons.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Congratulations to each of you on your nominations and I look forward to working with you if confirmed.

Mr. Riley, I want to begin with you because as Russia has continued its unprovoked war in Ukraine one of the collateral—pieces of collateral damage, sadly, has been that global food prices have continued to rise rapidly. It has had a huge impact not just in the Middle East or in Eastern Europe but also in Africa.

I understand that Somalia has received more than 80,000 tons of wheat from Ukraine last year and it is experiencing record high food prices. So how can we—and one of the other challenges is that many people in Africa and other countries that are affected are blaming the United States rather than blaming Russia, who should appropriately be blamed for what has happened.

So how can we improve our public diplomacy to communicate with folks about what is really causing the high food prices and the impact on them?

Mr. RILEY. Thank you, Senator, for the question. I think it is an extremely important one in relation especially to Somalia.

The United States remains the single largest humanitarian donor to Somalia. We have given $890 million in each of the last two fiscal years. We are up to $1.7 billion in the totality of the humanitarian assistance that we have been—we have given to Somalia and this is because of the situation on the ground.

There is a desperate situation in Somalia with five recurrent rainy seasons that have failed. There has been the longest drought in history. We have—Somalia's population is 17 million people.

According to the statistics I have from all of our aid workers who are there 8.25 million of those are classified in need of humanitarian assistance. That is about half the population.

Senator SHAHEEN. I am sorry to interrupt but I am almost out of time. The question I am really asking, though, I appreciate the dire need that they have for food because of what is happening. But the question that I have is how do we better communicate to people in the region about what is responsible for that.

Mr. RILEY. I will be very succinct. We have to do a lot better. I have worked on a lot of countries where we have given tremendous amounts of aid but we do not do a good job in our public diplomacy in getting that word out.

You have my commitment. If I am confirmed as Ambassador we will leverage every platform, every vehicle that we have, to get the word out to the Somali people that it is the United States of America and our taxpayers who are funding this tremendous amount of aid to the people of Somalia.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much.

Mr. White, I think what is happening with the Peace Corps is very encouraging. New Hampshire is one of the top 10 states in terms of providing Peace Corps volunteers. We are very proud of that.

But how will you ensure that the Peace Corps is fully implementing the recommendations from the Sexual Assault Advisory Council including working with local staff and communities on sexual assault prevention?

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Senator, for the question and thanks also for your support of the Peace Corps and getting into the top 10.

I would tell you, first of all, safety and security is the highest priority. That includes prevention of sexual assault and sexual harassment. We must strive to zero incidents.

Unfortunately, we know we live in a dangerous world. That is true here at home and it is true abroad as well. So when the worst does happen, we need to ensure that the response is victim-centered, treats victims with dignity and respect, the full suite of reporting options, the resources they need to move beyond that and, of course, then pivot, again, towards safety and security.

This is also a recruiting matter and it is also an equity matter. It is a recruiting matter because people need to know that they are safe and secure and that we are going to take good care of them.

And, secondly, as it relates to equity this is something that affects—tends to affect—one particular set of the population and we need to make sure that we are taking care of all people equally.

So, you have my commitment, if confirmed, to work on this as one of my highest priorities, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. We will be watching and if we can be helpful please let us know.

Ambassador Mustafa Garg, can you explain in the 20 seconds that I have left why Egypt is unwilling to open the Rafah crossing?

Ms. GARG. My understanding is that Egypt does want the crossing open.

Senator SHAHEEN. Let me rephrase that. Why they have been so reluctant to open the crossing to date and why there is no commitment notwithstanding the president's statement that there will be ongoing humanitarian aid that will come through the Rafah crossing.

Ms. GARG. I think there is now a commitment.

Senator SHAHEEN. For ongoing?

Ms. GARG. Ongoing.

Senator SHAHEEN. I have heard that they have—they are going to allow 20 trucks in.

Ms. GARG. As the first tranche.

Senator SHAHEEN. But I understood that they were still negotiating and the question is really why. Why did it take them so long and why are they so reluctant?

Ms. GARG. My understanding is that the situation at the border is very fluid and layered. They have been concerned about, again, the influx of the refugees, also the security at the border.

But they are also working with the Israeli side. Both sides had concerns and until both sides could reach an agreement on the mechanism that border was not opening. There is now an agreement and we are cautiously optimistic that we will soon be seeing that flow in both directions.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you. I hope so.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

Senator Cruz?

Senator CRUZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Garg, as you know the U.S.-Egypt relationship has been damaged over the past week in the aftermath of the war that Hamas launched against Israel.

A summit with President Biden, Egyptian President Sisi, and other Arab leaders was just canceled. On Tuesday night a rocket fired by a Palestinian terrorist fell short of Israel and landed instead in the parking lot of a hospital in Gaza. Palestinian officials in Gaza, which means Hamas, immediately announced that it was an Israeli airstrike and that 500 people had been killed.

Their propaganda was then parroted and amplified by American corporate media—Reuters, the New York Times, MSNBC, and CNN.

Anti-American riots broke out across the Middle East. Mobs marched on American embassies. The corporate media's rabid anti-Israel reporting that was false endangered the lives of Americans across the region including our diplomats.

That libel continues to reverberate in Egypt. The Egyptian Government and public continues to peddle the lie and they blame America.

How do you intend to navigate in this environment in Egypt? What can be done specifically?

Ms. GARG. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

I believe strongly that having a confirmed Ambassador in place helps elevate our engagement and our ability to advance our U.S. interests.

In this case it is also building the relationships and the trust, which is extremely important for us to do, and being active in terms of telling our side of the story and the truth, which I think is also very important to do.

Senator CRUZ. Do you believe that this sort of anti-Israel media disinformation undermines American national security interests?

Ms. GARG. I can say, Mr. Senator, an issue that has come up several times today, which I think is vitally important, is disinformation in general and how we as a U.S. Government need to think more strongly about how we deal with disinformation across the globe and in particular in the Middle East.

Senator CRUZ. Well, unfortunately, many in the media allow their hatred of Israel to color their coverage and, indeed, in this instance to cause them to peddle outright falsehoods.

But the media is not alone. I want to ask you about another source of anti-American and anti-Israel incitement in Egypt, the Muslim Brotherhood.

The Muslim Brotherhood has in the past seized control of the Egyptian Government and they remain influential and dangerous. The Egyptian Government has imprisoned prominent Muslim Brotherhood figures.

I want to ask you about one in particular, Salah Soltan. As you know, Soltan is a Muslim Brotherhood leader and a hate preacher. He has called for the eradication of Jews. He has called for, and this is a quote, "obliterating America." He has called it divine law.

Now, when you and I met in my office we discussed this case. The Biden administration bizarrely has been pressuring Egypt to release Soltan and has even brought up his case to withhold assistance to Egypt.

Some of my colleagues here in the Senate and on this committee agree with that pressure. I would ask for your judgment. I understand there are genuine concerns about Egypt's imprisonment and treatment of political prisoners.

However, Soltan is not an American citizen and is in fact an anti-American radical who preaches the murder of Americans and the murder of Jews.

How on earth does it make sense that the Biden administration is trying to free a rabid ant-Semite who hates America and preaches violence against both Israel and America?

Ms. GARG. Thank you, Mr. Senator, for that question and thank you from our last meeting. You highlighted a few of the actual cites, which I did watch in Arabic to make sure that nothing was lost in translation and I condemn in the strongest sense and I think everyone on this committee condemns the comments that I did hear Mr. Soltan make on public TV in Egypt.

That said, the United States Government, this administration, is pushing for rights across the board for those in prison to have medical access. He is 80 years old. He has been in prison for a long time—

Senator CRUZ. So with respect—with respect—it is not medical access. There are members of this committee that are trying to write into law that America should free this man.

My time has expired but I just want to read two quotes from him to understand who it is the Biden administration is trying to free.

Here is one quote: “We will fight Israel and all those who are behind it. Allah is present in this equation and he is capable of obliterating America and any other oppressor. This is a divine law.” That is one quote.

Here is another quote: “As someone who has studied Islamic law specializing in Islamic jurisprudence I am calling to kill the Israeli Ambassador, not just expel him. Any Zionist tourist or other who enters Egypt must be killed.”

I asked my Democrat colleagues is this someone that we should be fighting to release from jail to be able to follow through on exactly what he has pledged he wants to do, which is murder Jews and murder Americans.

Senator MERKLEY. Senator Cardin?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, first, let me thank Senator Merkley and Senator Young for chairing and arranging for this hearing. Getting our nominees’ hearings and confirmation votes is one of our highest priorities and I want to thank the cooperation of Senator Risch and Senator Young in accommodating this hearing.

I want to thank all five of our nominees for their willingness to serve our nation. We know it is a family event so I thank your families as well because they will be required for the sacrifices.

I know some of you are for different confirmations and some are countries, some are not. I recognize that. When we have a hearing we would like to get as many as we possibly can in but we want to make sure we have an opportunity to give members a chance to ask their questions.

I am going to just make a general comment as well and I welcome your response, particularly as it relates to Egypt, but that our policies need to be wrapped in our values.

President Biden has said that frequently, that we can have strategic relations with other countries. Egypt is a very important country for the United States. It has normalized its relationship with Israel.

It is a critical partner in regards to humanitarian needs in Gaza. It has an incredibly important role to play in regards to peace in that region and the expansion of normalization.

But Egypt has very serious human rights violations by its government. It is still operating basically under the autocratic rule as a result of the challenges they have had from violence in their country.

So my question to each of you is how will you make sure that American values—international values—for protection of human rights are embedded in your responsibilities representing the United States either in country or the positions that you have been nominated for?

So we can start first with—

Ms. GARG. Thank you for that question, Mr. Chairman, and human rights are part of our national security. They are not two separate paths.

They are together, and I want to say thank you for your cooperation in Bulgaria and this is an example that I would like to highlight where we were by working together with you and your team able—we were able to make significant progress on rule of law thanks to the authority that—the authority that you have given on the Global Magnitsky Act, for example.

And so, moving forward, it is important for us to not only look at the range of authorities and the tools but to continue to work together to try to promote them.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. Martin, I am curious as to how you in the role as an inspector general can advance—I understand you are mainly concerned with complying with law but how do you make sure also that there is sensitivity to the mission of USAID, which is very much our values?

Mr. MARTIN. Very much so. So I think the word accountability is key to promoting the democratic values of this country as the world's largest donor nation and I think that shows the spirit of the American people.

But I think we need to have proper checks and balances and accountability to make sure that those funds are going into the right hands and having the desired effect.

The CHAIRMAN. I appreciate that.

Mr. White, you are being nominated for one of my favorite organizations in the world. There are days I would like to trade spaces—places and be in the Peace Corps rather than here. It seems like it would be a nice place to be.

Mr. WHITE. We are recruiting, Mr. Chairman.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. I appreciate that. I might have some time after next year so I will let you know how I am doing.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But if you could just tell me how you see American values in the Ambassadors we have under the Peace Corps, how we can strengthen that relationship.

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just say briefly that we have to live our values. It is really the power of our example and looking at volunteers as grassroots diplomats that is going to make the difference here.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MERKLEY. Senator Booker, thank you for your patience. It is now your turn.

Senator BOOKER. Truly grateful, and I will always give deference to our Chairman, Senator Cardin. Always, sir. Always, sir. You look so dubious at me.

First of all, I just want to say thank you to the five of you. It is extraordinary that you are here. Your careers, each individual—your bios read to such deep patriotism and that does not just go—I have gratitude towards the five of you but I want to give gratitude to your families. It really is a sacrifice to do the jobs that you do.

Clearly, you are not doing it for the money. But you are, to me, demonstrating the best of human values, which is a commitment to service and service in this case to the country.

Ms. Garg, you have been getting a lot of action. I have a lot of thoughts. I look forward to working with you. But I am going to let you take a pause on my round at least.

Mr. White, it has been a frustration to me that we have not seen a lot of progress over my years in the Senate on diversity in the State Department.

When I would travel around I would see the face of America, these incredibly dedicated public servants, but I would not see that many people of color, religious diversity, and the like.

I do not know the data for the Peace Corps, but I am wondering—as you all look to ramp up recruiting I am wondering how do you keep this conscious that it is actually important that those people that are abroad doing such incredible work reflect the rich diversity of our country?

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Senator, for the question. It is vitally important.

It is very important to Peace Corps' mission, of course, of promoting peace and friendship. When a volunteer goes overseas they have to have a level of cultural competence to be effective and, of course, the world is a very diverse place.

And so just like with my colleagues here who served in the Foreign Service it is important that volunteers represent a broad cross section of folks who serve. That is in the more traditional characteristics of diversity when it comes to race, but it is also important in terms of geographic diversity, making sure we are getting folks from the heartland, from the coasts, from all over, because that is what makes us a stronger organization, at the end of the day.

Senator BOOKER. I appreciate that at a time that I am seeing so much pushback on ideas of diversity. With the State Department we have seen a lot of great progress with paid internship programs and more conscious recruiting. I really appreciate that you are—that you are focused on that.

Mr. Riley, I am really excited about what you are getting a chance to do in a country that, to me, is so vital to U.S. interests. I know Senator Shaheen rightfully talked a lot about the humanitarian effort but, obviously, is related to the challenges we have been having with al-Shabaab.

Now, there has been a lot of great progress made and I am wondering if you could describe to me how you think as the African Union's mission transitions, they are moving out and I am wondering if that progress with al-Shabaab is tenuous, given some of the humanitarian concerns.

Does that make it more urgent that we have to be really worried despite what the U.N. and the African Union seem to be thinking about the direction of our work against al-Shabaab?

Mr. RILEY. Thank you very much, Senator.

In regard to al-Shabaab in Somalia, obviously, they are a malignant and persistent terrorist threat to the Somali people, to the country, and to the broader region there in East Africa and to U.S. personnel in the region. We all know that.

What I am heartened by understanding and knowing is that there has been progress against al-Shabaab. They do not have widespread popular support within the country given how virulently extremist they are and how they persecute their own people, and they are one of the wealthiest affiliates of al-Qaeda in the world.

So they are a malignant and a real threat that must be faced. What I am heartened to see and understand is that through all of the support that we have given and our partners in the Quint have given in terms of standing up the Somali security forces and the progress that has been made in that area.

Progress is being made. More territory has been regained in the last, I think, it is 14 months than in the previous five years against al-Shabaab, which is a real, real success. That has to continue.

We know that there was some setbacks last month in Galmudug in that offensive. We all recognize that. But as you also know the federal government together with the African Union have asked for a pause briefly for 90 days for that scheduled drawn down to the ATMIS forces. That is for 90 days through to the end of the December.

But the scheduling of the drawdown of ATMIS and the stand up of the Somali security forces will proceed apace. There is still the goal of having the Somali security forces securing the country with ATMIS not there by the end of next year.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you. I am going to stop you there because I want to get a question to Mr. Toner. I just will say that I am hopeful for the elections in '24.

Mr. RILEY. Yes.

Senator BOOKER. It is an issue I would love to explore with you at some point.

Mr. Toner, I am excited about your position. I have got a lot of DNA from West Africa and Liberia is, obviously, a country that for its history with the United States and especially African-American diaspora has been extraordinary.

I think the questions already asked about corruption were really key. I have some humanitarian concerns as well. There are places of great food insecurity there.

The one thing I just want to ask—and I am treading upon the generosity and kindness of Senator Kaine who I am just a warm up act for—but I just want to ask you I am really concerned about the competition with China and I am wondering if you can just in my last question just tell me how you see that competition. They are, obviously, playing very hard in the country—in a country that is—we are probably their most valuable partner, but I am concerned about Chinese influence.

Mr. TONER. Thank you for the question. I do not think we can ever be complacent about the PRC and their involvement throughout West Africa and Africa in general.

I would argue, though, Senator, and to your point, our voice matters there. Our involvement matters there. I think the fact that we just got Peace Corps volunteers back in the country that we remain—we have a robust public engagement program, public diplomacy program.

We are still the country that Liberians look to for guidance and for a model and, sir, I will make it my priority to continue those efforts.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MERKLEY. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and congratulations to the nominees.

Mr. White, I want to talk to you a little bit about Peace Corps personnel issues, following up on some that Senator Booker raised.

The Peace Corps is currently the subject of a federal lawsuit that accuses it of discriminating against applicants with disabilities in violation of the Rehabilitation Act and in particular this is a lawsuit that is also consistent with some constituent outreach to our office.

People apply to get into the Peace Corps. They get an offer made to them. They undergo a medical clearance process and then they find that their offers are rescinded, some because they have sought mental health counseling in the past, some because they take anti-anxiety medication or anti-depression medication.

The gist of the lawsuit is that folks are being discriminated against on the grounds of seeking mental health support, which we should not be discouraging. We should be encouraging.

We know that we have a lot of stigma issues surrounding mental health and people do not seek treatment sometime when they need it. But the fact that they might need mental health treatment is no different than I might need cholesterol medication or something like that and people should not be punished or believe that they are going to be punished in employment because they are seeking assistance on mental health issues.

I do not want you to comment on the lawsuit but I do want you to tell me that should you be confirmed that you approach this responsibility with an understanding that there is nothing wrong with seeking mental health treatment and that should not be a bar to serving in the Peace Corps or in any other public service or private sector job, for that matter.

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Senator. I appreciate the question. I think you are absolutely right. It is important that people seek help when they need that.

I would tell you that as an Army veteran I find it incredibly important. I talk to a number of my former colleagues who are veterans and encourage them to seek help when they need it.

We need to destigmatize seeking help, and as far as I see needing help for mental health purposes is no different than breaking an arm or needing to get your cholesterol down.

So it is important that we get that help when we need it and it is important that there is a system at play that takes into account volunteers' safety and security while at the same time encouraging that people get help, and if confirmed, I will certainly get under the hood on that and work with your office to make sure that we are striking the right balance.

Senator KAINE. Please do. I like the broken arm analogy. If somebody walks in to a hearing with a cast I will usually say, oh, what happened and can I sign your cast and it is a very easy conversation and conversations about mental health should be equally as easy. We all have to work to make sure that is the case in whatever capacity.

I worked in Honduras as a missionary many years ago when the Peace Corps was really active in Honduras. Peace Corps pulled out of Honduras in 2012 for legitimate concerns over safety at the time—extensive violence in the country—and the Peace Corps also pulled out of some other countries in the Northern Triangle including El Salvador.

The Peace Corps announced, I think, earlier this year that they are going to come back to El Salvador, which I view as a positive. I do not know if you know anything about status with Honduras.

In my discussions with Honduran businesses and governmental leaders they have expressed interest in the Peace Corps starting up again in Honduras. Do you know anything about the status of that right now?

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Senator.

I am not privy to the inner workings, but I do know that Peace Corps takes very seriously its responsibility to safety and security of the volunteers and it is really an ongoing assessment, as I understand it, and if confirmed, I would be committed to working with your office to ensure that we get you the latest information and thinking on that.

Senator KAINE. That would be great. I mean, and I know that the Peace Corps coming back it begins with the request of the Government and I have not talked to President Castro to know whether there has been an official request for the Peace Corps to come back.

I have talked to other government officials and private sector leaders in Honduras that hope that might come back. The Honduran violence rates are not that different and, frankly, I think they are a little bit less than those in Salvador and with the Peace Corps back in El Salvador I hope there might be a way to come back into Honduras because I think it has been a really important relationship.

The last question I want to ask is to Mr. Toner and it is about domestic violence. Gender-based violence in Liberia is commonly at the top of the charts in terms of polling about what people want to see done—what problem that people want to see action on.

In 2019 Liberia passed a domestic violence act. That is laudable but implementation of the act still needs a lot to be desired.

Should you be confirmed how could you work with Liberia to make sure that we strengthen implementation and take additional steps and set an example to try to demonstrate the importance of reducing gender-based violence?

Mr. TONER. Thank you for the question, Senator.

If confirmed, obviously, human rights would be among my priorities and as you noted, Senator, gender-based violence, including female genital mutilation, are among the concerns that I have cited in the annual State Department Human Rights Report.

I think—a two-pronged approach if I may, sir. I think we need to—I need to work with the Government leadership to make sure that they understand this is a priority. Equally, we need to work with civil society and engage.

And, Senator, I am always an advocate for shining a light on these issues as much as our voice can get out there. It offers solace and it offers a symbol to others who are looking for that.

Again, I am fully cognizant of the great power that American influence has on Liberia so as much as we can be a model and be a voice and an advocate for change I plan to do that, sir.

Senator KAINE. Thanks for that answer. I yield back.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. No time is left to yield back but thank you.

[Laughter.]

Senator MERKLEY. Senator Van Hollen?

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Senator Merkley, and congratulations to all of you on your nominations.

Mr. Martin, it is good to see a Marylander in the group and I want to pick up on some of the comments that Senator Kaine said with respect to the Peace Corps.

And, Mr. White, congratulations on your nomination. I try to make it a point whenever I am overseas in an official capacity to meet with our Peace Corps volunteers. I come from a Foreign Service family and deep appreciation for what they do and our other Foreign Service—and Foreign Service officers do.

But on the Peace Corps I was recently in Vietnam with Senator Merkley. We made a point to meet with the Peace Corps volunteers and I also—which is a first, as you probably know—I am sure you know—and then in Sri Lanka recently getting the Peace Corps back in the end of the year.

At both stops I got a chance to see the new Peace Corps group in action in Vietnam and the preparations being made in Sri Lanka. So I look forward to working with you as you—as you move forward, assuming you get your confirmation, which I do support.

Mr. WHITE. Thank you, Senator.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. If I could, Ambassador Mustafa Garg, I would like to use the time to better understand exactly what is going on with respect to desperately needed humanitarian relief in southern Gaza.

And I realize that you have been nominated. You have not been confirmed. But I also assume that you have been following this issue very closely.

And we are trying to untangle exactly what the obstacles are. As I understood your testimony you believe an agreement has been reached to provide sustained humanitarian relief across the border.

Ms. GARG. My understanding is that an agreement has been reached to open up the border. The mechanisms are being worked on all three sides. By that I mean the U.N., Israel, and with Egypt, and as the President said this first tranche will go as long as Hamas does not try to confiscate that first tranche. Then we hope there will be additional tranches.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. So the first tranche meaning the 20 trucks. Is that what you are talking about?

Ms. GARG. Yes, sir.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Okay. And when it comes to—so the Egyptians as you understand have cleared that. The Israelis have cleared that subject to what kind of other requirements?

Ms. GARG. Yes. My understanding is there has been a general agreement reached in terms of the situation on the ground at the border, which is fluid and layered.

First of all, I would say that on the Gaza side they need an authority to organize the people who would go across and that authority is not Hamas. In addition to that, it is making sure that the goods that go in are inspected to also make sure—

Senator VAN HOLLEN [continuing]. I do not have a lot of time. Just trying to figure out that information.

Ms. GARG. Exactly. This is—

Senator VAN HOLLEN [continuing]. So there is no other—right now, obviously, Israel is prosecuting its war against Hamas.

Ms. GARG. Yes.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. We support them getting rid of Hamas. But so what other authority would there be in southern Gaza? Are we talking about the United Nations? What are we talking—what could that possibly be?

Ms. GARG. So this is—these are all the complexities that are involved in the area and why we have sent David Satterfield out to the region to focus on exactly this issue, sir.

Because that situation is fluid, because of the war, details such as having to repave the roads on which the trucks will enter are the details that the parties are working out.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Okay. Well, one of the—one of the most desperate situations right now of all the humanitarian needs is access to water because right now Israel has turned off the water except, for my understanding, is one pipe in southern Gaza, which is where it is turned on only for a few hours a day.

So what you are telling me is that it is going to take potentially a lot more time to get bottled water in convoys across the Gaza-Egypt border. Is that what you are saying?

Ms. GARG. I think the situation is very complex and, if confirmed, I commit to following up closely. I do not have all the details on the time lines.

I do know that there is a commitment definitely from our side and in the great work of Ambassador Satterfield but also in the President's conversation with President el-Sisi he did receive that assurance. So this is an issue, if confirmed, I will give utmost importance.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Okay. I understand you do not have this responsibility yet. All I can say is, there is really no time. According to all the U.N. officials they are down to about one liter a day in rations for water in southern Gaza, which is not enough to support human life.

You have Gazans flooding into the south because that is where they were told to go—innocent Gazans. And so it just underscores the need, in my view, to have Israel turn on the water because your answer to me is that this is going to take even longer to try to get out the dynamics around the border crossing.

And even then I am not sure why we should have to have convoys and convoys of trucks bringing bottled water across when we need to take tents, food, medicine, and other urgent needs.

So I look forward to following up with you even before the confirmation vote just to make sure I understand what your thinking is and what you would do as our Ambassador to address all the other issues.

And I want to second the things that Senator Murphy and others have said. But this is an immediate humanitarian need so I look forward to working with you on it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much.

Senator, did you have any follow-up questions you wanted to ask? Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. I do not.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. I am glad that you said that.

[Laughter.]

Senator MERKLEY. Senator Cardin has given a speech on the floor of the Senate on July 27th, 2023, regarding the individual Salah el Deen Soltan, who was referred to earlier in the testimony. He has asked that his speech and the attachment be put into the record.

In his speech Senator Cardin lays out the history and also quotes the letter that Mr. Soltan wrote and it was smuggled out of prison in Egypt, and I think it is powerful enough that I would like to read that clause in which Mr. Soltan wrote:

“My previous statements and stances are wrong and the best of us are those who reflect, hold one’s self accountable, and repent. Here I am reflecting and seeking forgiveness from God for the harm that may have been inflicted upon anyone.

“I apologize to everyone harmed by what I said and called for. I leave behind these prison walls all forms of anger, hate, and coarseness. I bear the burden of upholding the sanctity of human life, speaking truth and defending it wherever it may be.

“I had only intended to stand up for justice but what I did resulted in the exact opposite of the intent and became a reason for further oppression, suffering, and marginalization of the innocent. In fact, my oppressors use my decade-old stances to justify and fend off pressure from concerned Western parties about my release.”

And I encourage anyone who would like to look into this further. This is a powerful statement by Chairman Cardin and the attachment.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO RICHARD H. RILEY IV BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

The Bilateral Relationship

Question. In your view, what are the top three priorities for the U.S. bilateral relationship with Somalia that you will advance or maintain as U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed?

Answer. If confirmed, the top three U.S. priorities I will seek to advance as U.S. Ambassador are to: 1) eliminate the threat that al-Shabaab and other terrorist groups pose to U.S. persons and to regional stability; 2) help the people of Somalia build a peaceful nation with a stable democratic government that can provide security and services for its citizens and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms; and 3) foster inclusive economic growth and build resilience to climatic shocks, which fuel large-scale humanitarian needs, to reduce Somalia's dependence on international aid and improve the lives of its citizens.

Democracy

While the current focus of the U.S.-Somalia relationship is—once again—the push to defeat al-Shabaab militarily and associated efforts for the Federal Government in Mogadishu to take control of liberated territory, the United States has previously made considerable investments in supporting universal suffrage, democratic governance, anti-corruption and public financial management, debt relief and institutional capacity building, many of which have yet to bear fruit for the Somali people.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador to Somalia, if confirmed, how will you engage with the Federal Government in Mogadishu, as well as Somalia's Federal Member States, on difficult but critical issues including democracy, corruption, and weak governing institutions that have little control over territory and resources?

Answer. Promoting democracy, fighting corruption, and strengthening government institutions are vital to advance peace and stability in Somalia. If confirmed, I will work to advance the federalism and political reconciliation processes by encouraging regular dialogue between Mogadishu and the federal member states. I will prioritize strengthening good governance and accountability structures, including holding more democratic and inclusive elections and fighting corruption by improving public sector management. I will also promote inclusive economic growth, job creation, and government revenue generation efforts, which are necessary to ensure governing institutions have sufficient resources to deliver services to the people of Somalia.

Freedom House's Freedom in the World 2023 report ranked Somalia as not free, with the exception of the semi-autonomous region of Somaliland which Freedom House ranked as partly free. After significant delay, the abandonment of one-person-one-vote direct elections, and political and constitutional crisis, President Hassan Sheikh Mohamud was named Somalia's president in May 2022 through an indirect selection process. Somaliland, despite delays, will hold national elections in November 2024.

Question. What is your view of the role of a U.S. Ambassador in supporting democratic institutions and democratic governance in Somalia?

Answer. Supporting democratic institutions and governance are integral to U.S. efforts to promote peace and stability in Somalia. If confirmed, they will be among my highest priorities as U.S. Ambassador. Somalia remains in the early stages of recovery from government collapse and has myriad challenges it must overcome on the path to becoming a stable democracy, to include agreeing on and implementing a democratic electoral process, improving its record on media freedom, strengthening the rule of law, and establishing an independent judiciary. I will work closely with the Government, civil society, and international partners to encourage progress towards these and other democracy goals.

Question. As Ambassador, how will you acknowledge the differing levels of capacity, democratic culture, and citizen freedoms in different Federal Member States and regions, including Somaliland, in engaging on issues of democracy and governance?

Answer. I strongly believe that all Somalis should have the benefit of representative governance and fundamental freedoms, regardless of where they live. However, the current reality is that there are significant disparities among Somalia's regions and federal member states in terms of their levels of governance capacity, democratic development, and overall stability. Somaliland has successfully held democratic elections on multiple occasions. Earlier this year, Puntland held one-person, one-vote elections at the district level for the first time. By contrast, electoral processes in Jubaland, South West State, other federal member states, and at the national level have been significantly less democratic. If confirmed, I will tailor my engagement in support of democracy and good governance in Somalia's federal member states and regions in accordance with their relative level of advancement and based on where U.S. engagement can have the most beneficial impact.

The security environment in Somalia, lack of political will for democratic reforms, an inability to hold one-person-one-vote elections for 50 years and limited freedom of movement of Somali and implementing partners makes democracy, human rights and governance programs difficult to implement and expensive.

Question. What adjustments in strategy, as compared to the strategy pursued from 2017–2022, do you think need to be made to ensure that investments of significant democracy, human rights and governance funds in Somalia achieve results?

Answer. I strongly believe that U.S. investments in democracy, governance, and human rights assistance can only be effective with the active support and cooperation of local partners that share those objectives. I understand from 2017 to 2022, the Somali Government under then-President Farmaajo did not consistently demonstrate a shared commitment to making progress in these areas. President Hassan Sheikh Mohamud has stated he is committed to advancing democracy and good governance, while also focusing on the fight against al-Shabaab. If confirmed, I will absolutely advocate reallocation of funding if it is not producing the desired results. I consider one of my most important obligations and responsibilities as U.S. Ambassador to be a trustworthy steward of American taxpayers' money.

Question. Do you feel that the conduct of one-person-one-vote elections in Somalia should continue to be a priority for U.S. diplomatic engagement and for USAID's democracy and governance programs in Somalia? If yes, why. If no, what should the revised approach be?

Answer. I believe it remains important for the United States to advocate for inclusive, transparent, and democratic elections at all levels of Government in Somalia, including supporting the aspirations of the Somali people for one-person, one-vote elections. We have seen progress in that direction at the district level in Puntland earlier this year. However, achieving President Hassan Sheikh's goal of universal suffrage elections at the national level may not be achievable by the 2026 election cycle given ongoing security challenges, continuing lack of consensus on an electoral model, and the technical preparations that need to be put in place. If confirmed, I will urge the federal government to focus on putting in place the political, technical, and legal preparations for the 2026 election cycle as soon as possible to avoid the need for another flawed indirect selection process.

Question. Given the Biden administration's focus on counter-terrorism efforts in Somalia, what do you believe is the best way for the U.S. to support legitimate state institutions to provide services and project control over territory liberated from al-Shabaab?

Answer. I believe that incorporating stabilization planning into military operations is the most effective way to ensure sustainable, legitimate governance over territory liberated from al-Shabaab. I understand that, given the Somali Government's significant resource limitations, U.S. and international partner financial support plays a critical role in stabilizing liberated territories. It is also important that assistance, including humanitarian assistance, support for community reconciliation dialogue, or economic development projects, be tailored to the needs of the local communities.

African Transition Mission in Somalia (ATMIS)

ATMIS is currently in drawdown and due to fully withdrawal and hand over to the Somali Government by the end of 2024. On September 19, the Somalia Government requested a 90-day delay of the drawdown of 3000 African Union troops from ATMIS scheduled to occur by September 30, which the U.N. Security Council supported on September 28.

Question. Understanding that the Somali Government has aspirational goals for the defeat of al-Shabaab, do you think it is reasonable and realistic for the United States to provide support in the United Nations and in bilateral engagement for a full drawdown of ATMIS by the end of 2024?

Answer. The end of 2024 is an ambitious goal for ending ATMIS. I anticipate Somalia will continue to need some forms of external security support post-2024 as it builds the institutions and capabilities required to consolidate and build on progress. At the request of the Federal Government of Somalia, the United States and other international partners, we are co-sponsoring a security conference in New York in December to take stock of Somalia's progress on the security transition and assess requirements for 2024 and beyond. I understand we have asked Somalia to develop a comprehensive and credible plan for international partners to consider based on a realistic assessment of Somalia's security capabilities. This will help inform our position on the ATMIS drawdown timeline in the U.N. Security Council when the ATMIS mandate next comes up for renewal in December 2023.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador, how will you engage with the Somali Government, regional and international partners to ensure that plans and requests for ATMIS are realistic while also continuing to plan for ATMIS to responsibly end?

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet regularly with the Somali Government, ATMIS leadership, individual troop contributors, and other international partners to gain a ground truth assessment of the security situation and the degree to which Somali security forces are capable of assuming security responsibilities. When necessary, I will challenge plans and requests that do not comport with my assessment and propose alternate courses of action. I will also consult closely with the U.S. Department of Defense and interagency partners for their assessment of Somali plans and preparations.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to working with State/IO and U.S.-U.N. on continued engagement with Congress on this issue?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I am committed to working with State/IO, U.S.-U.N., the Africa Bureau, and other State Department bureaus and offices as appropriate on continued engagement with Congress on this issue.

Question. Do you commit to engaging in good faith with appropriate congressional committees regarding any change in posture for ATMIS?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I am absolutely committed to engaging in good faith with appropriate congressional committees regarding any change in posture for ATMIS.

Humanitarian Aid

In July, the committee was notified by USAID that it had become aware of post-distribution diversions of humanitarian food aid in Somalia. This disclosure by the U.N. to USAID came on the heels of the discovery by USAID of widespread and systematic diversion of humanitarian food aid in Ethiopia. There are many challenges faced in the distribution of humanitarian aid in Somalia, particularly given the extremely difficult security situation. However, regardless of the circumstances, we have an obligation to the U.S. taxpayer and humanitarian principles to ensure that humanitarian aid provided by and paid for by the United States reaches its intended beneficiaries, that they are not further victimized by virtue of receiving U.S. humanitarian aid, and that U.S. assistance does not fall into the hands of terrorists, security services, or corrupt individuals seeking personal gain.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed, how will you work with USAID/Somalia and the Bureau for Humanitarian Affairs, WFP, UNOCHA, implementing partners and other stakeholders to ensure that assistance provided by the United States is accompanied by adequate monitoring and oversight efforts?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with all of our offices and implementing partners to maintain the highest levels of assistance monitoring and oversight. Previously, I have served in countries receiving significant amounts of U.S. aid such as Afghanistan, Yemen, Iraq, and Pakistan. I fully understand the position of trust and stewardship that my team holds regarding the proper use of U.S. assistance. My team will work diligently to maintain oversight of U.S. taxpayer funds and ensure those resources are applied in a manner consistent with upholding U.S. strategic goals.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed, how will you engage with the Government of Somalia, Federal Member States, and local authorities to prevent, identify, and mitigate humanitarian aid diversion?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with USAID, the U.N., and other humanitarian partners to engage closely with Somali authorities at all levels to ensure humanitarian aid is reaching its intended recipients and to detect and prevent aid diversion. I understand a U.N. report earlier this year uncovered a post-distribution aid diversion in internally displaced persons settlements in Somalia and that Somali authorities are working with the international donor community implement corrective measures. I am fully committed to working closely with Somali authorities, USAID, and its international humanitarian partners to prevent future diversion.

Somaliland

The United States has pursued a range of policy approaches toward Somalia since the early 1990s given state collapse, significant security threats and challenges, and U.S. efforts to support Somalia to defeat al-Shabaab and effectively govern its territory. Currently, the Administration is continuing to follow its Single Somalia Policy, with a strong focus on support and engagement with the Federal Government in Mogadishu, alongside a significant investment—financially and with U.S. boots on the ground—to defeat al-Shabaab once and for all. I have been vocal that I feel the focus on the Federal Government in Mogadishu, at the expense of relationships with other actors, including the Government of the semi-autonomous region of Somaliland, is short-sighted and takes strategic opportunities for the United States off the table.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador, how will you approach a relationship with the Government of Somaliland, and other Federal Member States?

Answer. The United States recognizes the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Somalia within its 1960 borders, which includes Somaliland. If confirmed, I am committed to working within this framework to engage with Somaliland and federal member states on issues of mutual interest. I believe strongly that it is in the U.S. interest to maintain a positive relationship with a broad range of political actors in Somalia at the national and subnational level, including the authorities in Somaliland. If confirmed, my plan upon arrival in Somalia is to travel as soon as possible, as time and security circumstances will allow, to the other Federal Member States to make my own assessment of those States and to get to know the leadership and the situation on the ground as quickly and as thoroughly as possible. Traveling to Somaliland will be my top priority.

The Chinese military base in Djibouti is 25km as the crow flies and less than 35km by road to the Somaliland border, and the Government of Somaliland is an outspoken friend and partner to Taiwan—one of the only in Africa. Despite challenges, Somaliland has one of the strongest democracies in the Horn of Africa. At the same time, the Department of State and the former U.S. Ambassador to Somalia has taken an approach to Somalia that significantly diminishes the opportunity for partnership with Somaliland, and which has been overtly antagonistic at times.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador to Somalia, if confirmed, how will you engage with Somaliland as a partner in countering China and as a friend to Taiwan?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to actively working and engaging with Somaliland within the framework of our single Somalia policy to counter malign Chinese influence and to support Taiwan. This will include support for Somaliland's efforts to prevent illegal, unauthorized, and unregulated fishing by PRC vessels in the Gulf of Aden and strengthening cooperation in other areas of mutual interest. I will also look for opportunities to coordinate with Taiwan's assistance office in Somaliland, including on democracy, humanitarian, and development initiatives, consistent with our one China policy. As mentioned in my response to the previous question, if confirmed, I will hold it as a top priority to travel to Somaliland as soon as possible to make my own assessment of the situation on the ground and to ensure we are not missing any opportunities to optimize U.S. interests in that Federal Member State.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador to Somalia, if confirmed, do you commit to regularly travelling to Somaliland and engaging with the Government of Somaliland in Hargeisa?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to regularly travelling to Somaliland and engaging with the Government of Somaliland in Hargeisa, security conditions and resource requirements permitting.

Question. On July 5, Under Secretary Nuland respond to a question for the record submitted by me that “there are reports that al-Shabaab members are present and operating in Laascaanood and Eastern Somaliland.” Given the United States’ strong support of efforts to defeat al-Shabaab in Somalia, how will you engage with the Government of Somaliland in defeating al-Shabaab?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working with the authorities in Somaliland to advance U.S. counterterrorism goals, to include countering the threat posed by al-Shabaab. I understand the threat from al-Shabaab remains most serious and prevalent in southern Somalia, but that its members have freedom of movement through the country, including in Somaliland. I will work closely with Somaliland authorities to address credible reports of al-Shabaab activities.

Trafficking in Persons

In the State Department’s 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report, Somalia remained a “special case” for the 21st year in a row. This lack of progress over two decades is concerning.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Somalia prioritize anti-trafficking efforts in country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Government’s interagency commitment to working with the Somali federal and member state governments to help build the capacity of Somali institutions to prevent trafficking, prosecute those engaged in the illicit activity, and protect victims.

Question. If confirmed, what actions would you instruct your mission to take with regards to anti-trafficking work on the ground?

Answer. As highlighted in the 2023 TIP Report, interagency and intragovernmental coordination are essential in combatting the scourge of human trafficking. If confirmed, my team will adopt a whole-of-government approach to implement and enforce national trafficking laws more effectively, provide protection and services to survivors, coordinate prevention activities, address information gaps, incorporate survivor- and trauma-informed approaches, plan and pace strategic national initiatives, and streamline or coordinate on overlapping efforts.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to reporting the reality of the trafficking situation in Somalia in the annual trafficking in persons report as well as directly to congress and the appropriate congressional committees?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, my team will give the utmost care and effort to reporting completely and honestly in the annual Trafficking in Persons Report.

State Management and Oversight

Question. As U.S. Ambassador to Somalia, you will face unique challenges in managing U.S. personnel working on Somalia from both Mogadishu and Nairobi, Kenya, including the USAID Somalia mission. How do you envision your role as U.S. Ambassador and Chief of Mission given limitations on the number of U.S. personnel who can physically be in Mogadishu at one time, and the challenging nature of managing extensive humanitarian and development aid programs remotely?

Answer. I have served in senior leadership positions in Iraq, Afghanistan, Yemen, and Pakistan since 2006. This has included serving as Deputy Chief of Mission in both Afghanistan and Yemen, Consul General in Peshawar, Kyber-Pakhtunkhwa, and leading PRT teams in both Iraq and Afghanistan. All of these postings were in either active war zones or in areas under the most intense threat from active and lethal terrorists. I am thus very familiar with the nature of these danger and hardship posts, and the challenges one faces in leading an interagency team that is often not co-located as one would wish, given the security imperatives. I faced this both as Consul General in Peshawar just last year, where half of my team, including all of my POL/ECON, PD, and USAID team members lived and worked in Islamabad while I was in Peshawar. The same when I was PRT Team Leader in Jalalabad, Nangarhar Province, Afghanistan from 2011–2012, when I had a team of 50 U.S. personnel spread across the province operating off of five different Forward Operating Bases (FOBs). I found the two keys to effective leadership in all of these difficult environments were 1) to ensure clear, open, and constant communication with the team, every single day, to ensure everyone understood our mission and acted accordingly in concert with one another, and 2) that every team member knew they could trust me implicitly, as their team leader, to do whatever I needed to do to protect and safeguard them in every way and to provide them with the resources they needed to succeed. I also prioritize good, trusting, and highly effective personal relationships with all interagency partners with whom I and my Department of State colleagues worked closely to achieve our mission, especially our wonderful and dedicated colleagues in the U.S. Military, USAID, and the IC.

Many U.S. missions have been under enormous stress over the last several years, in large part due to COVID.

Question. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Somalia?

Answer. Since my nomination by the President this past March, I have been in regular communication with both the previous U.S. Ambassador on the ground in Mogadishu (until his departure from post in May), and with the current Chargé d'Affaires, Shane Dixon, who will be my DCM if I am confirmed as Ambassador. I have also consulted extensively with the Somalia desk in the Department and colleagues in AF/EX, which provides all management oversight and support for our U.S. Embassy in Somalia. My understanding from these conversations is that morale within U.S. Mission Somalia, including both contingents of employees on the ground in Mogadishu and operating out of Embassy Nairobi (primarily our USAID colleagues) is very good at this time. I know from past experience, and from talking with CDA Dixon, that all of our current employees volunteered for these hardship roles at U.S. Mission Somalia and they are actively working in a very dedicated and focused manner to achieve our USG goals in Somalia. While there will inevitably be one or two cases each year where some personnel issues may arise, and I know of one such that has already been resolved satisfactorily in recent months, Embassy Mogadishu is currently in a good state in terms of high morale and productivity.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Somalia?

Answer. In all my experience leading teams in expeditionary diplomacy settings, I have found that morale is the highest when you have two things at play: 1) Ensuring that every team member clearly understands his or her role within the Mission, feels well-equipped, guided, and mentored to successfully fulfill her or his role, and feels that he or she is valued not only by me as the team leader, but by his or her colleagues as well; 2) ensuring that there is a strictly adhered to work/life balance for all team members. I know this has become an overused cliché, but work/life balance is critically important in high threat posts, and it is often neglected. I ensured in all of my past leadership roles in war zones and danger posts that every team member knew my priorities, which included ensuring that everyone took R&Rs throughout the year to ensure proper rest, and that no one stayed in the office any longer than necessary each day to get the work done. I have chased folks out of their office at 8:00 or 9:00 p.m. on many occasions to ensure they got the rest they needed. I take it as a core responsibility of leadership to set the best possible example in this regard. Finally, I have found that making available ample social opportunities for our teams was vitally important. We are, in a very real sense, a small "family" in these intense, dangerous environments, and as much opportunity as we can make available to folks to gather together, share a meal, play cards or a board game, exercise, etc. or just to socialize regularly really goes a long way to ensure high morale.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Somalia?

Answer. My first step upon my arrival in both Nairobi and then Mogadishu as Ambassador, if confirmed, will be to meet individually with all section/department heads to ensure they fully understand our USG policy priorities in Somalia and that they have a gameplan for their sections/departments to meet those priorities. I will meet with them, listen to all they have to tell me about their ongoing work, and then discuss with them individually our ideas for moving forward together to success. I will not hesitate to tell any of these section or agency heads if I see something they are currently doing that does not comport with our overall USG priorities, but I will work with them closely and collaboratively to get things back on course, if indeed there are any issues. I also very much prize face-to-face engagement with our entire team as often as possible, and another top priority for me will be to hold a townhall both with our team members working out of Embassy Nairobi and our team in Mogadishu within my first few days at post. Townhalls provide not only the leader a chance to meet the team in its entirety at one time, but also gives every team member a chance to ask any questions they may have of the new leader.

I think such engagements, early on, go a very long way in establishing trust for the entire team.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for Chiefs of Mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I would describe my management style as “lead by example.” I will never ask any of my team members to do anything that I myself am not willing to do. That includes working as hard or as long as necessary to accomplish a particular task against a tight deadline, or going out to a risky location to accomplish a key mission priority, if the risk/reward calculus dictates that mission is essential, or going the extra mile to have yet another meeting, external engagement, or attend a social event if it’s important to do, no matter how tired you may be at the moment. I also believe “leading by example” encompasses being supportive, thoughtful, and compassionate towards everyone. I have no tolerance for and will not accept unkind behavior towards other people. I expect all of my team members to be thoughtful and constantly supportive towards all their colleagues. That doesn’t mean “hand holding” everyone at all times. It just means being considerate of others’ feelings, looking out for one another, and lending a helping hand whenever you think your colleague needs your support.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or in private?

Answer. No. Our greatest resource at the State Department is our people. Treating my team with respect and dignity is at the core of maintaining that resource.

Question. In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeed in their roles?

Answer. Absolutely. Providing my team with timely, constructive feedback is key to mission success at any U.S. mission but especially at a post as unique and challenging as Somalia.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes. Timely, accurate, and direct feedback is paramount to success in a mission with a high operational tempo like Somalia.

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and local citizens. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our Embassy walls enough to fully accomplish their missions?

Answer. In my experience, U.S. diplomats travel outside Embassy walls as often as the security situation in a given country allows. Regrettably, the security situation in Mogadishu remains a significant impediment to engaging Somalis outside the security of Aden Adde International Airport compound. If confirmed, I am committed to working closely with the Diplomatic Security Service both to ensure the safety and security of U.S. personnel and to take advantage of opportunities to expand our engagement as circumstances allow. In all of my years working and operating in Iraq, Afghanistan, Yemen, and Pakistan, I have always valued most highly the professionalism of our Diplomatic Security colleagues and I trust their judgement on security implicitly. I also highly value the information provided by other agency partners that regularly provide essential insights into our operational security environment. I will always hold the safety and security of all my team members as my highest priority, but will also never shy away from moving out into the operational environment in Somalia whenever we have a critical mission to perform and our intelligence and expert opinion from our DS Security professionals tell me we can accomplish the mission with an acceptable level of risk. I take these movement decisions for U.S. personnel to be the most important decisions I will make during my tenure as U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. Engaging diplomatically throughout Somalia is critical to advancing our foreign policy and national security objectives in East Africa. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Bureau of Diplomatic Security to ensure sufficient security measures are in place to conduct such engagements safely and effectively.

Question. As Chief of Mission, how will you balance the significant security challenges associated with working in Mogadishu with the need for our diplomats to be present and engaged with our partners?

Answer. If confirmed, the safety of U.S. citizens in Somalia and of U.S. Embassy personnel will be my highest priority. I will work with the Diplomatic Security Service to maximize the ability of our diplomats to advance our goals and interests through engagements throughout Somalia whenever possible through effective risk mitigation and management decisions. I will ensure we remain able to engage effectively with all levels of the Somali Government as well as with our international partners, many of whom are also located on the Mogadishu International Airport compound.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO RICHARD H. RILEY IV BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People’s Republic of China is the “only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it.” The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People’s Republic of China (PRC) and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Even as we see heinous atrocities committed by Hamas against innocent Israeli citizens, the CCP is still publicly blaming Israel instead of Hamas for the violence. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the CCP a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that “the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back strongly against the People’s Republic of China (PRC) efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Somalia ties.

Question. Does the CCP undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence’s 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.”

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the CCP that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment’s notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State’s Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the PRC in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Somalia and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State, interagency colleagues, and Congress to address the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in Somalia and the region.

Question. The United States has conducted military strikes against terrorist groups in Somalia for more than 15 years. If confirmed, besides military actions against the terrorist groups operating in Somalia, what other actions will you undertake to finally defeat these groups?

Answer. Defeating terrorist groups requires a combination of military, diplomatic, and development tools to counter near term security threats while addressing the underlying conditions that allow terrorist groups to take root. To complement security efforts, if confirmed I will: assist Somali-led efforts to advance political reconciliation processes, including regular dialogue between national and sub-national levels of government; strengthen good governance and accountability structures, including holding more democratic and inclusive elections; support efforts to stabilize and promote recovery in conflict-affected areas; promote inclusive economic growth and job creation; and build the resilience and capacity of the Somali people to withstand climate shocks and decrease their dependence on external aid.

Question. How will you incentivize a government, with a history of pervasive corruption, to continue power sharing with rival clan and sub-clans, to support U.S. goals in the region regarding security and reform?

Answer. Corruption and fiscal mismanagement remain serious concerns in Somalia that impede political reconciliation, undermine counterterrorism and stabilization efforts, and stifle economic growth. President Hassan Shiekh Mohamud has acknowledged these concerns and committed to improving public sector financial management and transparency while pursuing military operations against al-Shabaab and governance and economic reforms. If confirmed, I will work to hold the federal government of Somalia to these commitments and to support and strengthen Somali financial management institutions and practices.

Question. How would you advance U.S. support for Israel and the Abraham Accords in Somalia, given its regional Middle East relationships, if confirmed?

Answer. The United States strongly supports the Abraham Accords and other efforts like the Negev Forum. If confirmed, I will explore opportunities to incorporate Somalia into these and other regional efforts that include Israel.

Question. The Chinese military base in Djibouti is 25km as the crow flies and less than 35km by road to the Somaliland border, and the Government of Somaliland is an outspoken friend and partner to Taiwan—one of the only in Africa. Despite challenges, Somaliland has one of the strongest democracies in the Horn of Africa. At the same time, the Department of State and the former U.S. Ambassador to Somalia has taken an approach to Somalia that significantly diminishes the opportunity for partnership with Somaliland, and which has been overtly antagonistic at times. As U.S. Ambassador to Somalia, if confirmed, how will you engage with Somaliland as a partner in countering China and as a friend to Taiwan?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to actively working and engaging with Somaliland within the framework of our single Somalia policy to counter malign Chinese influence and to support Taiwan. This will include support for Somaliland's efforts to prevent illegal, unauthorized, and unregulated fishing by PRC vessels in the Gulf of Aden and strengthening cooperation in other areas of mutual interest. I will also look for opportunities to coordinate with Taiwan's assistance office in Somaliland, including on democracy, humanitarian, and development initiatives, consistent with our one China policy.

Question. Would formal recognition of Somaliland advance U.S. interests? Why or why not?

Answer. I do not believe formal recognition of Somaliland would advance U.S. interests. No country or international organization has recognized Somaliland's assertion that it is an independent state. Recognition of Somaliland could further destabilize Somalia by encouraging other Somali regions or federal member states, such as Puntland, to pursue independence. It could also ignite conflict between Somaliland and Puntland and within the contested Sool and Sanaag districts, which would further exacerbate already dire humanitarian conditions and create an opening for extremist groups like al-Shabaab and ISIS-Somalia to exploit.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARK TONER BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. In your view, what are the top three priorities for the U.S. bilateral relationship with Liberia that you will advance or maintain as U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed?

Answer. If confirmed, beyond serving and protecting U.S. citizens, the top priorities I will seek to advance are to promote a secure, stable Liberia with enhanced rule of law, foster broad-based economic development, promote private sector-led growth, and improve the country's human development situation. These objectives can only be achieved if the Government of Liberia shares and actively prioritizes these goals. Currently these goals are being actively undermined by rampant government corruption, which makes exposing and countering corruption fundamental to success in Liberia.

Question. In your testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on October 19, you stated, "Liberia is a country shaped by years of conflict, terror, disease, and hardship." Please elaborate on Liberia's history with threats and acts of violent extremism and terrorism.

Answer. Liberia's 1989–97 and 1999–2003 civil wars were marked by massacres, rape, torture, and the use of child soldiers among warring factions, leaving the population terrorized and traumatized. Liberia today is rated low for terrorism, but a real and growing threat of regional terrorism exists due to the operational presence of known terrorist entities in West Africa's Sahel region. U.S. security assistance and cooperation with Liberian military and law enforcement in Liberia aim to increase those institutions' readiness to respond to violent extremism and acts of terrorism should they arise.

Liberia and the United States have shared a "special relationship" since Liberia's founding in 1847. This friendship has remained strong through a multitude of challenges, including during and following Liberia's brutal civil wars and the 2014 Ebola outbreak. However, Liberia faces significant challenges to development, democratic governance, and fighting rampant corruption. A run-off presidential election is scheduled for November 7.

Question. As U.S. Ambassador to Liberia, if confirmed, how will you approach the "Special Relationship" with Liberia?

Answer. Because of the "Special Relationship" with Liberia, Liberians look to the United States as a model and respect our leadership: what we say matters. If confirmed, I intend to use that voice to advance U.S. policy priorities and put pressure on the Government of Liberia to hold corrupt actors accountable and to deliver on its commitment to the Liberian people to work toward a stable, prosperous society that upholds the rule of law and respects human rights.

Question. How will you ensure that the U.S. relationship, including with the next Administration, results in positive change for the Liberian people, including in difficult areas like transitional justice and reconciliation, and fighting corruption?

Answer. Impunity for the atrocities and human rights violations committed during Liberia's civil wars has a lingering impact on hope among Liberia's citizens for a better future. It is easy to draw a line from impunity for those atrocities to many of the challenges Liberia faces today. Allowing people who have committed the most heinous crimes to remain in power fosters mistrust, insecurity, and corruption. The United States believes the process of holding a Truth and Reconciliation Commission was meaningful for many Liberians, and the United States has stood, and will continue to stand, with the Liberian people. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission's report could be a foundation for future progress, but this process must be Liberian-led and must include both government and civil society actors. I will continue our policy to use all tools at our disposal to promote justice and respect for human rights.

Equally, if confirmed, I will continue to reinforce U.S. values to address corruption, including promoting good governance, fiscal transparency, improved public financial management, and inclusive economic growth in my interactions with the next Liberian administration. I will continue to use all tools at our disposal to promote transparency and accountability for corrupt actors, including sanctions when warranted.

Question. How can the United States recalibrate its 'special relationship' with Liberia to optimize our influence in facilitating crucial reforms by the Government, all while avoiding the risk of creating excessive reliance on U.S. aid and support?

Answer. If confirmed, my top priority will be to bolster our efforts to address systemic challenges by holding the Liberian Government accountable to commitments it has made to improve infrastructure, combat corruption, and ensure the responsible and productive use of foreign assistance.

Question. The Liberia run-off election offers a chance to reassess and reset aspects of the U.S.-Liberia relationship. Do you agree? If so, which areas would you prioritize for resetting under President Weah's second term or President Boakai's first term?

Answer. The strength of the relationship is currently being tested by the Liberian Government's rampant corruption, which undermines its commitment to achieve real and long-lasting democratic and economic progress. Regardless of who wins Liberia's presidential election, I will, if confirmed, continue to promote transparency, accountability, and rule of law with all the policy tools at my disposal, whether that means applying sanctions or ensuring the responsible and productive use of foreign assistance.

Democracy

Question. What is your view of the role of a U.S. Ambassador in supporting democratic institutions and democratic governance?

Answer. I view the role of a U.S. Ambassador in supporting democratic institutions and democratic governance as four-fold. First, the U.S. Ambassador should work in tandem with like-minded partners to advocate with political actors—both inside and outside of government—for strengthening democratic institutions and democratic governance consistent with democratic values and human rights. In doing so, the U.S. Ambassador should advocate for transparency and accountability in government decision making and space in which political parties, civil society, and independent media can operate freely. Second, the U.S. Ambassador should work closely with independent, host country pro-democracy voices to help amplify their calls for review and reform of democratic institutions and democratic governance practices and to press for debate, consideration, and, as appropriate, enactment of reforms. Third, the U.S. Ambassador in a post-electoral environment should be pressing government institutions, opposition parties, and civil society to review and act upon the recommended reforms contained in national and international observation reports on the electoral contest to ensure that future contests are free and fair. Finally, the U.S. Ambassador should be working with the Country Team and Washington to assess the democracy and governance programs in which the U.S. Government is involved and to ensure such programs are adequately working to provide technical support for strengthening of key democratic institutions—both governmental and non-governmental.

Question. In your view, how can the United States better support the democratic aspirations of the people of Liberia?

Answer. The lack of independence of key election-related institutions, insufficient judicial independence, insufficient legislative oversight, and endemic corruption stand out as some of the most significant challenges to the democratic aspirations of the Liberian people. To better support these aspirations, I would work, if confirmed, with Liberian pro-democracy stakeholders and like-minded international partners to use Liberia's 2023 national elections as a catalyst to encourage the Government, political opposition, civil society, and other stakeholders to embark on a national reflection on the state of Liberia's democratic institutions. The United States should advocate that the recommendations from the 2023 international and domestic election observation reports—particularly those related to the politicization of key electoral institutions—form a key part of that reflection and resulting reforms. Available U.S. democracy and governance funding should be used to support the long-term strengthening of institutions identified for genuine reform and to further develop an independent judiciary, democratic political parties, and effective and independent civil society and media institutions.

Trade and Investment

Question. If confirmed, how would you practice commercial diplomacy on behalf of U.S. investments in Liberia?

Answer. I understand that Liberia's economy has significant potential for private sector investment, with abundant mineral resources, large areas of fertile land, well-stocked fisheries, and tourist development potential. If confirmed, I would work with Embassy Monrovia's Deal Team to enhance our efforts to link U.S. firms with business opportunities in Liberia, whether through the International Trade Administration (ITA)'s Express Leads system, reverse trade missions, or other commercial diplomacy tools. I would ensure that our economic officers leverage our substantial economic toolkit, which includes Prosper Africa, Power Africa, U.S. Trade Development Agency (USTDA), the Export-Import Bank (EXIM), and the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation (DFC) to help support U.S. businesses seeking to invest in or trade with Liberia. If confirmed, I would utilize DFC and other trade development tools such as USTDA and EXIM to offer viable alternatives to PRC-proposed debt-financed infrastructure projects. I would meet regularly with U.S. companies doing business in Liberia and those interested in entering the market to understand investment and trade impediments in Liberia, advocating for their removal using USAID trade and investment policy development tools as appropriate to support the Government of Liberia in such reform efforts. Given the comparatively small size of the Liberian market, I would advocate for Liberia's further economic integration into the wider West African marketplace and for continued reduction in tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade with its neighbors.

Question. What is your assessment of Liberia's greatest barriers to increased two-way trade and investment with the United States?

Answer. Although the Government of Liberia has a generally favorable attitude toward two-way trade and investment with the United States, and generally treats U.S. companies in a non-discriminatory fashion, U.S. businesses face obstacles, including corruption, low human capital development, poor infrastructure, and intermittent rule of law concerns. In addition, the small size of the Liberian domestic economy deters some U.S. businesses from the cost of entry into this new market. If confirmed, I would continue to urge the Government of Liberia to improve on these investment and trade climate issues to strengthen their economy and make it more attractive to U.S. businesses, including through continued pursuit of full economic integration with other West African states.

Question. What is your understanding of the tools at your disposal—including through Prosper Africa—as U.S. Ambassador to Liberia, if confirmed, to support addressing barriers to trade and investment in the enabling environment, including the need for economic and political reforms?

Answer. If confirmed, I understand that I would be able to access expertise within the State Department, USAID, and the Department of Commerce, including through Prosper Africa, to support addressing barriers to trade and investment in the enabling environment, including the need for economic and political reforms. Each of these agencies has programs that could potentially be utilized to assist the Government of Liberia in analyzing barriers to trade and investment and in developing reform strategies to address such barriers. In addition, I would be able to use the full-range of U.S. Government trade and investment development agencies—including USTDA, EXIM, and DFC—to provide direct USG assistance to U.S. companies looking to expand trade and investment in Liberia. Such assistance could help overcome barriers to trade and investment such as project financing and political risk. My understanding is that Prosper Africa serves as a one-stop shop through which U.S. and African companies can access USG assistance for expanded two-way trade and investment.

Question. How will you work with Prosper Africa leadership to ensure that Liberia can benefit from Prosper Africa resources, tools and expertise?

Answer. If confirmed, I would seek to identify through consultation with the U.S. business community active in Liberia those areas in which U.S. Government expertise could be most beneficial to removing barriers to trade and investment in Liberia. I would work with Prosper Africa leadership and the Liberian Government to identify ways in which Prosper Africa could engage on such issues and provide technical assistance to advance necessary reforms. I would also anticipate a regular dialogue with Prosper Africa leadership, both in Washington D.C. and on the continent, to identify resources, tools and expertise that are best fitted to Liberia. Moreover, I would look to expand contact between the Embassy Deal Team and Prosper Africa to ensure that Prosper Africa was fully aware of emerging opportunities in the Liberian marketplace with an eye to bringing its tools, resources, and expertise to bear in identifying and assisting U.S. companies to take advantage of such opportunities—particularly in cases where an alternative to PRC investment is required.

Question. If confirmed, will you prioritize working with the Liberian Government to make a reasonable decision regarding the proposed amendment to the Mineral Development Agreement (MDA) with ArcelorMittal?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate with the Government of Liberia to stand by its commitments to and agreements with investors.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that Embassy Monrovia does not hinder the efforts of any commercial actor or firm that works to safeguard commercial or investment interests in Liberia, particularly in the mining sector, not aligned with the People's Republic of China (PRC)?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate with the Government of Liberia to stand by its commitments to and agreements with investors as well as working with the Government to improve its investment climate, including making improvements in infrastructure, and in the legal and regulatory climate.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

The question above asked if you commit to ensuring that Embassy Monrovia does not hinder the efforts of any commercial actor or firm that works to safeguard commercial or investment interests in Liberia, particularly in the mining sector, not aligned with the People's Republic of China (PRC).

Question. While I appreciate your personal commitment to advocate with the Government Liberia to stand by its commitments, can you please respond directly to the question?

Answer. I will, if confirmed, ensure that Embassy Monrovia will not hinder the efforts of any commercial entity that safeguards our commercial and investment interests in Liberia. I will promote investments by credible firms that align with our private sector-led, free enterprise economic model, push back against corrupt and unfair practices, and encourage the Government of Liberia to manage responsibly plans to grow their mineral sector. I will, if confirmed, work to ensure that not only deals get done quickly, but that the sector remains viable and sustainable to maintain and grow these crucial investments.

Trafficking in Persons

In the State Department's 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report, Liberia was ranked as Tier 2 for another year.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Liberia operationalize the prioritized recommendations contained in the TIP report?

Answer. I understand that the State Department's Office to Combat Trafficking in Persons has provided a grant to the University of Georgia to work with the Government of Liberia and non-governmental organizations to strengthen efforts to prevent trafficking in persons, specifically the sex and labor trafficking of children. This program would carry out similar, integrated work in other regional countries and would, if successfully implemented, help address many of the recommendations contained in the Liberia Trafficking in Persons report. If confirmed, I would press the Government of Liberia to take full advantage of this assistance, to adopt the legal and procedural reforms recommended as part of it, and to cooperate fully with regional partners in combating trafficking. I would also meet regularly with implementors of this grant on-the-ground to ensure effective implementation.

Question. If confirmed as Ambassador, do you commit to reporting the realities of the trafficking situation in Liberia in the annual trafficking in persons report as well as to the appropriate congressional committees?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to reporting the realities of the trafficking situation in Liberia in the annual trafficking in persons report as well as working with the Department's legislative office to report to the appropriate congressional committees.

Religious Freedom

In the State Department's 2022 International Religious Freedom report, Liberia is noted as generally having societal and governmental respect for religious freedom.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. The Liberian constitution provides for the separation of religion and state and stipulates all persons are entitled to freedom of thought, conscience, and religion, except as required by law to protect public safety, order, health, morals, or the rights of others. It also provides for equal protection under the law and prohibits religious tests for office and the establishment of a state religion. If confirmed, I would continue the Embassy's longstanding advocacy for religious tolerance and freedom, and engagement with members of all faiths in Liberia. I would work closely with the Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom and Office for International Religious Freedom so our approach in Liberia to promoting religious freedom is informed by the most recent guidance and best practices.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to personally engage with civil society on promoting religious freedom.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Liberia increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. If confirmed, I would use my position to host religious leaders for roundtable discussions, and I would meet with religious leaders during in-country trips to emphasize the important role they can play to prevent and mitigate conflict. I would leverage our Public Diplomacy programming and exchanges to find opportunities to expose young leaders to religious freedom issues. I would also seek opportunities for U.S.-based experts on religious freedom to visit Liberia and interact with various audiences in and out of the capital.

State Management and Oversight

Question. How do you intend to work with senior leadership at the State Department to address acute staffing challenges at Mission Liberia?

Answer. If confirmed, I would address acute staffing challenges in several ways. First of all, to attract talent to a post like Mission Liberia, I will have to actively recruit and network. Depending on the vacancy, I would work with the Deputy Chief of Mission and relevant personnel at post and within the Department to identify possible candidates and then engage directly with them to address their concerns as well as their aspirations. In other words, the personal touch can go a long way in building a cohesive and competent team at a post like Mission Liberia. As a senior FSO, I have always sought to empower my team to engage in innovative ways to advance our foreign policy priorities. Cultivating that ethos is paramount to getting the best talent to consider bidding on Mission Liberia, a place where there are numerous challenges but also the opportunity to move the needle on key foreign policy issues. Just as importantly, I will emphasize diversity, as it is critical our missions reflect the American society and culture they represent.

I will also strive to establish an environment amenable to those with families, which means ensuring those with school-age children have access to excellent educational and extra-curricular activities. I will work to cultivate a strong work-life balance for all employees, one that allows ample time to decompress and pursue activities outside of the workplace.

In sum, recruiting the very best requires actively networking to identify and recruit talented individuals by ensuring their tours will be fruitful professionally and personally.

Many U.S. Missions have been under enormous stress over the last several years, in large part due to COVID.

Question. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Liberia?

Answer. My understanding is that morale is strong at Mission Liberia despite the challenging environment and the lingering impact of stress from COVID-19. Embassy personnel in Monrovia have a strong sense of purpose and mission, which is evident in their output (reporting cables, public diplomacy engagements, assistance programs, etc.) as well as through the consultations I have had thus far. It is critical they see the results of their work and see the rewards, including through promotions, and I will make it a priority to see that continues. I have been impressed by those I have spoken with, and it speaks to the previous and current leadership at the Embassy that morale is solid. I will strive to ensure we continue to cultivate an overall ethos that values professionalism; provides necessary support for families; and nurtures a strong sense of community and teamwork.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Liberia?

Answer. My tours overseas have taught me the importance of being attentive to each employee's professional development and ensuring that they know how their work fits into the Embassy's mission and achievement of Department goals. It also is important to take care of the needs of Eligible Family Members through employment, quality education, and activities that bring the community together. Creating and maintaining an environment free of harassment and bullying is a hallmark of my leadership style and essential for employees to flourish. If confirmed, I would model the importance of work-life balance and ensure our managers know how to set priorities and negotiate deadlines to avoid employee burn out and promote resilience. I would advocate with Washington to ensure that assigned workload and deadlines are appropriate for a post of Liberia's limited size and would seek to ensure that assigned workload dovetails with our agreed-upon policy objectives in Liberia.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Liberia?

Answer. If confirmed, I would be leading a U.S. Government team comprised of personnel from multiple agencies. This means ensuring all agencies understand the mission and activities of others and discussing the tradeoffs that often need to be made on foreign policy goals or Embassy operations together. I have found that a structured approach should include weekly Country Team meetings, weekly meetings with agency leaders that include the Deputy Chief of Mission to discuss programs and events, and mission-wide participation in the Integrated Country Strategy and Mission Resource Request planning cycles. Mission-wide off-sites and professional development days would be used to review our progress and develop our workforce skillsets and build a sense of community and mission. Finally, if confirmed, under my leadership, Mission Liberia would review our goals and achievements as we update our Integrated Country Strategy. This is an effective tool to keep all agency activity in-line with our mission goals.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for Chiefs of Mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I believe strongly in empowering those I supervise to be innovative and take ownership of their issues, all while remaining engaged and informed so that I can provide any guidance needed to ensure quality and efficiency. This approach requires frequent one-on-one or small group meetings in addition to larger gatherings. As much as possible, I want to establish a personal relationship with employees, learn about their interests, their aspirations, and their concerns. Moreover, I strive to maintain a workplace atmosphere where mistakes are turned into learning opportunities. I would coach our employees through decision-making processes to develop their leadership skills and provide regular mentoring and support. I am decisive, but inclusive of a wide range of views and will communicate the "why" of a decision to make sure those who were involved and those not involved understand what the Executive Office will be doing and the rationale for it. If confirmed, the Deputy Chief of Mission and I would be attentive to workplace issues and create an environment free from bullying, harassment, and discrimination.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or in private?

Answer. No. It is never acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either privately or publicly. In fact, such behavior almost certainly has a corrosive effect on morale. Performance and conduct management needs to be a regular and ongoing process. Mistakes, when they occur, should be treated as learning opportunities and correcting them should be an inclusive, constructive process that is done in private or, if appropriate, in coordination with an individual's direct supervisor.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with the Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. From my time serving as an acting Deputy Chief of Mission, I understand what it takes to establish and nurture a strong, collaborative relationship between the Ambassador and DCM. If confirmed, I would listen and learn from the experience of the current DCM and respect the relationships she has established with Liberian officials and within the mission. I view the DCM role as a force multiplier and as someone who must be ready to step in during my absence, so she will be involved in key internal and external meetings. I would expect her to always provide her honest, frank opinion so that together we can make the best decisions possible. I would create an environment in which she can feel free to disagree with me when we consider options or suggest course corrections but would ensure that we present a united front to the mission once a decision is made. Leadership at the top must be proactive, consistent, and fair. If confirmed, I am confident the DCM and I would be able to create a positive work experience for our team in Monrovia.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. The Deputy Chief of Mission (DCM) is arguably the most difficult position at post. If confirmed, I would leverage my own experience as an acting DCM at a large Embassy to establish a strong and symbiotic relationship to oversee mission operations and conduct our foreign policy. If confirmed, as I lead the mission,

I would need to be able to work with and through the DCM to ensure that we are protecting U.S. Government resources across agencies, running an efficient Inter-agency Cooperative Services platform, and supporting our personnel needs. The DCM would play the role of chief operating officer of the mission but also be involved in our foreign policy agenda. I would include her in meetings with government officials and in communications with Washington. She would ensure that performance management, budget oversight, and human resources platforms are performing effectively, and our operations soundly steward U.S. Government resources. I would expect her to develop her managerial skills across all aspects of mission life and would coach her as needed. I also would ensure that the DCM and our other employees share in our representational activities to expand our outreach activities. I would expect the DCM to oversee our leadership, mentoring, Family Advocacy, and Diversity, Equity, Inclusion, and Accessibility programs.

In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking

Question. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeed in their roles?

Answer. Yes. I believe that establishing open communications between employees and their supervisors is at the core of effective performance management. Throughout my career, I have mentored supervisors on how to provide effective feedback and write employees' performance reviews and counseling documents. If confirmed, I would continue to pay close attention to developing the performance management skills of our supervisors and the employee's understanding of how the system benefits their professional development. I would seek to ensure that top performers are rewarded and that those with performance challenges receive the appropriate, constructive feedback and support required to address them.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes. I believe that establishing open communications between employees and their supervisors is at the core of effective performance management. Throughout my career, I have mentored supervisors on how to provide clear, accurate, and direct feedback and write employees' performance reviews and counseling documents that include such feedback. If confirmed, I would continue to pay close attention to developing the performance management skills of our supervisors and the employee's understanding of how the system benefits their professional development. I would seek to ensure that top performers are rewarded and that those with performance challenges receive the clear, accurate, and direct feedback and professional development support required to address them.

It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and local citizens.

Question. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our Embassy walls enough to fully accomplish their missions?

Answer. I believe that Mission leadership largely sets the tone and the expectations that determine whether U.S. diplomats sufficiently get outside of our Embassy walls. Throughout my career, especially as a Public Diplomacy officer, I have consistently modeled going outside of the mission walls to meet and cultivate a wide range of contacts in the Government, media, private sector, and in civil society in and beyond the capital and major cities. I do not believe it is possible to be effective as a diplomat without doing so. If confirmed, I would make it a priority to get outside the Embassy walls, travel to the different regions and counties and would encourage all Embassy staff to do likewise as time and resources permit. To enable these efforts, I would work closely with my DCM and the Regional Security Office to ensure that we are managing any associated risks smartly and proactively and that we identify and receive the resources necessary to support robust Mission in-country travel.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I would encourage and support in-country travel with adequate security resources and mentor employees on thinking-outside-the-box on how to engage more frequently and efficiently at the local and grass-roots level. I would also ensure our employees are maintaining contacts with regional leaders at all levels and meeting with them in their areas and when they come to the capital. This also means ensuring that employees are using representational events and funds to cultivate contacts and promote mission goals. I would support cross-cultural learning from our Locally Employed Staff and U.S. employees as well as the basic learning of local languages (greetings and pleasantries) as a way to show our interest in and respect for their culture.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARK TONER BY SENATOR CHRIS VAN HOLLEN

The African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA) is expected to grow Africa's cumulative GDP by $450 billion in the next decade and comprise the largest single market in the world. AfCFTA will also diversify global supply chains, leading to new opportunities for American businesses and consumers. So far, 47 African countries have ratified AfCFTA, seven countries have signed but not yet ratified it, and only one country (Eritrea) has yet to sign. While Liberia has signed the AfCFTA, it has not fully ratified the agreement.

Question. What are the existing barriers to full ratification in Liberia and how can the U.S. support Liberia in this effort?

Answer. The international community, including the United States, continues to work with the Government of Liberia to increase understanding and awareness of the AfCFTA and spur the Liberian Senate to ratify the agreement.

Question. How would full ratification of AfCFTA strengthen U.S. economic interests in African countries?

Answer. By increasing market access and reducing barriers to intra-African trade, the AfCFTA will help its members grow manufacturing, industrial development, tourism, and intra-African cooperation, as well as strengthen economic transformation and the economic and commercial relationship between Africa and the rest of the world. A more prosperous Africa will make African countries better commercial partners for the United States. The AfCFTA would create a larger, more efficient marketplace. Liberia and other AfCFTA members would benefit from increased easier trade with their neighbors on the continent, which would catalyze growth by incentivizing infrastructure development and improving business climates.

Question. What actions should the United States take to support the implementation of AfCFTA in countries like Liberia?

Answer. The United States can support Liberia in implementing the AfCFTA through economic growth assistance programs and forceful U.S. Embassy advocacy that reduce barriers to trade and improve the business and investment climate.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARK TONER BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China (PRC) and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Even as we see heinous atrocities committed by Hamas against innocent Israeli citizens, the CCP is still publicly blaming Israel instead of Hamas for the violence. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the CCP a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I would advance U.S. national security interests and push back against People's Republic of China (PRC) efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Liberia ties.

Question. Does the CCP undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system."

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the CCP that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment's notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I would work with the Department of State's new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the PRC in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in Liberia and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I would work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in Liberia and the region.

Question. What is your assessment of the scope of China's economic and other ties in Liberia?

Answer. The People's Republic of China (PRC) is a significant lender, donor, and investor in Liberia, and the Government of Liberia has signed a memorandum of understanding with the PRC to cooperate through the Belt and Road Initiative. The PRC has constructed high-visibility public infrastructure projects in Monrovia, such as a Senate office building, a Ministerial Complex, a television studio, roads, and health facilities. It also broadcasts English-language radio programming and provides scholarships for Liberian students.

Strategic competitors that do not share the U.S. emphasis on transparency and good governance continue to find an open door in Liberia, particularly among corrupt government officials who seek out financial benefits from PRC-funded projects. In addition, PRC-based companies, including state-owned enterprises, continue to win World Bank infrastructure projects, which is a growing concern.

Question. The Journal of the Chinese People's Armed Police Force Academy, an authoritative Chinese publication, said in 2018 that Chinese peacekeepers should "use the patrol line to increase patrols of Chinese-funded areas" in Liberia. If true, this would mean the PRC has used its leverage over the U.N. peacekeeping system to advance its economic interests in Liberia. Are you aware of this allegation?

Answer. The United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), which included PRC peacekeepers within its ranks, ceased its peacekeeping operations in March 2018. We are unaware of any allegations that PRC peacekeepers misused their presence in Liberia under U.N. auspices. We would be concerned if any country used participation in the U.N. peacekeeping system to advance economic interests.

Question. How can we ensure that Beijing does not abuse international mechanisms to advance its own economic interests in Liberia?

Answer. In 2022, Liberia was one of very few African countries to sign a joint statement to support accountability for the PRC's human rights abuses in Xinjiang, demonstrating a willingness to go against Beijing in order to uphold their values and national interest.

Question. What are the major points of friction in the U.S.-Liberia partnership which we need to improve to compete with the CCP funded projects in Liberia?

Answer. U.S. partnership with Liberia has the ability to solidify Liberia's rejection of the PRC's authoritarian, state-centric model of development. Through continuing to offer viable private sector infrastructure development alternatives and investing in democratic institutions that deliver effective services to the Liberian people, the United States can advance the democratic reforms and free-market development model desired by most Liberians, undercut PRC inroads in West Africa, advance global health security, and advance prosperity for both Americans and Liberians. If confirmed, I would focus on the strengthening of democratic institutions, development of Liberia's public health sector, and advancing U.S. investment in and trade with Liberia in order to further the U.S.-Liberia partnership.

Question. Are there any specific DFC opportunities you would work on with Liberian officials if confirmed?

Answer. I understand the Embassy has robust engagement with Liberia on project identification and financing and that DFC representatives visit Liberia often to determine how to support possible U.S. investment in local projects. If confirmed, I would direct our Deal Team to enhance our efforts to link U.S. firms with opportunities in Liberia appropriate for DFC financing, whether through the International Trade Administration (ITA)'s Express Leads system, reverse trade missions, or other commercial diplomacy tools. I would pay particular attention to utilizing DFC to offer viable alternatives to PRC-proposed debt-financed infrastructure projects. If confirmed, I would meet regularly with U.S. companies interested in expanding their presence in Africa to discuss opportunities in Liberia and to underscore DFC as a potential tool to support their businesses.

Question. The U.S. is a global competition with China, including Africa for access to critical minerals and materials. HPX, an American company, has been granted advocacy status by the U.S. Commerce Department for the development of its Nimba mine in Guinea, which is one of the world's richest deposits of iron ore. However, production is currently stalled because the Liberian Government is not providing HPX with access to its railways to transit iron ore from Nimba to the Buchanan Port. If confirmed, what will you do to ensure the Liberian Government permits American companies to freely compete and trade in and through Liberia?

Answer. I understand that Beijing's engagements in Africa are expanding, including in Liberia. I also understand that the PRC continues to exploit—both legally and illegally—Liberian resources, particularly in the fisheries, forestry, and minerals sectors. I am gravely concerned that such PRC activities and the PRC's proposed infrastructure investments in Liberia are not being carried out in line with internationally accepted standards, such as those spelled out in the U.N. Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, and the Voluntary Principles on Security and Human Rights. If confirmed, I would seek to identify and promote socially responsible foreign investment alternatives to those being pushed by the PRC—particularly U.S. investment—that promote sustainable development and respect for human rights of all individuals.

Question. How would you advance U.S. support for Israel with Liberia, if confirmed?

Answer. If confirmed, I would build on the shared values that are the foundation of our strong bilateral relationship to advance support for Israel. Liberia is one of our most loyal partners in Africa and has been one of our strongest allies at the U.N. General Assembly, voting with the United States on important votes 70 percent of the time last year.

Question. Should an LGBT agenda come before national security, American prosperity, or access to critical minerals when engaging with Liberia?

Answer. Respect for human rights as embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is a central goal of United States foreign policy, including for members of marginalized populations, and is a key element of the positive model we offer that makes the United States a partner of choice, including for Liberia.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO MARK TONER BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

The Chinese Communist Party takes a whole-of-government and often whole-of-nation approach to advancing its national security interests, including by using national diplomatic, economic, and even military resources to provide advantages to Chinese companies globally. It is in the vital national security interest of the United States to ensure open and competitive access to critical minerals and materials, including iron ore. The United States has sought among other things to bolster multi-user regional infrastructure linking Guinea and Liberia, and Liberia's October 2022 Executive Order 112 is in line with those efforts and provides for multi-user access on Liberia's railways.

One critical project involves an existing rail line that runs to Buchanan Port, and would be used by an American company, High Power Exploration Inc (HPX), to move ore from the Nimba district. Liberia has not made multi-user access available, and according to public reports the dynamic has endangered HPX's project, made Chinese seizure a possibility, and put Liberia is at risk of lawsuits and arbitration. State Department officials recently met with relevant parties on this issue.

Question. What is your assessment of Liberia's commitment to providing multi-user access to its railways?

Answer. Meaningful progress on implementing multi-user access to Liberia's railways will likely be delayed until after the inauguration in January 2024 of the winner of Liberia's on-going presidential election—of which the second round of voting takes place in November. Nonetheless, if confirmed, I will advocate both before and after the election for multi-user access.

Question. What diplomatic options are available to ensure that the Government of Liberia makes multi-user access available for railways?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate with the Government of Liberia to stand by its commitments to and agreements with investors, including HPX.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO DAVID E. WHITE, JR. BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. What is your understanding of morale throughout the Peace Corps?

Answer. I am heartened by the integrity, compassion, and dedication that Peace Corps staff and volunteers bring to their work each day. Development work in the best of times is challenging, and this fact is more salient given that the setbacks caused by the pandemic require urgency to recover lost ground and achieve greater results. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting the team in my role as Deputy Director.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale within the Peace Corps?

Answer. I believe that effective leadership requires leaders to get out from behind their desks and into the field to see first-hand the conditions in which their teams operate. If confirmed, I plan to meaningfully engage with Peace Corps staff at home and abroad, as well as with volunteers at their posts, to better understand and appreciate the constraints and challenges they face in their work and how I can best support them in achieving the Peace Corps' goals. If confirmed, I intend to approach this fact-finding process without preconceived notions and in an objective and unbiased manner that enables me to best respond to feedback with clear and decisive action. In short, I believe that leaders must listen and carefully review all relevant facts before implementing new practices or solutions.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at the Peace Corps?

Answer. The best organizations are inspired by a common mission and achieve that mission by operating through a set of shared values. For example, when I served in the U.S. Army, our mission statement was simple yet powerful—to fight and win our nation's wars. We accomplished that mission by living the Army values of loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity, and personal courage. Although I have been out of uniform for nearly a decade, I carry with me the lessons I learned in the Army about inspiring others in service of a shared vision. Like the Army, the Peace Corps also has a simple yet powerful mission—to promote world peace and friendship. The Peace Corps accomplishes that mission through the three goals set out in the Peace Corps Act: helping countries interested in meeting their need for trained people, helping promote a better understanding of Americans on the part of the peoples served, and helping promote a better understanding of other people on the part of Americans. These goals inspire staff and volunteers to drive tangible results on behalf of the communities they serve. If confirmed, I will partner with Peace Corps Director Carol Spahn to ensure that all agency staff and volunteers continue to understand and embrace the Peace Corps' mission and vision and are best supported to achieve it.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for agency executives. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I believe in treating all people with dignity and respect regardless of their rank or position. I also believe that all people in an organization are equal, even if they have different duties and responsibilities, and that teamwork, collaboration, and robust communication across the entire organization are essential to its success. Growing up, my father taught me that as a leader you must always inspect what you expect, which means that you set high standards and then hold folks accountable for meeting those standards. Moreover, in my experience, organizations achieve their greatest results when the whole team is "bought in" and fully committed to an objective, and earning buy-in among your colleagues requires careful listening and thoughtful consultation.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. No. I believe that leaders and managers should always treat their subordinates, peers, and superiors with dignity and respect. As a West Point graduate and lifelong fan of the New York Giants, I believe that Coach Vince Lombardi put it best when he said, "praise in public; criticize in private." And even when a manager provides criticism, I believe that such criticism should be delivered in a professional manner with specific, constructive, and actionable feedback that enables personal growth and professional development.

Question. How do you envision your leadership relationship with your Deputy?

Answer. If confirmed as Deputy Director of the Peace Corps, I will treat all colleagues with dignity and respect, and work collaboratively and professionally with the agency's senior staff to ensure that the Peace Corps realizes its full potential.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your deputy?

Answer. If confirmed as Deputy Director of the Peace Corps, I will partner with Director Spahn to ensure that my leadership duties and responsibilities are carefully tailored to my skills, capabilities, and experience as well as to the needs of the agency. Given that the Peace Corps has been without a Senate-confirmed Deputy Director since January 2017, if confirmed, I intend to bring much needed management capacity to the agency and greater enable its staff and volunteers to achieve its strategic objectives.

"Anomalous health incidents", commonly referred to as "Havana Syndrome", have been debilitating and sidelining U.S. diplomats around the world for years. They have caused serious, negative consequences for U.S. diplomacy, yet many believe that the Department is not doing enough to care for, protect, and communicate to its personnel.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to taking this threat seriously?

Answer. Yes. The health, safety, and security of Peace Corps staff and volunteers must always be the agency's top priority.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to talking as openly as you can to Peace Corps employees and volunteers about this serious issue?

Answer. Yes.

Question. There have been several public incidents presenting major safety and security concerns regarding Peace Corps volunteers. What steps has the Peace Corps taken in the last three years (since the global evacuation in March 2020) to address this short fall, and how have safety and security measures improved for those re-entering service? Please be detailed.

Answer. My understanding is that during the pandemic and the concomitant suspension of volunteer activities abroad, the agency devoted a significant amount of time, effort, and investment in strengthening its safety, security, and health systems for the benefit of its volunteers. If confirmed, I will strongly support efforts to ensure the agency has the resources necessary to maintain and further enhance these improved systems, including by addressing and implementing outstanding Office of Inspector General recommendations.

Question. Sexual assault of volunteers continues to generate significant public and congressional attention. Thanks to the 2011 Kate Puzey Act and the Farr-Castle Act, the Peace Corps was given new tools to curb this scourge. Please explain the Peace Corps efforts to continue to combat sexual assault of volunteers in the field.

Answer. The health, safety, and security of volunteers must always be the Peace Corps' first priority. The agency must strive to prevent all acts of sexual assault and sexual harassment completely and totally. However, I am acutely aware that the world is a dangerous place, at home and abroad, and so when a sexual assault occurs, the agency must employ a victim-centered approach. Such approach should focus on treating victims with empathy, dignity, and respect, providing them with all appropriate medical care and other resources, ensuring that they understand the full suite of reporting options, and finally, supporting them in their return to service or the next step in their personal journey.

Question. If confirmed, how will you engage with new countries who are asking for the Peace Corps to return to their communities?

Answer. I understand that there is high demand for Peace Corps volunteers in many countries around the world. If confirmed, I will work to support and strengthen the great work that Director Spahn has led in returning volunteers to service, which will include visiting prospective posts and engaging directly with foreign government leaders.

Question. There has been significant Congressional concern about the Peace Corps returning to closed and/or unsafe missions. Please explain the safety protocol for such decisions.

Answer. The Peace Corps must be committed to the safety and security of its volunteers above all else. As a nominee, I am not privy to the specific and detailed safety and security protocols relating to when, where, and how volunteers serve around the globe. However, I am aware that the agency takes its responsibility to safeguard volunteers very seriously and that it diligently and consistently applies a careful and country-specific analysis to each volunteer mission. If confirmed, I will study the agency's safety and security protocols in great detail and work to ensure that such protocols are sufficient and relevant to the fast-paced and evolving nature of volunteer service in developing countries and implemented appropriately.

Question. Do you commit to informing Congress appropriately of any safety and security issues in a timely and efficient manner?

Answer. Yes.

Question. What do you believe is the Peace Corps biggest challenge in 2023?

Answer. The pandemic has disproportionately affected many developing nations, especially as it relates to their economic, health, and development goals. Under Director Spahn's leadership, the Peace Corps has successfully returned thousands of volunteers to service in partner nations around the world. More recently, through its "Bold Invitation" campaign, the Peace Corps aggressively seeks to recruit and deploy volunteers as expeditiously as possible to restore the agency's strength to pre-pandemic levels as well as meet increased demand from new partner nations.

Given the United States' vital interests in the Indo-Pacific, I believe that we must expand the role of development work and people-to-people exchange in the region, which is a task that the Peace Corps is uniquely suited to accomplish. However, operating in the Indo-Pacific comes with certain funding requirements and logistical challenges, and if confirmed, I would welcome your support in securing the necessary resources to enable the Peace Corps to maintain and increase a significant and visible presence in this critically important region.

Question. In your view, is the Peace Corps principally an international development program that also builds cultural ties within its areas of operation, or a cultural exchange program that also advances international development within its areas of operation?

Answer. I believe that the Peace Corps is a development organization that achieves its mission of promoting world peace and friendship through people-to-people engagement of American volunteers living and working in host communities, where they learn from each other. This grassroots diplomacy benefits partner nations and communities in which volunteers serve as well as the American people. I have been inspired by countless stories about lives improved and communities transformed through Peace Corps volunteers' efforts. As just one example, U.S. Ambassador John Nkengasong was taught science by a Peace Corps volunteer in Cameroon during his years in secondary school. Amb. Nkengasong now serves as the Ambassador-at-Large and Coordinator of U.S. Government Activities to Combat HIV/

AIDS Globally and Special Representative for Global Health Diplomacy at the Department of State.

Question. The Peace Corps is funded by a direct appropriation, but also received significant levels of programmatic support through transfers from other agencies. If confirmed, how will you account for all of the funds managed by the Peace Corps?

Answer. The Peace Corps must always be a good steward of taxpayer funds and government resources. If confirmed, I expect to work closely with the agency's chief financial officer and other colleagues to ensure that all funds are properly accounted for and managed appropriately.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring full and complete compliance with current law, which prohibits the use of U.S. foreign assistance to perform or promote abortion as a method of family planning, support involuntary sterilizations, or lobby for or against the legalization of abortion overseas? Will you commit to ensuring volunteers are both aware of and compliant with these statutory restrictions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will comply with all applicable laws and require that all Peace Corps staff and volunteers do the same.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring that Peace Corps staff, country directors, and volunteers consistently uphold the highest ethical standards, including by holding them personally accountable for violations of U.S. and local law?

Answer. Yes.

Question. As written in the (but not-yet-passed) Peace Corps Reauthorization Act (S. 1203), there is currently a provision providing suspension without pay for any Peace Corps employee or volunteer who engages in serious misconduct. If confirmed, do you commit to adhering to this policy regardless if the Act becomes law? Please explain.

Answer. As a nominee, I have not had the opportunity to study the current version of the Peace Corps Reauthorization Act with the benefit of full context and appreciation of the impact of the legislation's proposed provisions, including this one, should they be enacted. However, if confirmed, I will familiarize myself with all relevant information, and I am fully committed to working with you and your office to understand this proposed policy and how the agency can ensure that it upholds the highest ethical and professional standards among its staff and volunteers. In addition, if confirmed, I will comply with all applicable laws.

Question. Peace Corps' plans for virtual service is counter to its mission as defined in U.S. Code. Please provide your views on virtual service and if such service will continue should you be confirmed.

Answer. Given the limited information available to me as a nominee, I have only a limited understanding of the Virtual Service Pilot. Based on such limited knowledge, I understand that the Virtual Service Pilot is a distinct opportunity that provides private citizens the opportunity to donate their time by engaging virtually to contribute to the mission of the Peace Corps. I also understand that the Virtual Service Pilot is a complement to, and not a substitute for, traditional in-person, in-country volunteer service. Moreover, I understand that the Virtual Service Pilot is just that—a pilot. If confirmed, I will carefully study the results of the Virtual Service Pilot, meaningfully consult with you and your office, and ensure that in-person, in-country volunteer service remains the Peace Corps' crown jewel.

Question. If confirmed, will you support the re-opening of Peace Corps Mission China? Please explain why or why not.

Answer. No. If confirmed, I will not support re-opening the Peace Corps' program in China due to, among other reasons, the high demand for volunteers from other countries and the limited resources available to meet such demand.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO DAVID E. WHITE, JR. BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China (PRC) and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Even as we see heinous atrocities committed by Hamas against innocent Israeli citizens, the CCP is still publicly blaming Israel instead of Hamas for the violence. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the CCP a threat to the United States?

Answer. As articulated in its 2022 National Security Strategy, I support the Administration's "invest, align, compete" strategy toward the PRC. Investing in our domestic economy is critical to enhancing our competitiveness abroad. Working closely and thoughtfully with allies and partners who are aligned with our priorities and values is critically important, and in addition to carefully managing our bilateral relationships with such allies and partners, the United States must also make good use of strategic security dialogues and intergovernmental fora, including, among others, the Quad and the G7. The U.S. must compete with the PRC in a tough yet responsible manner, especially in the Indo-Pacific, coastal West Africa, and closer to home in Latin America.

Question. Does the CCP undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The CCP exists to further the PRC's interests, which at times are inimical to the United States' interests. The U.S. must do everything it can to fiercely defend its interests and deliver on behalf of the American people.

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the CCP that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment's notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. Given the PRC's size and influence, they are a necessary partner in confronting certain global challenges. The U.S. should therefore cooperate when it can and compete when it must. However, whenever the U.S. and PRC's interests are aligned and thus enable cooperation on pressing issues of global concern, the U.S. must never sacrifice its values and always work prudently to seek to hold the PRC accountable for human rights violations and abuses.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the PRC in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. I am not aware of any potential joint activity with organizations or representatives of the PRC as it relates to the Peace Corps. The Administration's approach toward the PRC focuses on competing with the PRC when our interests and values diverge, and cooperating when they align. If confirmed, I will support the Administration's policy on the PRC.

As publicly reported, the Peace Corps program in China has closed and, if confirmed, I will not support re-opening the Peace Corps program in China.

Question. Since inception in 1961, more than 240,000 volunteers have served in 143 countries to promote world peace, help others understand American culture, and share volunteers' experiences with Americans back home. Currently the Peace Corps works in 51 countries focusing upon economic and agricultural development and sectors such as education, health, and the environment among others. These goals have remained unchanged since inception. How effective do you believe the Peace Corps has been as a development organization?

Answer. The Peace Corps has a storied legacy as an effective development agency, and as an American, I am proud of its work on behalf of our country. Looking ahead, I am confident that the Peace Corps has a bright future, and that the relevance of its mission is even more salient today than in years past. As global development needs evolve, so too must Peace Corps' capabilities to meet such needs. If confirmed, I will prioritize reimagining the Peace Corps' approach to service so that volunteers and host communities alike are best matched to make the most lasting impact, and in doing so, I plan to consult with you and your office.

Question. Given the Peace Corps was created during the Cold War to confront communist related programs, does Congress need to review the Peace Corps mandate to effectively counter our current global competitor Communist China?

Answer. I believe the Peace Corps' mandate is as strong today as it was at the agency's inception. The Peace Corps is an independent federal agency and maintaining the integrity of its independence is critical to volunteer safety, security, and effectiveness. However, the Peace Corps also has an important role to play in the United States' leadership in the international community. I strongly believe in the power of America's example and its capacity for good. Peace Corps volunteers are among our country's best ambassadors of American values and ideals abroad—their grassroots diplomacy cannot be matched by the PRC or other strategic competitors. If confirmed, I will work closely with you and your office to ensure that the Peace Corps achieves its fullest potential.

Question. If confirmed, how will you expand Peace Corps programs in Indo-Pacific countries to carry out your mandate?

Answer. The Indo-Pacific is critically important to the United States' strategic interests. As a country, we must have a visible and sustained presence in the region and invest in our relationships with allies and partners who share our priorities and values. As publicly reported, the Peace Corps returned volunteers to the Pacific Island nations of Fiji in 2022, Tonga and Samoa in 2023, and plans to soon return volunteers to Vanuatu. In the broader Indo-Pacific region, volunteers are presently serving in Indonesia, the Philippines, Timor-Leste, Cambodia, Thailand, and Viet Nam, and plan to soon return to Sri Lanka. If confirmed, establishing a more robust presence in the Indo-Pacific will be one of my top priorities. Given the funding requirements and logistical challenges inherent in the Peace Corps operating in the Indo-Pacific, if confirmed, I would welcome your support in achieving this priority.

Question. The Peace Corps has reported a decrease in volunteer applications and appears to be falling short of its recruitment targets. If confirmed, how do you plan to meet volunteer numbers given the U.S. job market and requirement that volunteers must be vaccinated to COVID-19 and must wear a mask in public?

Answer. Speaking broadly, I believe that we need to reinvigorate public service opportunities for all Americans, especially as it relates to our next generation of leaders. As to the Peace Corps specifically, I have been heartened by its "Bold Invitation" campaign, which aggressively seeks to recruit and deploy volunteers as expeditiously as possible to restore the Peace Corps' strength to pre-pandemic levels. If confirmed, I will prioritize recruiting talented and diverse Americans to bring the best of our country abroad and contribute to partner countries' important development needs. In addition, if confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to host a Peace Corps recruiting event with you in Florida.

Question. The safety and security of Peace Corps volunteers should be your number one concern when looking at any programs or initiatives. What are the most important recent steps taken by the Peace Corps to protect volunteers, something it has unfortunately failed to do in the past?

Answer. I whole-heartedly agree that the safety and security of Peace Corps volunteers must be the agency's top priority. My understanding is that during the pandemic and the concomitant suspension of volunteer activities abroad, the agency devoted a significant amount of time, effort, and investment in strengthening its safety, security, and health systems for the benefit of its volunteers. If confirmed, I will strongly support efforts to ensure the agency has the resources necessary to maintain and further enhance these improved systems.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HERRO MUSTAFA GARG BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Could you provide your perspective on Egypt's role in facilitating the readmittance of Assad into the Arab League and its participation in the Jordanian-led working group to rehabilitate Assad? How will you use your position to ensure Assad is held accountable for killing thousands of Syrians?

Answer. I find everything about the Assad regime abhorrent. He has brought nothing but misery and destruction to his people. Egypt has recently taken steps to reestablish high level interactions with the Assad regime. At the same time, Egypt continues to insist that Syria take steps towards a political solution in line with UNSCR 2254.

The United States has made clear in our diplomatic discussions with partner countries that we do not support normalizing relations with the Assad regime. If confirmed, I will continue to strongly underline that position, as well as underscore the need for accountability for the Assad regime's horrific atrocities against Syrians and that anyone seeking to invest in Syria would risk sanctions exposure. The United States maintains that stability in Syria can only be achieved through a political process in line with U.N. Security Council Resolution 2254, and will continue working with allies, partners, and the U.N. to ensure that a durable political solution remains within reach.

Question. The Biden administration negotiated the Arab Gas Pipeline, which would supply gas to Lebanon via Syria. Please provide an analysis on the pipeline's compliance with the Caesar Syria Civilian Protection Act of 2019.

Answer. I understand that no final determination has been made about the U.S. sanctions implications of that proposal. The Administration received provisional contracts for both the electricity and gas deals last year. The final financing terms and contracts are still being discussed by the parties and the World Bank. The Departments of the Treasury and State will need to review details of the final financing terms and contracts to assess any relevant sanctions concerns. Only at that time will the Administration have the information needed to make any final determinations. The Administration will comply with the Caesar Act.

Question. As the Syrian portion of the Arab Gas Pipeline is refurbished and maintained by Russian state-owned industries, notable Gasprom, please provide an analysis of the pipeline's compliance with Russia and Ukraine sanctions.

Answer. I understand the Administration has not waived Caesar or any other sanctions, which remain an important tool to press for accountability for the Assad regime's atrocious record of human rights abuses and violations. I also understand that no final determination has been made about the U.S. sanctions implications of that proposal. The final financing terms and contracts are still being discussed by the parties and the World Bank. The Departments of the Treasury and State will need to review details of the final financing terms and contracts to assess any relevant sanctions concerns. Only at that time will the Administration have the information needed to make any final determinations.

Question. The State Department has made a commitment to Senator Risch provide a briefing and determination on Caesar sanctions compliance for the Arab Gas Pipeline before issuing comfort, pre-assurance, licenses or waivers to Egypt or in support of activating the pipeline. Does Senator Risch have your commitment to do the same?

Answer. Absolutely. As Ambassador to Bulgaria, I had an excellent working relationship with your staff and would welcome the opportunity for regular briefings if confirmed for Egypt.

I understand the Administration remains committed to implementation of the Caesar Act and has not lifted its Syria sanctions or any other sanctions. The Departments of the Treasury and State will need to review details of the final financing terms and contracts of the proposal to assess any relevant sanctions concerns. Only at that time will we have the information needed to make any final determinations. If confirmed, I commit to working with the Departments of the Treasury and State to keep Congress informed about progress on this proposal.

Question. The administration recently granted a waiver for Egypt to receive $235M in Foreign Military Financing tied to concessions on key U.S. national security priorities and human rights. This FMF is currently subject to Congressional holds. What are the implications of the holds on the United States' strategic relationship with Egypt?

Answer. I understand the Secretary's decision to exercise the national security waiver authority with respect to $235 million in FY 2022 FMF for Egypt reflects Egypt's specific and ongoing contributions to U.S. national security priorities. As a result, the Department has obligated a total of $1.215 billion in FY 2022 FMF funding for Egypt. If confirmed, I will continue to engage closely with the Egyptian Government and Congress about how FMF assistance will be used, consistent with our commitment to a U.S.-Egypt strategic partnership that advances our shared vision for a secure and prosperous region, and supports tangible and sustained progress on human rights.

Question. The administration continues to prioritize Egypt's human rights record as one of our primary national security interests. While human rights are essential, they are only one component of the national interest. Provide your assessment on whether the Biden administration has struck the appropriate balance with Egypt between human rights and other national security interests.

Answer. There are a number of Administration priorities where Egypt has a role, from support for Ukraine, to elections in Libya, a ceasefire in Sudan, and addressing the current conflict between Israel and Hamas. I will actively engage on these regional and international strategic issues.

The Administration has also made clear that making progress on human rights is a key element of our national security interests. Administration officials have affirmed the bilateral relationship is stronger when there is tangible progress on human rights issues. These priorities are not separate. If confirmed, I will continue to press the Egyptian Government to make progress on human rights and other national security interests.

Question. With border checkpoints strained due to the Sudan conflict, how do you assess Egypt's commitment to keeping the border open? What implications does this have for regional stability and trade?

Answer. I understand the State Department has long coordinated closely with Egypt on Sudan policy and has intensively engaged the Egyptians since the breakout of the conflict April 15 to urge coordinated outreach to the parties on reaching a ceasefire in Sudan and to promote a coordinated humanitarian response. Egypt has considerable influence in Sudan and hosted a summit of Sudan's neighbors.

Approximately 350,000 Sudanese have already arrived in Egypt since April 15. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with our ambassador to Sudan.

Question. There have been rumors of Egyptian foreign fighters' involvement in the Sudan conflict. What measures should Egypt take to ensure it remains uninvolved and maintains its credibility with its allies?

Answer. I understand the State Department has long coordinated closely with Egypt on Sudan policy, and has intensively engaged the Egyptians since the breakout of conflict April 15 to urge coordinated outreach to the parties on reaching a ceasefire in Sudan and to promote a coordinated humanitarian response. Egypt has considerable influence in Sudan and hosted a summit of Sudan's neighbors in July. Cairo's voice is a crucial one in advancing diplomatic efforts toward a durable cessation of hostilities. The Department has closely coordinated with Egypt and a number of other regional partners, including the African Union, Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) and other neighboring states, in support of a harmonized international response.

If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with our ambassador to Sudan.

Question. Egypt has warned of the possibility that "all options are open" if Ethiopia proceeds with the GERD without Egypt's consent. How will you engage with Egypt to ensure another regional conflict is not escalated over the dam?

Answer. Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa Mike Hammer remains actively engaged in supporting Egypt, Ethiopia, and Sudan in reaching a diplomatic solution that advances the interests of all parties. The Administration is committed to helping the parties find a durable solution that contributes to a more peaceful and prosperous region. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Egypt in support of that goal. I will also work closely with Mike Hammer and our ambassadors to Sudan and Ethiopia.

In the State Department's 2023 Trafficking in Persons Report, Egypt was listed as Tier 2 Watch List for its lack of commitment to eliminating human trafficking.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps could you take to help Egypt prioritize anti-trafficking efforts in country?

Answer. My first assignment in the Foreign Service was as a political officer responsible for the Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report. This is an issue I care about deeply.

According to the most recent TIP report, the Government of Egypt did show progress in the fight against trafficking in certain areas, such as approving a new national strategy to combat trafficking and more than doubling convictions of traffickers. However, according to the report, the Government of Egypt continued to have gaps in the identification and referral to services of foreign trafficking victims, had a decrease in victim identifications and investigations, and had insufficient services and shelter for victims. If confirmed, I would encourage the Government of Egypt to continue making progress on combating trafficking in persons in those areas. I will work with relevant government officials, international human rights NGOs, and members of Egyptian civil society toward that end.

Question. If confirmed, what actions would you instruct your mission to take with regards to anti-trafficking work on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the work of our Embassy to encourage the Government of Egypt to continue to increase efforts to address gaps in the identification and referral to services of foreign trafficking victims, increase victim identifications and investigations, and increase services and shelter for victims. I will also continue the work of our Embassy with relevant government officials, international human rights NGOs, and members of Egyptian civil society toward that end.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to reporting the reality of the trafficking situation in Egypt in the annual trafficking in persons report as well as directly to congress and the appropriate congressional committees?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to reporting accurate information on the topic of trafficking in persons in Egypt via our annual, Congressionally-mandated Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report and will work closely with the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons to encourage collaborative efforts with the Government of Egypt to combat human trafficking.

In the State Department's 2022 International Religious Freedom Report, Egypt was listed as generally lacking government and societal respect for religious freedom, particularly for religious minorities.

Question. What is your assessment of this particular issue and if confirmed, how will you work with the Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom in-country?

Answer. I understand Egypt has a long tradition of religious co-existence and has made a number of improvements on this front, including reducing obstacles to church building and registration and the ongoing process of reforming educational curricula to stress religious tolerance. If confirmed, I will work with the Ambassador-at-Large for International Religious Freedom to bolster religious freedom and maintain regular contact with Egyptian religious leaders as part of my commitment to engage Egyptian civil society.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Throughout my career I have been a champion for civil society. If confirmed, I will maintain contact with Egyptian religious leaders and continue to encourage improvements to Egypt's treatment of religious minorities, as part of my commitment to engage Egyptian civil society.

Question. If confirmed, what concrete steps can you take to help Egypt increase their societal and governmental respect for religious freedom?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Egyptian Government to encourage reform of Egyptian blasphemy laws, which are currently actively enforced. I would also work with the Egyptians to encourage granting equal citizenship rights to people without discrimination based on religious belief. One important step would be to remove the religious designation from national identity cards.

In the State Department's 2022 Human Rights Report, Egypt was listed as having a significant number of human rights abuses, including arbitrary detention, harassment of civil society actors and journalists, as well as other infringements on internationally-recognized human rights.

Question. How will you direct your Embassy to work with civil society organizations to improve the human rights situation on the ground?

Answer. Engagement with civil society is a critical component of the Administration's efforts to advance human rights in Egypt, both so that we are cognizant of local priorities on human rights and so that our annual report to Congress is informed by these local perspectives. If confirmed, I commit to lead by example through robust personal engagement with Egyptian human rights defenders and other civil society.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to personally engaging with civil society on this issue.

Question. In 2021, according to the bureau of International Organizations, Egypt voted with the U.S. on 27 percent of roll call votes in the U.N. General Assembly. On Israel-related votes, that number is 0 percent. If confirmed, how will you engage with the host government on issues relating to international organizations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the work of the Embassy team and consistently and at high levels engage the Government of Egypt on issues relating to international organizations. I will also seek to engage our U.N. missions more in Egypt.

Question. How can you, if confirmed as Ambassador, work alongside IO and USU to recruit and retain talented Americans for placement within the U.N. system either in appointments, elections, or other roles?

Answer. In my last two assignments as a member of the Embassy Front Office, I actively engaged with local counterparts on behalf of our Americans competing for senior roles in the U.N. system. Active and early engagement is key.

Question. What is your understanding of morale at Embassy Cairo?

Answer. I look forward to working with the talented team of diplomats in Cairo, if confirmed. I understand that challenges, such as power and internet disruptions as well as heavy traffic and pollution, take a daily toll on our team. In every assignment where I have had a leadership role, whether that was as the head of our reconstruction team in Mosul, Iraq or Political Minister Counselor in New Delhi, India, or DCM in Lisbon, Portugal, to Ambassador in Bulgaria, I take morale very seriously. In previous posts, I conducted regular Embassy wide surveys of my leadership and Embassy morale to check the pulse of the mission. I found this to be useful and welcomed and, if confirmed, will continue to carry out this practice.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Embassy Cairo?

Answer. My understanding is that morale at post is impacted by some administrative hurdles, including delays in receiving household effects and personal vehicles, due to the host government's lengthy procedures. If confirmed, I will work with the Embassy team, and especially the community liaison officer, to ensure that morale stays high and work with the management team to press for continued progress in resolving these administrative concerns.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for Chiefs of Mission. Answer. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I would describe my management style as compassionate, with a high bar on ethics, EEO compliance, security, and management controls. In a May 2018 Office of Inspector General inspection of Embassy Lisbon, the OIG report wrote "The DCM received consistently high marks from all sections for forging a 'one team, one fight' spirit to the Embassy's efforts to advance its objectives and for her attention to staff development."

A May 2022 Office of Inspector General Report of Embassy Sofia described me as modeling integrity, encouraging interagency collaboration, and leading by example. It reported Embassy staff described me as optimistic, friendly, and down-to-earth, and told OIG that I asked for and took seriously their advice on policy issues.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. I do not believe it is an effective management strategy to berate subordinates either in public or private. This is unacceptable behavior and, if confirmed, I will instruct all supervisors at Embassy Cairo to show respect for their subordinates. I will make it clear that I will judge their effectiveness by how well they mentor and develop their own staff.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your Deputy Chief of Mission (DCM)?

Answer. If confirmed, I believe in a strong front office team and an empowered DCM who works with me to ensure a high standard on management controls, ethics, security, and strong interagency collaboration. I am fortunate that the current DCM is someone I have known since my very first day in the Foreign Service and I have full confidence in her abilities. I will encourage her to build on post's existing mentoring programs for our entry and mid-level staff from all USG agencies, as well as regular discussions with Egyptian local staff to improve teambuilding, and instill a sense of personal accountability in each member of our large team.

"Anomalous health incidents", commonly referred to as "Havana Syndrome," have been debilitating and sidelining U.S. diplomats around the world for years. They have caused serious, negative consequences for U.S. diplomacy, yet many believe that the Department is not doing enough to care for, protect, and communicate to its personnel.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to taking this threat seriously?

Answer. I understand the issue of anomalous health incidents is an absolute priority for the Department, including its most senior leaders. If confirmed, I commit to taking this threat seriously as I did as Ambassador to Bulgaria. There is no higher priority than to protect and care for our people.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to talking as openly as you can to Peace Corps employees and volunteers about this serious issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to talking as openly as I can to Peace Corps employees and volunteers about this serious issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO HERRO MUSTAFA GARG BY SENATOR CHRIS VAN HOLLEN

Question. Following intense U.S. diplomatic efforts, Egypt has reportedly agreed to open the Rafah crossing to allow an initial 20 trucks to enter Gaza to deliver humanitarian assistance. However, at this point, none of these trucks have yet transited into Gaza, as the “mechanisms” of this agreement are still being worked out. Even once this initial tranche moves forward, I remain deeply concerned about the urgent need to provide millions of people in Gaza access to essential commodities to sustain life, including water, food, medical supplies, and fuel. What are the parameters of the reported agreement to allow an initial tranche of humanitarian assistance into Gaza?

Answer. While I am not involved in these discussions, I understand that the United States is engaging closely with the Governments of Egypt and Israel to facilitate the movement of humanitarian goods into Gaza via the Rafah border crossing. Special Envoy David Satterfield is in the region coordinating these efforts. I understand humanitarian supplies will be distributed to civilians in need through trusted international organizations and NGO partners, in coordination with Egyptian and Israeli authorities. The initial 20 trucks are intended as just that—an initial effort to move humanitarian assistance to those in need.

Question. How will you work with the relevant stakeholders in Egypt, Israel, and Gaza to ensure sustained humanitarian assistance can reach civilians in immediate need in Gaza?

Answer. I understand the United States is working closely with the Governments of Egypt and Israel to improve humanitarian conditions in Gaza, including by establishing a mechanism by which humanitarian assistance can reach the civilian population of Gaza. Special Envoy David Satterfield, whom I have known for over twenty years, is in the region coordinating these efforts. If confirmed, it will be my priority to continue working closely with the Government of Egypt and other partners, including trusted international organizations and NGOs, to address humanitarian needs in Gaza.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
 SUBMITTED TO HERRO MUSTAFA GARG BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People’s Republic of China is the “only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it.” The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People’s Republic of China (PRC) and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. Even as we see heinous atrocities committed by Hamas against innocent Israeli citizens, the CCP is still publicly blaming Israel instead of Hamas for the violence. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the CCP a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that “the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S.-Egypt ties.

Question. Does the CCP undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence’s 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.”

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the CCP that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment's notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects.

I have dealt with some aspect of China's aggression in almost every assignment I have had my 25-year Foreign Service career, from China's border encroachments in India and Bhutan, to its attempts to control the Sines port in Portugal, to its flooding of the telecommunications market in Bulgaria. I am proud of our Embassy's efforts to move China off the backburner. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in the Middle East.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the PRC in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. interests in Egypt and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address China's efforts to expand its influence in Egypt and the region.

Question. Besides the size of its population, its peace treaty with Israel, and the presence of the Suez Canal, what other reasons are there for the U.S. to continue investing resources in Egypt?

Answer. There is a wide range of U.S. priorities where Egypt can play an important role, from support for Ukraine amid Russia's war of aggression, a ceasefire in Sudan, and addressing the Israel/Gaza crisis and its humanitarian fallout. Egypt is also a strong partner in counterterrorism, countering human trafficking, and maritime security. Egypt is the sixth largest contributor of peacekeepers in the world. If confirmed, I will work to ensure U.S. support for Egypt continues to strengthen this partnership.

Question. How would you characterize the current state of U.S.-Egyptian relations?

Answer. The United States' relationship with Egypt is multifaceted. Egypt has been an important strategic partner for 40 years. The decades-long U.S.-Egypt defense partnership has been a pillar for regional security. Egypt is a significant player in regional affairs, and as the Arab country with the largest population, its role is key to regional de-escalation, such as in Libya and Sudan. At the same time, the Administration continues to underscore that tangible progress on human rights, including by releasing political prisoners and implementing reforms to pre-trial detention, is crucial to enabling the strongest possible U.S.-Egyptian relationship.

Question. Egypt's 1979 peace treaty with Israel remains significant for overall Arab-Israeli peace. Egyptian Governments have increased their cooperation with Israel against Islamist militants in Gaza prior to the October 7, 2023 attack on Israel by Hamas. In your opinion, how will Israel's war against Hamas be seen by Egypt given its role in the Arab world as peace broker in the region?

Answer. The United States and Egypt share an unwavering commitment to a negotiated two-state solution as the only path to a lasting resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and equal measures of security, prosperity, and dignity for Israelis and Palestinians. Egypt has played a positive role in responding to attacks by Gaza-based armed factions in the past and continues to play a critical role today. While I am not involved in these discussions, I understand that the United States is engaging closely with Egypt to enable U.S. citizens to leave Gaza and facilitate the movement of humanitarian goods into Gaza via the Rafah border crossing. These humanitarian supplies will be distributed to civilians in need through trusted international organizations and NGO partners in coordination with Egyptian and Israeli authorities.

Question. What role does Egypt need to play with regard to Palestinian refugees attempting to flee Hamas?

Answer. I understand that Egyptian efforts are currently focused on bringing humanitarian supplies to civilians inside Gaza, where this aid will be distributed through trusted international organizations and NGO partners and in coordination with Israeli authorities. I understand the Government of Egypt made available ambulances and mobile clinics near Rafah. Civilians are not to blame for Hamas' horrific terrorism.

Question. Multiple administrations have described Egypt as a "strategic partner." Recent reporting has brought to light concerning efforts by Egyptian intelligence to corrupt our political system. Do you believe bribing U.S. politicians is typical behavior of a "strategic partner"?

Answer. I have no comment on an ongoing prosecution.

Question. If confirmed, how will you demonstrate to the Egyptian Government that these efforts are unacceptable?

Answer. This is an active and ongoing legal matter, so you will understand I have no comment on it. While I cannot speak to this case specifically, as a general matter we are taking steps both domestically and globally to better prevent, deter, and combat corruption, guided by our National Strategy on Countering Corruption. This includes working through bilateral and multilateral engagement, foreign assistance, sanctions, international legal cooperation, and many other tools.

I worked actively as Ambassador to Bulgaria to counter corruption. Working with Congress, we imposed the first Global Magnitsky sanctions on Bulgarian corrupt officials. Our efforts raised the profile of these issues and eventually led to new legislation to enhance Bulgaria's efforts to counter corruption.

Question. How would you advance continued support for Israel and the Abraham Accords in Egypt, if confirmed?

Answer. I fully support the Abraham Accords. Building on Egypt's transformational peace with Israel, the United States and Egypt have long partnered to foster a shared vision for the promise of greater regional integration, including through the Negev Forum process. As Secretary Blinken has said, the events in Israel and Gaza since October 7 underscore there are two paths for the region: a path of greater integration, greater stability, and a resolution of the challenges between Israelis and Palestinians, and the path of Hamas terrorism.

In Bulgaria, I worked towards bringing the signatory countries of the Abraham Accords together to celebrate the anniversary of the accords via a public event on culinary diplomacy. I think it would be a good idea for all our embassies to use the anniversary of the accords to try to organize some type of event bringing the countries together.

Question. With more than 90 percent of this ally's population practicing the Muslim faith, if confirmed, will you promote an LGBTQ agenda in Egypt?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the work of my predecessors and colleagues to promote respect for human rights in Egypt, including working to reduce violence against LGBTQI+ persons and working toward decriminalization of same-sex status and conduct.

I will also continue U.S. advocacy for the release of any LGBTQI+ persons held on so called "debauchery" charges and press the Egyptian Government to end forced anal examinations and other abusive practices against LGBTQI+ persons.

Question. Does the LGBTQ agenda come before national security or American prosperity?

Answer. National security and American prosperity must include all U.S. citizens, regardless of background. Goals around these matters cannot be achieved if we exclude specific groups of people. Explicitly attempting to exclude any group jeopardizes both goals, and we have learned that inclusiveness of all groups only strengthens our national security.

Question. The U.S. has provided significant security assistance to Egypt, however, we have seen Egypt increase closer relations to Russia and China regarding military-to-military and trade relationships away from the U.S. Could Egypt become more reliant upon China and Russia on security, economic, and political matters?

Answer. I understand that Egypt actively seeks trade and investment from a broad range of global partners. However, Egypt is cautious about becoming overly reliant on any one partner, including the PRC and Russia. The PRC plays a significant and growing role in large segments of Egypt's economy, including infrastructure, IT, and renewable energy. Egypt has significant ties with Russia in energy, agriculture, and tourism, as well as with regard to Egypt's efforts to diversify its defense suppliers.

Question. If confirmed, how will you discourage such moves?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. commercial, development, and diplomatic officers at our Embassy in Cairo work closely with their Egyptian counterparts and the State Department's Economic and Business Affairs Bureau to promote U.S. exports, protect U.S. commercial interests, and improve the business climate in Egypt for U.S. companies.

I will support the Administration's efforts to offer, in terms of the U.S. partnership, access to trusted and reliable vendors and also leverage our energy and security relationships to make clear the compelling case for our partnership.

Question. Security assistance to Egypt is currently conditioned based on Egypt's human rights record due to legislation I championed in 2017. If confirmed, what will you do to ensure that Egypt respects the human rights of its own people?

Answer. This Administration has made human rights a priority in U.S. foreign policy worldwide, including with Egypt. If confirmed, I commit to continue the Administration's engagement with the Egyptian Government to seek concrete progress on human rights, which I believe will strengthen our strategic relationship. Securing tangible human rights progress in Egypt requires consistent engagement. If confirmed, I commit to make human rights a priority in my engagement with the Government, to press for concrete and enduring human rights reforms, and to consult with Congress on these important issues.

Question. Given the importance of other partners, such as Taiwan, should security assistance that is not given to Egypt on account of its human rights violations be redirected to Taiwan?

Answer. Foreign Military Financing (FMF) for Egypt is not provided at the expense of other partners. The Department is always assessing the right levels of foreign assistance, including through FMF, to support our national security interests, partner capacities, and validated requirements.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HERRO MUSTAFA GARG BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. The Ministry of Defense in Egypt recently procured $25M in networking equipment from Huawei, a Chinese company whose equipment is known to Congress to be a threat to U.S. national security. Given this, how would you prioritize ensuring U.S. firms continue to have access to the network marketplace in Egypt?

Answer. As Ambassador to Bulgaria, I faced a similar issue, as the Bulgarians' 4G network was built with Huawei and the Chinese aggressively pushed Huawei for 5G. We should not cede any ground to China. The Bulgarian Government signed a 5G MOU with us and then we pressed aggressively for trusted vendors. We succeeded in winning many contracts for American companies.

If confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. commercial, development, and diplomatic officers at our Embassy in Cairo work closely with their Egyptian counterparts and the State Department's Economic and Business Affairs Bureau to promote U.S. exports, protect U.S. commercial interests, and improve the business climate in Egypt for U.S. companies.

Question. How should United States policy, including the provisions of Foreign Military Financing to Egypt, adapt when the Egyptian MOD procures and installs Huawei equipment in its networks that interoperate with sensitive U.S. networks, posing a threat to U.S. national security?

Answer. The Administration cautions its partners about PRC investments that could compromise their sovereignty, security, and data privacy. If confirmed, I will continue activities that have proven successful in my other positions, such as active engagement with the Bulgarian Government on behalf of U.S. companies and providing viable alternatives to PRC options.

Constant and close engagement allows us to demonstrate that the United States is a preferable technology partner.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HERRO MUSTAFA GARG BY SENATOR JOHN BARRASSO

Question. How would you characterize the bilateral relationship between Egypt and Russia?

Answer. Egypt has significant ties with Russia in energy, agriculture, tourism, and defense. Russia is building a $30 billion nuclear facility in Dabaa on the Mediterranean coast and Russian tourists are a major source of hard currency. At the same time, Egypt has been impacted by Russia's invasion of Ukraine, destabilizing global wheat markets, including Egypt, which provides subsidized bread to the majority of its citizens. Egypt is a U.S. strategic partner with a crucial voice in efforts to advance a just and lasting peace for Ukraine and has taken steps to support U.S. national security goals, which include ensuring a strategic defeat of Russia's war on Ukraine.

From my service as Ambassador to Bulgaria, I know well the Russian grip and how vital our partnerships are to address Russia's destabilizing role. I am proud of our Embassy's efforts in Bulgaria on military modernization and energy diversification away from Russia.

Question. What is the extent of Egypt's involvement in Russia's invasion of Ukraine?

Answer. Egypt has no role in Russia's invasion of Ukraine. Egypt is a U.S. strategic partner with a crucial voice in efforts to advance regional peace and stability, including key U.S. national security goals in advancing a just and lasting peace for Ukraine. Egypt has taken steps to oppose Russia's further invasion of Ukraine, including voting at the U.N. General Assembly and International Atomic Energy Agency in 2022 and 2023 on resolutions condemning the invasion and criticizing Russia's actions. At the same time, Egypt abstained on a resolution to suspend Russia from the U.N. Human Rights Council.

Question. Is U.S. foreign assistance to Egypt still in the U.S. national interest? Why or why not?

Answer. Egypt is a strategic U.S. partner that contributes to advancing regional peace and stability. Egypt is playing a critical at this moment in the conflict between Hamas and Israel, supporting U.S. efforts to secure the release of American and other hostages held by Hamas; secure the safe exit of American citizens from Gaza; and convey urgently needed humanitarian assistance to civilians in Gaza.

U.S. security assistance to Egypt helps to improve and modernize Egypt's capabilities, including countering terrorism, such as in the Sinai Peninsula, that could endanger the U.S. homeland or allies. The United States also supports U.S.-Egypt military interoperability and Egypt facilitates security for, and expedites transit of, U.S. military vessels through the Suez Canal.

U.S. assistance to Egypt also promotes economic growth, education, climate, and governance objectives that align with U.S. interests, including increasing opportunities for small and medium enterprises, responding to food insecurity challenges related to Russia's invasion of Ukraine, providing opportunities for Egypt's large youth population, and shoring up efforts to combat climate change and facilitating Egypt's transition to a green economy.

Question. Do you support reinstating all of the U.S. foreign assistance to Egypt? Which U.S. financial assistance is the most critical to the Government of Egypt?

Answer. U.S. assistance to Egypt supports longstanding U.S. strategic interests to advance regional peace and security and promote interoperability with U.S. forces. Egypt is a strategic partner and I understand the FY 2024 Foreign Military Financing request reflects the Administration's plan to support U.S. national security interests in Egypt, including for maritime security, border security, and counterterrorism.

The Administration continues to believe that maximum flexibility in our foreign assistance provides the Administration with the widest range of tools to advance U.S. objectives.

Question. What conditions need to be attached to U.S. foreign assistance to the Government of Egypt?

Answer. I understand the Department seeks maximum flexibility in its approach to Egypt FMF, so the Administration has the widest range of tools to advance U.S. foreign policy objectives in Egypt, including with respect to human rights. As I have not yet been confirmed, I have not been a part of the decision-making process on foreign assistance to Egypt.

If confirmed, I commit to make it a priority to work to secure tangible progress on human rights in Egypt.

Question. Is the Government of Egypt at risk of default?

Answer. The external shocks of the Covid-19 pandemic and Russia's invasion of Ukraine resulted in rising food prices that have revealed deep-seated structural issues with Egypt's economy.

If I am confirmed, I look forward to consulting with Congress on Egypt's economic situation after I have been on the ground and able to assess Egypt's economic outlook.

Question. What issues must be addressed by the Government of Egypt in order to stabilize their internal security and improve their economic growth?

Answer. Egypt developed a set of reforms and secured an IMF program in December 2022 to preserve macroeconomic stability, restore buffers, and pave the way for inclusive and private-sector-led growth. My understanding is that Egypt is committed to removing some state control from the economy and transitioning to a flexible exchange rate.

I understand the United States was supportive of Egypt securing its IMF program and continues to encourage Egypt to fully implement the needed reforms, including by liberalizing the exchange rate and continuing to privatize state-owned enterprises.

If confirmed, I will work with Egypt to implement its reform plan.

Question. What is President Sisi's vision for the future and top priorities?

Answer. The Administration has an affirmative vision for the Middle East and North Africa demonstrating our commitment to work with our partners, including with Egypt, to bring about the positive changes we all hope to see as we build a stable, more prosperous region.

Egypt is an important strategic partner. If confirmed, one of my top priorities will be to align our countries' approaches on U.S. national security interests, such as support for Ukraine, regional security and integration, and great power competition.

Question. How would you characterize the current state of religious freedom, freedom of speech, right to assembly, and the rule of law in Egypt?

Answer. I understand Egypt has a long tradition of religious coexistence and has made some improvements on this front, including reducing obstacles to church building and registration and reforming educational curricula to stress religious tolerance. If confirmed, I hope to continue the U.S. Embassy's regular engagement with diverse Egyptian religious leaders and encourage improvements to Egypt's treatment of religious minorities.

There is no doubt of the need for significant progress more broadly on human rights in Egypt, and if confirmed, promoting tangible progress on human rights, including religious freedom, and good governance, will be among my highest priorities. I have demonstrated in my previous roles that we can secure concrete improvements on human rights even as we pursue other U.S. national security goals, and if confirmed, I will approach human rights challenges in Egypt similarly.

Question. What is your assessment of the current Egyptian judicial system?

Answer. The Department's annual Human Rights Report for Egypt details a number of serious concerns about Egypt's judicial system. I understand that the State Department continues to urge Egypt to address these significant human rights concerns relating to its judicial system, including by releasing political prisoners, halting new politically motivated arrests, and implementing reforms to pre-trial detention. If confirmed, I commit to making tangible human rights improvements among my top priorities.

Question. What actions has the Egyptian Government and judicial system taken to end mass trials and sentencing?

Answer. In 2022, the Government of Egypt began the release of hundreds of prisoners, established the Presidential Pardon Committee, and launched a national political dialogue that is expected to address pre-trial detention reform, among other political, social, and economic issues.

At the same time, I understand that politically motivated arrests continue and outpace releases, which is of serious concern. Egypt also has yet to make much-needed structural reforms to protect human rights, including reforms to pre-trial detention, and does not allow civil society to operate freely and independently. If confirmed, I commit to making support for these tangible human rights improvements among my top priorities.

Question. What actions would you take to address the continued use of mass trials and sentencing in Egypt?

Answer. This Administration has made human rights a priority in U.S. foreign policy, including with Egypt. I understand the scope of the problem of political prisoners in Egypt is vast, and much work remains to be done. I understand some releases have taken place due in part to sustained U.S. engagement on this issue. If confirmed, I commit to make human rights among my top priorities in my engagement with the Egyptian Government and to press for concrete reforms to improve protections for human rights, including by releasing political prisoners and implementing reforms to pre-trial detention. I also commit to engage regularly with Egyptian human rights defenders and other civil society; and to consult with Congress on these important issues.

Question. Will Egypt joining BRICS affect their relationship with the U.S.? If so, how?

Answer. The United States has reiterated our belief that all countries may choose the countries and groupings they associate with. However, it is important for countries, including Egypt, to assess whether a grouping embodies compatible values, whether it destabilizes or enhances global security, and whether it advances the common good or narrow agendas.

Question. What is the most significant impact of Egypt joining BRICS?

Answer. The United States will continue to work closely with all of our partners, including those that are members of BRICS and those who have received invitations. While we have no formal association with BRICS as a grouping, we will continue to work with existing and aspiring BRICS members in bilateral, regional, and multilateral fora to strengthen our shared prosperity and uphold global values.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HERRO MUSTAFA GARG BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

Question. How do you intend to navigate in this environment in Egypt? What can be done specifically?

Answer. This is a heartbreaking human tragedy playing out due to Hamas' brutality. I hope to have active engagement with the Arabic speaking media in order to get the USG message across, if confirmed.

I understand that Egypt, the first Arab country to sign a peace treaty with Israel, remains committed to a two-state solution. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would support Egypt in continuing to play a positive role, including the critical support it is offering now during the conflict.

If confirmed, it will be my priority to leverage our relationship with Egypt to support delivery of humanitarian aid to civilians in need in Gaza and secure the safe departure of American citizens, including hostages, from Gaza.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTIONS

In a previous round of QFRs, I asked you whether you believe that it is an appropriate use of American diplomatic resources to pressure Egypt in order to secure the release of Salah Soltan. In questioning we had discussed that he is not a U.S. citizen. You answered that the Department of State has "raised Mr. Soltan's case with Egyptian authorities" and "has encouraged the Government of Egypt to provide Soltan with medical care," neither of which answer my questions.

I also asked if you had evaluated a video of Soltan speaking at a 2013 Muslim Brotherhood rally, at which he appears to have administered a so-called "martyrs' oath" to supporters, and if so whether you considered his speech to be incitement to violence. You answered "I was not aware of videos relating to Rabaa square. If confirmed, I will investigate further." Soltan's case has repeatedly been raised by the United States in the context of the U.S.-Israel relationship, and if confirmed you would be expected to conduct diplomacy in that context, and so it is important that these questions are addressed before you are confirmed. The video can be viewed at <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Eb7kK1XzxZY>.

Question. Do you believe it is an appropriate use of American diplomatic resources to pressure Egypt in order to secure Soltan's release?

Answer. From my understanding of the issue, the U.S. Government has not pressured Egypt in order to secure Mr. Soltan's release. I understand that U.S. officials have encouraged the Egyptian Government to ensure Mr.

Soltan and all detainees have access to appropriate medical care, and to rights guaranteed to them under Egyptian and international law.

Question. Do you believe that this sort of anti-Israel media disinformation undermines American national security interests?

Answer. Ensuring the distribution of accurate information is a crucial part of mitigating the spread of disinformation. If confirmed, I would work to ensure the U.S. Embassy in Egypt regularly engages with our partners on best practices in countering harmful disinformation, including by building networks of fact-based narrative reporting by strengthening journalists, local fact checkers, and content creators to counter information manipulation. The U.S. Government is focused on countering efforts from malign actors such as Russia, Iran, and foreign terrorist organizations, among others, which are attempting use this moment of strife to manipulate information to their advantage and undermine U.S. interests. If confirmed, I hope to have active engagement with the Arabic speaking media in order to get the USG message across.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. Please describe the meetings and contexts in which the State Department “raised Mr. Soltan’s case with Egyptian authorities,” including when those meetings occurred and what the State Department requested.

Answer. As I was not part of any such discussions, I am unable to speak to specific conversations. As a general matter, I understand that U.S. officials have encouraged the Egyptian Government to ensure Mr. Soltan and all detainees have access to appropriate medical care, and to rights guaranteed to them under Egyptian and international law.

Salah Soltan is a Muslim Brotherhood leader and hate preacher. He has called for the eradication of Jews and “obliterating America,” which he called it a “divine law.” Beginning in summer 2013, Muslim Brotherhood supporters in Egypt held protests across the country, including at Rabaa Square. There are credible allegations that Muslim Brotherhood members tortured opponents at the Rabaa Square protest, including those documented in an August 2013 Amnesty International report. There is also video of Soltan administering what a so-called “martyrs’ oath” to supporters at the rally (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Eb7kKlXzxZY>). The Biden administration has been pressuring Egypt to release Soltan and has even brought up his case in the context of withholding assistance from Egypt.

Question. Do you believe it is an appropriate use of American diplomatic resources to pressure Egypt in order to secure Soltan’s release?

Answer. I viewed the video you referenced and join you in condemning his antisemitic comments. The Administration supports further strengthening the United States’ strategic partnership with Egypt while seeking tangible improvements by the Government of Egypt on human rights. In that context, the Department of State has raised Mr. Soltan’s case with Egyptian authorities, as well as on a humanitarian basis. I understand the Department of State has encouraged the Government of Egypt to ensure all detainees, including Mr. Soltan, have access to appropriate medical care, the ability to meet with family members and lawyers, to rights guaranteed to them under Egyptian law, and to treat these detainees consistent with Egypt’s human rights obligations and commitments.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. What is your understanding of Mr. Soltan’s citizenship status? Is it the State Department’s understanding that he is a citizen or legal permanent resident?

Answer. I understand he was a Legal Permanent Resident at the time of his detention. I would have to defer to the Department of Homeland Security for specific information on his immigration status.

Question. Does the United States Government assess that Muslim Brotherhood supporters tortured political opponents at Rabaa Square?

Answer. The Department of State’s annual human rights report states that on August 14, 2013, the Ministry of Interior forces supported by military units used lethal force to disperse large Muslim Brotherhood (MB)-organized sit-ins at Rabaa al-Adawiya Square in Cairo and Nahda Square in Giza. The interim government justified its actions with accusations that sit-in participants possessed weapons, committed acts of violence, including torture, and interfered with transportation and commerce. The Justice Ministry's Forensic Medical Authority stated that 11 bodies found on August 14 at the Rabaa al-Adawiya and Nahda Square sit-in sites bore signs of torture. Domestic media reported that Morsy supporters tortured at least 10 persons, including a policeman and a soldier, at the sit-ins.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. Have you evaluated Soltan's 2013 speech in Rabaa Square? If not, why not?

Answer. Yes, I have evaluated the video clip that you sent me.

Question. What documentation does the United States have relating to allegations of torture at Rabaa Square?

Answer. According to the Department of State's 2013 Human Rights Report, the Justice Ministry's Forensic Medical Authority stated that 11 bodies found on August 14 at the Rabaa al-Adawiya and Nahda Square sit-in sites bore signs of torture. Domestic media reported that Morsy supporters tortured at least 10 persons, including a policeman and a soldier, at the sit-ins.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. If you have evaluated the speech, please transmit the documentation you reviewed, including English-language translations.

Answer. Yes, I have evaluated the video clip that you sent me, in the original language.

Question. Have you evaluated Soltan's 2013 speech in Rabaa Square? If not, why not? If so, please transmit the documentation you reviewed, including English-language translations.

Answer. I viewed his interview that aired on al-Aqsa TV on March 31, 2010. I was not aware of videos relating to Rabaa square. If confirmed, I will investigate further.

Question. In your judgment, does Soltan's 2013 speech in Rabaa Square constitute incitement to violence?

Answer. It is my understanding the 2014 Egyptian constitution says that "discrimination and incitement of hatred is a crime punished by law." I find Salah Soltan's antisemitic comments abhorrent, and strongly condemn such displays of antisemitism. If confirmed, I would investigate this issue further and be happy to provide a briefing.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. In your judgment, does Soltan's 2013 speech in Rabaa Square constitute incitement to violence?

Answer. I strongly condemn any language calling for violence. I find it abhorrent. I am not in a position to offer a specific legal judgment on whether this speech constitutes incitement to violence.

Question. In your judgment, does Soltan's 2013 speech in Rabaa Square constitute incitement to violence under your understanding of Egyptian law?

Answer. I have not assessed the content of Soltan's 2013 speech in Rabaa Square. I find Salah Soltan's antisemitic comments abhorrent, and I strongly condemn antisemitism. If confirmed, I would investigate further and be happy to provide a briefing.

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION

Question. In your judgment, does Soltan's 2013 speech in Rabaa Square constitute incitement to violence under your understanding of Egyptian law?

Answer. I do not have expertise in Egyptian law regarding such matters.

A STATEMENT SUBMITTED BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN WITH A LETTER WRITTEN BY SALAH EL DEEN SOLTAN TO HIS GRANDSON SALAH BINYAMEEN

STATEMENT OF THE
HONORABLE BENJAMIN L. CARDIN (D-MD)
July 27, 2023

Mr. President,

I rise today to speak of the importance of Holocaust education and engagement that can help us push back against the rising tide of antisemitism we are seeing nowadays, in our country and across the world.

As the Special Representative on Antisemitism, Racism and Intolerance for the Parliamentary Assembly of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, as many of my colleagues know, I have made it a personal priority to address the rise of antisemitism. As antisemitism is increasing at home and abroad, it is important to come together to address antisemitism, and call out the hate when we see or hear it before it becomes more ingrained in our society.

At the same time, we should celebrate those occasions when a person with a history of making anti-Semitic statements sees the light and realizes the error of his ways, renounces his past statements and vows never to repeat them. Happily, we have an example of just such a case that I would like to bring to the attention of Senate and the American people.

I would like to submit into the Congressional Record a noteworthy letter from Salah el Deen Soltan, a US person, who wrote last month to his newest grandson, to be shared with other grandchildren – most of whom he hasn't met after a decade in wrongful detention in Egypt.

As Human Rights Watch stated in a report published on May 3, 2023, calling for Soltan to be released from his unjust imprisonment in one of Cairo's most notorious jails:

Before moving to the United States, Soltan was a professor of Islamic Law at Cairo University. He later founded and served as the president of the Islamic American University in Dearborn, Michigan from 1999 to 2004. As a legal US permanent resident, Soltan lived and worked in the US for over a decade before his arrest in Egypt in September 2013 for opposing the military's ousting of elected president Mohamed Morsi. A court sentenced Soltan to life in prison in September 2017 in a mass trial marred by extensive due process and fair trial violations. The United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention determined in 2018 that his arrest was arbitrary, as the authorities failed to provide credible evidence of wrongdoing, and that his prosecution violated the right to political participation and freedoms of peaceful assembly and expression.

In the coming weeks, Soltan will have served a full decade in Egyptian jails. During this time, he had time to reflect on his personal history of making crude and cruel antisemitic statements to his students and followers over the years. So he wrote a letter, that has been smuggled out of prison and delivered to his family.

In this letter, Soltan addresses his previously held antisemitic positions and remarks, apologizes for them and disavows them. In solitary confinement, Soltan reflects on his past, corrects the record for his grandson, and lays out how he would like to be remembered in case he never gets the opportunity to meet his grandchildren.

As he writes – “My previous statements and stances are wrong and the best of us are those who reflect, hold oneself

accountable and repent. Here I am, reflecting and seeking forgiveness from God for the harm that may have been inflicted upon anyone. I apologize to everyone harmed by what I said and called for. I leave behind these prison walls all forms of anger, hate and coarseness. I bear the burden of upholding the sanctity of human life, speaking truth and defending it wherever it may be. I had only intended to stand up for justice but what I did resulted in the exact opposite of the intent; and became a reason for further oppression, suffering and marginalization of the innocent. In fact, my oppressors used my decade-old stances to justify and fend off pressure from concerned western parties about my release.”

It is never too late for remorse and redemption.

In 2020, we saw several Muslim-majority Middle Eastern governments normalize diplomatic relations with Israel with the historic announcement of the Abraham Accords. And in the years since, there has been a real thawing of the hostility toward the Jewish state in some of the neighboring countries. Overcoming decades of official hostility toward the government and people of Israel, broadcast through official media outlets and often imbued with blatant antisemitism, will take time. But a journey begins with a single step. And the reconciliation of the peoples of the region begins with one person.

Together, we can choose peace and forgiveness, rather than be prisoners of past differences. In that spirit, and consistent with the Jewish tradition of Teshuva, in which people can see the error of their ways and vow never to repeat that which has offended the Creator, I welcome and embrace Salah Soltan's change of heart. Especially given his difficult circumstances, I find it refreshing and notable that he has taken the time and the trouble to send a heartfelt message to his grandchildren. He has accepted responsibility for his previous hateful words, and is seeking forgiveness from those harmed by it.

This September, Soltan will have been imprisoned for a decade in Egyptian prisons where human rights organizations have estimated there to be over 60,000 political prisoners. Last May, more than 50 human rights organizations released a joint statement noting that Soltan is at serious risk of death due to deteriorating health conditions.

In recent weeks, Egypt has started to correct course with the release of two high profile detainees. I urge President Sisi to extend his presidential pardon to Soltan, so that he may leave Egypt and be reunited with his family.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete text of the letter written by Salah el Deen Soltan to his grandchildren be printed in full at this point in the Congressional Record.

My dearest beloved grandson, Salah Binyameen,

Ever since I learned of your birth and that you will bear my name, I have been praying for you and constantly thinking about you. I fervently pray to God Almighty that you become a positive force in our community and the world at large. It is no secret that you were born during one of the most challenging periods of my imprisonment, yet news of your birth brought me immense solace and joy. Your coming is a reminder of the time that has passed, my fifth grandson, the fourth of whom I have not met or spent time with because of my decade-long wrongful imprisonment in solitary confinement. The passing years have been arduous, and I feel as though time slips away from me without anyone to share my happiness or alleviate my solitude.

Dearest grandson, Salah, enduring a decade of imprisonment and torture, I found solace only in God. The darkness of my solitude has revealed many certainties and has granted me clarity about my past with all of its good and bad, particularly as I witness death so frequently around me. I feel as if I stared death in the eyes while lying on the ground, paralyzed and denied help and medicine for days. During those helpless moments, all I could do was ponder: Will I ever have the opportunity to see you? What will you come to know of me? If you never meet me, who will be your source of information about me? So, I've decided to write you a series of letters, this being the first, so that you may come to know me as I am. I want you to understand who I am, what my values are, and what I stand for.

My dearest Salah, I have always believed, and will continue to believe, that justice is the bedrock of faith. Freedom and justice are the imperatives of our religious beliefs. I have always prayed for divine guidance towards truth, and for inspiration to stand up for the distressed and most marginalized. In the depths of my suffering, I question whether I have consistently lived up to those ideals. I am grateful to God for the guidance on the things I got right and for forgiveness on those that I got wrong. Allah Himself swore by the sanctity of the questioning soul: "And I swear by the reproaching soul" (Quran 75:2). None of us is immune, not even from the gravest of errors, and repentance is a virtue of a sound heart.

The first of these revisions occurred in the immediate aftermath of the 2013 coup and the gruesome Rabaa Massacre. I penned an Op-Ed to the Egyptian people apologizing for the Islamist Political movements' political mistakes. My decade in solitude that followed compelled me to delve further inwards, to think and rethink. When your father and I shared a prison cell, I engaged in deep contemplations and introspections. Those were both bitter and sweet days, I miss him so much. We engaged in endless debates as I contemplated the meaning of justice, injustice, and advocating for the most disenfranchised. I pondered anger, violence, righteousness, the common good, and reform. I held myself accountable, questioning whether I adhered to my intellectual commitments for the benefit of all or only for certain groups. I reflected on my intellectual journey from Egypt to the United States, Bahrain, and beyond. I have learned and grown and want to acknowledge my regrets and mistakes, as acknowledging what is right and wrong is the beginning of wisdom.

The Palestinian cause shaped my generation's worldview and awakened my political consciousness and activism. It laid the foundations for my understanding of justice, starting from my elementary school days until I obtained my Ph.D. in Islamic jurisprudence. For many years, I allowed my anger to inform my reactions to the senseless bloodshed, and the desecration of sacred sites and to drive my approach to the Palestinian issue privately and publicly. I focused on the losses and struggles of the Palestinian people and their powerlessness and while then as now, many more Palestinians have been injured and killed. My impassioned defense of the oppressed in the Muslim world in those days relied on the common rhetoric that was fueled by anger which turned to hate. As the death toll mounted, my statements sometimes veered toward antisemitism. In doing so, I displayed a blind rage that contradicted the fundamental principles of our beautiful religion. We are a religion of tolerance and compassion toward all religions and such rhetoric has no place in our community or our pursuit of justice. I deeply regret times when I engaged in that kind of rhetoric that I shudder to recall and condemn all rhetoric that is discriminatory, hateful and violent. The ends can never justify the means and noble objectives can only be attained through noble methods. Let me be clear, my commitment to justice for the Palestinian people remains steadfast, as is my belief that the many paths towards justice and peace do not require demonization of the other. Salah, justice and solidarity must extend to those with whom we disagree. In fact, our true commitment to these ideals is measured by how we apply them to those who differ from us.

Look at me now, Salah; I find myself in a country with a Muslim ruler, where the judge, warden, officer, and guards who wrongfully imprison, torture and deny me basic medical needs are all Muslim. While those who stand up for me (and others) are individuals who share little in common with me, except for our shared belief in justice and freedom. I recall how Eric Lewis, a Jewish lawyer and now a dear friend of the family, was the sole international lawyer permitted to visit a political prisoner in Egyptian prisons. I remember how Andrea Prasow, a Jewish human rights lawyer, assumed your father's position as the Executive Director of a rights organization advocating on behalf of Arab political prisoners. Senators Patrick Leahy (liberal Christian), and the late John McCain (Conservative Christian) also come to mind. These individuals, spanning the political spectrum, have dedicated their professional careers to advocating for the oppressed despite their respective political and ideological differences. All of these contradictions and ironies have compelled me to see the error in some of my previous beliefs, statements and positions.

My previous statements and stances are wrong and the best of us are those who reflect, hold oneself accountable and repent. Here I am, reflecting and seeking forgiveness from God for the harm that may have been inflicted upon anyone. I apologize to everyone harmed by what I said and called for. I leave behind these prison walls all forms of anger, hate and coarseness. I bear the burden of upholding the sanctity of human life, speaking truth and defending it wherever it may be.

I had only intended to stand up for justice, but what I did resulted in the exact opposite of the intent, and became a reason for further oppression, suffering and marginalization of the innocent. In fact, my oppressors used my decade-old stances to justify and fend off pressure from concerned western parties about my release.

Lastly, my dearest grandson, I am writing to you in pursuit of a world that leads with love and eschews hatred. Life is far too short and precious to allow it to be dominated by anger. I urge you to set your moral compass towards justice and truth. Defend those with every peaceful means at your disposal. I hope you grow up to build a world where tolerance, peace and coexistence despite differences is the norm. My beloved, I pray that you grow up knowing and being proud of your grandfather and everything he stood for. I love you, and I long for the opportunity to meet you, whether it is in this life or in the corridors of Paradise in the one after. Oh God, please make me better than they think, and forgive me for what they do not know.

Your loving grandfather,

Salah el Deen Soltan

NOMINATIONS

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 2023

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:06 a.m., in Room SD-419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Brian Schatz presiding.

Present: Senators Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Booker, Schatz [presiding], Young, and Hagerty.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BRIAN SCHATZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM HAWAII

Senator SCHATZ. All right. Now that Senator Booker is here we can all start.

[Laughter.]

Senator SCHATZ. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order.

We are here today to consider six key nominations on two separate panels. I am honored to serve as Chair for this hearing and I am pleased to be joined by my friend from Tennessee Senator Hagerty.

There are few responsibilities as important as confirming nominees to represent the United States on matters of foreign policy and national security.

That is especially true given the backlog of nominees that must be confirmed for our government to work at full strength and to pursue our interests and our values around the world.

Currently there are 36 nominees on the floor who are awaiting confirmation and another 20 pending in committee. I cannot overstate how important it is to get these vacancies filled as soon as possible.

Our first panel will consider the nominations of Mr. Jeffrey Prescott to be the United States representative to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture, the Honorable Charlie Crist to be the United States Representative on the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization, and the Honorable Sean Patrick Maloney to be the U.S. representative to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

Congratulations to all of you. You are all qualified for the positions for which you have been nominated and we thank you for your continuing service to the country, especially at this challenging time.

We also want to thank—sincerely thank the families who in many ways serve as well. When you have an opportunity to address the committee momentarily for your opening statements we would welcome for you to introduce your families.

First on the panel is Mr. Jeffrey Prescott who, if confirmed, will serve as the U.S. representative to the U.N.'s Agency for Food and Agriculture with the rank of Ambassador.

Mr. Prescott currently serves as the deputy to the U.S. Ambassador at the United Nations. He previously served as Special Assistant to the President and senior director for Iran, Iraq, Syria, and the Gulf States on the National Security Council during the Obama administration.

He also served then as Vice President Biden's deputy national security adviser and his senior advisor for China and Asia.

The U.S. representative to the United Nations Agency for Food and Agriculture is a critical position. The global hunger crisis is getting worse particularly in the aftermath of the pandemic with more than 700 million people around the world facing chronic hunger.

It is clear we have a lot of work to do to reach the second U.N. Sustainable Development Goal of ending global hunger by 2030 and we need this vacancy filled for the United States to remain a leader in the global fight against hunger.

Mr. Prescott is well qualified for this position and I have here a letter from members of his White House Fellows class supporting his nomination.

Without objection, I would like to enter this into the record.

[The information referred to is located at the end of this hearing transcript.]

Senator SCHATZ. Next we have the Honorable Charlie Crist, who has a wealth of public service experience including serving as Florida's 44th Governor, as the state's attorney general, and education commissioner.

He most recently served in the U.S. House of Representatives for Florida's 13th District from 2016 to 2022. If confirmed Mr. Crist will serve as the U.S. Representative on the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) with the rank of Ambassador.

ICAO covers a wide range of issues necessary to facilitating safe air travel around the world including setting global standards for navigation, communication, airline safety, and mapping out airspace jurisdiction and establishing free range airspace over oceans and seas.

We also are pleased to have Mr. Sean Patrick Maloney, who has spent much of his life devoted to public service, most recently representing the 18th District of New York.

If confirmed he will serve as the U.S. Representative to the OECD with the rank of Ambassador. OECD is a unique forum where the Governments of 37 democracies with market-based economies collaborate to develop policy standards to promote sustainable economic growth.

OECD member countries account for three-fifths of the world's GDP, three-quarters of the world's trade, and over 90 percent of the global official development assistance, and half of the world's energy consumption.

We must fill this vacancy so that we can more effectively advance our shared interests and values. The positions for which you have all been nominated are highly important, each requiring extensive skills and experience. Once again, I thank you for your willingness to serve and yield to the vice Chair, Senator Hagerty.

STATEMENT OF HON. BILL HAGERTY, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I want to thank all the nominees for appearing before this committee today.

It is an enormous honor to be nominated for this position and I think you will have the opportunity if you are confirmed to represent the most exceptional nation in the world. I hope you will always remember that. It is truly an honor.

I would like to start with the nominee to be U.S. Representative to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture (UNFAO). UNFAO works to eradicate hunger, promote sustainable agriculture, and ensure food security worldwide.

U.S. agriculture has historically contributed significantly to our net balance of payments and we usually run an agricultural trade surplus. Yet, in 2023 USDA forecast a $90 billion agricultural trade deficit and an even more significant trade deficit in 2024.

I look forward to hearing from the nominee how UNFAO is addressing the way tariffs and nontariff barriers might be hindering agricultural trade.

I would like to turn to the nominee to be U.S. Representative the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

This organization is responsible for developing policies and standards, undertaking compliance audits, performing studies and analyses and providing assistance and building aviation capacity with the cooperation of its members and stakeholders.

With the goal of improving overall aviation safety and development, I look forward to hearing from the nominee on his areas of concern and his perspective on the major U.S. interest that he hopes to advance in the ICAO.

Finally, I would like to turn to the nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. The OECD was established in 1961 as an international organization comprised of countries committed to democracy and the market economy.

The OECD provides the primary global forum for negotiating agreements on tax policies. It is where the United States has opportunities to advocate for its priorities.

It is important that the United States continue to have strong representation at the OECD to help shape and direct policy issues that advance U.S. national interest.

To the nominees again, thank you for serving our nation and for answering the questions from our committee today. I look forward to hearing your testimony.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back to you.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Senator Hagerty.

And I will now turn to Senator Booker to introduce one of the panelists.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY A. BOOKER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator BOOKER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I am honored to be here but a little bit begrudgingly because I have known Mr. Prescott for 30 years and for 30 years I have been terribly jealous of him.

We met each other at Yale Law School where he was clearly more intellectually gifted than me. We both wanted to make a difference in the world, but I quickly stumbled or descended into the world of politics while he rose to the higher calling of focusing on national security.

And, finally, if you look behind him—he has a beautiful family here. So I am a little bit here begrudgingly but I will try to give the truth and nothing but the truth.

At Yale there were a lot of really smart people but as Mark Twain said you never confuse your education with your schooling. This is a man whose education was rooted in the idea that it is to be used to make the world a better place.

He has been committed and has had a character of commitment to serving others, especially the world's most vulnerable. If you look at his career, do not judge a person by what they say but look at their continuous, unbroken track record of making a difference in the lives of other people.

Jeff began his public service journey actually as a nonpartisan White House Fellow and continued quickly. When people recognized his talent, skill, acumen, and heart he began to have senior roles in the White House, National Security Council, and Department of State.

Recently he has been working as deputy to our U.N. Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield. Linda has called me multiple times. I think she is one step short of a TRO in telling me how great Jeff is and has been at her job.

She says quite clearly he walks the walk and he has been making a significant difference on behalf of the United States and the United States agenda as well as other nations in the world on a range of critical issues affecting national security and global security.

I will say that I am very pleased that he is now focusing on an issue that is dear to my heart and a major focus of my office, which is food security.

Jeff at the helm, alongside Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield, have been leading in the formulation of the U.S. response on every food security and humanitarian crisis over the last three years.

He has worked to isolate Russia in the U.N. Security Council following Putin's invasion of Ukraine, marshaled a global humanitarian response to the war and its consequences and worked with others to take every measure possible to maintain the flow of Ukrainian grain to the world.

He is really one of those behind the scenes actors who is a humble hero on the world stage. He fought to keep a key lifeline open to the Syrian people and worked tirelessly to avert famine in Ethiopia.

Jeff has also organized summits to bring together world leaders to galvanize action to address the unprecedented magnitude of the global hunger crisis.

For as long as I have known this man I know his heart, I know his head, and I see every single day that his ambition is not for personal fame. It is not for some partisan agenda.

His ambition is about his moral compass, which is always pointed towards service, love of country. It is not just putting your hand on your heart; it is reaching out your hand to others and he has demonstrated that.

He has never been interested in pushing a party agenda or in some way delving into the divisiveness of this nation. He believes we share common values and he does not preach that, he demonstrates it.

Jeff's character and expertise make him the right person for this role at a critical time. As we all know, up to 10 percent of the world's population goes to bed hungry each night. We do not have time to waste. We need a man of his character and commitment in this position.

I am thrilled to see Jeff nominated. I am jealous that he continues to show such distinction in his career and challenge me. I have got work to do to keep up.

But I am grateful at this moment to be sitting next to a person that for 30 years I have admired, I have been grateful for, and now even more so I am thankful that he has a chance to serve our nation in this role.

I urge colleagues on both sides of the aisle to please support his nomination.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much, Senator Booker.

We will now begin with the testimony of the nominees beginning with Mr. Prescott and, please, if you can confine your remarks to five minutes.

Mr. Prescott, please proceed.

STATEMENT OF JEFFREY PRESCOTT, OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, NOMINATED TO BE U.S. REPRESENTATIVE TO THE UNITED NATIONS AGENCIES FOR FOOD AND AGRICULTURE, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Mr. PRESCOTT. Well, thank you, Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, distinguished members of the committee, and thank you, Senator Booker, for that very generous introduction and for your friendship over many years.

I really am grateful for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am also grateful to President Biden for his trust, to Secretary Blinken and Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield for their partnership over many years, and I want to thank my colleagues across the U.S. mission to the U.N. and the State Department for their dedicated service day in and day out.

I owe my deepest debt of gratitude to my family. When I arrived in Washington in 2010 as a White House Fellow I expected to serve just a few short months. I have been honored to continue that service over the last decade including now as deputy to Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield.

With this privilege comes sacrifice and I am grateful to my family for helping bear the burden. That includes my mother Barbara Blackburn and stepfather Ed Blackburn watching from their home in North Carolina.

But I would not be here before you today without those sitting behind me, my wife Susan Jakes and my daughters Amalia and Phoebe. Thank you. Thank you for your love and support on this day and every day as you inspire me and make possible my continued service to our country.

This is as complex and consequential a moment in the world as any we have faced. We are in a geopolitical competition to shape the future of the international order and we are grappling with intractable global challenges that cross borders.

Food security sits at the intersection of these two great strategic challenges. The world is facing an unprecedented global food security crisis.

Mr. Chairman, you just mentioned that there are more than 700 million people around the world suffering from hunger, a crisis fueled by compounding factors—by the pandemic, by drought and other climate shocks, and critically, by conflict.

Russia's brutal, unprovoked invasion of Ukraine has worsened an already profound challenge, driving increases in hunger and extreme poverty worldwide. Additional conflicts and crises across the Middle East, Africa, the Western Hemisphere, and Asia are further straining the global humanitarian system.

Over nearly three years I have advanced the Biden administration's use of every tool available to confront these crises, working with Secretary Blinken and Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield to bring food security to the forefront of the agenda of the United Nations.

We mobilized more than a hundred countries around a common roadmap and convened a global food security summit. More recently, I traveled with Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield to the Chad-Sudan border to galvanize action to provide life-saving relief and to hold accountable those responsible for the suffering. If confirmed I would seek to focus on three top priorities.

First, to ensure that we use taxpayer dollars as effectively and efficiently as possible in international institutions. The bipartisan support that makes America the most generous donor to the U.N. system depends on transparency and accountability and budget discipline.

If confirmed I will be your partner in fighting to maintain integrity, promote U.S. values and uphold good governance.

Second, even as America has stepped up, a testament to the leadership of this committee and your colleagues, our efforts alone are not sufficient.

If confirmed I will seek to leverage the private sector in responding to emergencies and building resilience, to engage nontraditional donors, and to establish new innovative sources of support.

I believe we should strengthen partnerships with American farmers in our work around the world. American farming is the gold standard to your point, Senator Hagerty, and I would be honored to connect my early experience growing up in Kansas and working summers on a Texas farm to this role.

Our farmers not only have the power to share their yields with markets all over the world, especially where there is a level playing field, but also the capacity to share best practices around science and technology to teach people to better feed themselves.

Third, we have an imperative to advance American interests and values in the face of unrelenting efforts of our competitors. After all, great power competition does not end at the U.N.'s front door, certainly not from the perspective of our adversaries.

I have a deep expertise and clear-eyed understanding of the challenge posed by China and, if confirmed, I would vigorously engage in this intense competition.

Finally, I am humbled that if confirmed I would follow distinguished former U.S. Ambassadors in this role. That certainly includes Ambassador Cindy McCain, who held this position before assuming leadership of the World Food Programme last April.

I have benefited from close consultations with many other leaders in this field, including Ambassador McCain's predecessor at the World Food Programme, Governor David Beasley.

I understand the critical responsibility that this committee and Congress as a whole has on these issues and if confirmed would seek to partner closely with you and your staff.

There has never been a more important time for U.S. leadership on the global stage and I would be honored to serve the American people.

Thank you, and look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JEFFREY PRESCOTT

Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, distinguished members of the committee: thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I am grateful to President Biden for his trust, and to Secretary Blinken and Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield for their partnership over many years. I want to thank my colleagues across the U.S. Mission and the State Department for their dedicated service, day in and day out, on behalf of the American people.

I owe my deepest debt of gratitude to my family. When I arrived in Washington in 2010 as a White House Fellow, I expected to serve just a few short months. I have been honored to continue that service over the last decade, including now as deputy to Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield. With this privilege comes sacrifice, and I am grateful to my family for helping bear the burden. That includes my mother, Barbara Blackburn, and stepfather, Ed Blackburn, watching from their home in North Carolina. But I would not be before you today without those sitting behind me: my wife, Susan Jakes, and my daughters, Amalia and Phoebe. Thank you for your love and support on this day, and every day, as you inspire me and make possible my continued service to our country.

This is as complex and consequential a moment in the world as any we have faced. We are in a geopolitical competition to shape the future of the international order. And we are grappling with intractable global challenges that cross borders.

Food security sits at the intersection of these two great strategic challenges. As the members of this committee know well, the world is facing an unprecedented global food security crisis, with approximately 735 million people around the world suffering from hunger. This is a crisis fueled by compounding factors: by the pandemic, by drought and other climate shocks, and, critically, by conflict.

Russia's invasion of Ukraine has worsened an already profound challenge, driving increases in hunger and extreme poverty. Ukrainian farmers that should be cultivating some of world's most productive farmlands are instead defending their homeland as Russia destroys fields and ports. Additional conflicts and crises, across the Middle East, Africa, the Western Hemisphere, and Asia are further straining the global humanitarian system.

Over nearly three years, I have advanced the Biden administration's use of every tool available to confront these crises, working with Secretary Blinken and Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield to bring food security to the forefront of the agenda of the United Nations. We mobilized more than 100 countries around a common roadmap, convened a Global Food Security Summit, and rallied countries to end the use of food as a weapon of war. More recently, I traveled with Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield to the Chad-Sudan border to galvanize action to provide life-saving relief and to hold accountable those responsible for the suffering.

Building on my own record, if confirmed, I would seek to focus on three top priorities.

First, to ensure we use taxpayer dollars as effectively and efficiently as possible in international institutions. The bipartisan support that makes America the most generous donor to the U.N. system depends on transparency and accountability, and budget discipline. If confirmed, I will be your partner in fighting to maintain integrity, promote U.S. values, and uphold good governance.

Second, even as America has stepped up—a testament to this committee and your colleagues across the Congress—our efforts alone are not sufficient to match the scale. If confirmed, I will seek to expand opportunities to leverage the private sector in responding to emergencies and building resilience, to engage non-traditional donors to share the burden, and to establish new, innovative sources of support.

I believe we should strengthen partnerships with American farmers in our work on agriculture and hunger around the world. American farming is the gold standard, and I'd be honored to connect my early experiences growing up in Kansas and working summers on a Texas farm to this role. Our farmers not only have the power to share their yields with markets all over the world, but also the capacity to share best practices around science and technology to teach people to better feed themselves.

Third, we have an imperative to advance American interests and values in the face of unrelenting efforts of our competitors. After all, great power competition does not end at the U.N.'s front door, certainly not from the perspective of our adversaries. I have a deep expertise and a clear-eyed understanding of the challenge posed by China and know what it takes to compete. If confirmed, I would vigorously engage in this intense competition.

Finally, I am humbled that, if confirmed, I would follow distinguished former U.S. Ambassadors in this role. That certainly includes Ambassador Cindy McCain, who held this position before assuming leadership of the World Food Program last April. I have benefited from close consultations with many other leaders in this field, including Ambassador McCain's predecessor, Governor David Beasley.

I understand the critical responsibility that this committee, and Congress as a whole, has on these issues and, if confirmed, would seek to partner closely with you and your staff.

There has never been a more important time for U.S. leadership on global food security, agriculture, and humanitarian issues. If confirmed, I will be honored to represent the American people to maintain and expand our global leadership. I look forward to your questions.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much, Mr. Prescott.
Mr. Maloney, please proceed with your testimony.

STATEMENT OF HON. SEAN PATRICK MALONEY, OF NEW YORK, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ORGANIZATION FOR ECONOMIC COOPERATION AND DEVELOPMENT, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Mr. MALONEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Mr. Vice Chair, Senators.

It is an honor to appear as the nominee to be the U.S. Representative to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. I am so grateful to the President and to Secretary Blinken for the confidence they have shown in me.

I also want to thank my family, my husband, Randy. We have been together for 31 years. We have had three children together, Reinel Jesus, Daley, and Essie. So I want to thank them for all their love and support, and without it I could not be sitting before you today.

We do meet against the backdrop of two wars in Europe and the Middle East on a scale not seen in generations and we meet amid the rise of authoritarian movements around the world.

Now more than ever we need a values-based organization like the OECD to demonstrate the benefits that free market democratic economies can deliver to our citizens.

As President Biden has said, democracy is hard work. The work of democracy is never finished. It must be protected constantly and that is why the OECD is and remains so vital.

Its research and convening power provide policymakers the information necessary to guide our nations through challenging times and it amplifies our common values.

Authoritarian regimes are trying to tell a story that their single party systems, command economies, and repressive security apparatuses deliver the best outcomes for their people. But we know this story is a dangerous lie.

The OECD provides the objective research to expose that fiction and demonstrate the true strength and benefits of free societies.

As Secretary Blinken said, the more we and all democracies can show the world that we can deliver for our people, for each other, the more we can refute the lie that authoritarian countries love to tell.

Now, I come to this role and before this committee with what I hope is the right mix of knowledge and experience to advocate for the United States and our policies at the OECD.

I am an attorney by training and served as a partner at two global law firms. I worked at the White House on the senior staff as the President's staff secretary. I served as the chief operating officer of a startup software company focused on risk management in the energy derivatives markets.

I advised two New York Governors, focusing on improving the state's public higher education system. Most recently, I served five terms as a member of the House of Representatives where I championed legislative initiatives to rebuild our infrastructure, protect our veterans, strengthen our family farms, and as member of the Intelligence Committee I worked to strengthen our national security.

Throughout my tenure I worked closely with members of both parties to do what was right for the American people and this same approach will enable me to work with our partners at the OECD including our friends in labor and the business community to advance U.S. priorities.

Growing up in a large Irish Catholic family I saw firsthand the important role that families, small businesses, and our veterans play in creating good jobs and building a sense of community.

When I was a kid my dad, a disabled Navy vet, sold insurance out of a tiny office above the town library. My mom typed the letters when she was not caring for us six kids, trying to get us to school and to church on time.

Honoring their hard work and sacrifice has always been important to me in my public service. Families all over America need us to engage with the world to protect the peace and prosperity they depend on.

Modern small town America needs a strong global economy, open reliable markets, good infrastructure, affordable food and energy prices, and an educated workforce. If confirmed by the committee the needs of American families will always be my priority at the OECD.

So in closing, I cannot help but reflect what my parents would say if they could see me now. They worked really hard. They worked so hard for my sister and my brothers to get us through college and give us the opportunities that they never had.

So, if confirmed, it will be a great honor to represent and serve the United States at an international organization that fosters freedom, economic opportunity, and prosperity for all.

Thank you, and I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much, Mr. Maloney.

Mr. Crist, please proceed with your testimony.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHARLIE CRIST, OF FLORIDA, NOMINATED TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ON THE COUNCIL OF THE INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Mr. CRIST. Thank you very much, Chairman Schatz and Vice Chair Hagerty, members of the committee. It is my great honor to be with you today as the President's nominee to become the U.S. representative on the Council of International Civil Aviation Organization.

I am grateful that my fiance Chelsea of Minneapolis, Minnesota is here with me today and I thank her for her continued love and support. Interestingly, my hometown of St. Petersburg, Florida, was the site of the very first commercial flight ever when Tony Jannus flew from St. Petersburg to Tampa on January 1st, 1914.

Mr. Chairman, I greatly appreciate the opportunity to appear before this committee and its esteemed membership. I am humbled by the moment and by the confidence shown in me by the President and Secretary of State Blinken in submitting this nomination.

I have a lifelong commitment to public service and would be honored to continue that commitment in this position. If confirmed, I would view my role as advocating for the safety and security of every American who decides to board an airplane.

Nearly 80 years ago 54 nations gathered in Chicago at the invitation of the United States to develop an agreement to promote the safe and peaceful development of civil aviation.

This was a fraught moment as the world was still at war, and the concept of harmonious global air travel was very much in doubt. Consider the fact that simply traveling to Chicago by air for many of the participating countries was an act of considerable courage in itself.

The resulting Chicago convention was and remains the landmark agreement guiding the continuous development of civil aviation as a pillar of the global economy, and while the International Civil Aviation Organization, or ICAO, may be unknown to many Americans its purpose and performance are crucial to U.S. national security and the well being of us all.

In the 80 years since the Chicago convention no nation has done more than the United States to shape global aviation by driving innovation and focusing intently on safety and security.

That leadership has featured a sustained investment in ICAO as a body intended to cultivate international cooperation and coordination.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, if confirmed it would be my objective to extend the legacy of U.S. leadership at ICAO both to continue improving aviation safety and security and sustainability to address urgent challenges including aviation's impact on the Earth's climate.

I would also reinforce long-standing U.S. focus on the culture of reform and accountability at the organization, working in concert with ICAO leadership, Secretary General Juan Carlos Salazar and Council President Salvatore as well as Sciacchitano who have both shown encouraging commitment to these essential principles.

It is important to note that ICAO is not immune to the risk posed to international organizations by authoritarian states such as Russia or that such states have already been hard at work to undermine the purpose and performance of these bodies.

ICAO can only succeed if it remains aligned with its intended role and in keeping with its long-standing values. That role, those values, are threatened when member states disregard their international commitments as in the case of Belarus Ryanair forced landing to arrest political dissidents or Russia's decision to dual register stolen leased aircraft following its further invasion of Ukraine.

If confirmed I look forward to working with this committee, the aviation industry, and the community of expert federal agencies and offices to maximize U.S. impact at ICAO.

Mr. Chairman, the United States' history of leadership at ICAO is something for which we can all be proud of. It would be a profound honor to serve in such an important role, and if I have that good fortune I will serve with a determined focus on the safety, security, and well being of the American people.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF GOVERNOR CHARLIE CRIST

Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, members of the committee: it is my great honor to be with you today as the President's nominee to become the U.S. Representative on the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

I am grateful that my fiancé, Chelsea Grimes, of Minneapolis, Minnesota is here with me today. I thank her for her continued love and support. Interestingly, my hometown of St. Petersburg, Florida, was the site of the very first commercial flight; when Tony Jannus flew from St. Petersburg to Tampa, on January 1st, 1914.

Thank you, and I welcome your questions.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you all for your testimony. Now we have a few questions that speak to the importance that this committee places on responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and we expect and will be seeking from you. I would ask each of you to just answer yes or no.

If you are confirmed do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

[All nominees answered in the affirmative.]

Senator SCHATZ. Do you commit to keeping this committee fully and currently informed about activities under your purview?

[All nominees answered in the affirmative.]

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed and not just providing notification after the fact?

[All nominees answered in the affirmative.]

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you. Do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

[All nominees answered in the affirmative.]

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much. We will now begin a five-minute round of questioning.

Mr. Prescott, the State Department and USAID funding makes up just over 1 percent of the total federal budget. Of that humanitarian and development assistance including support for the activities undertaken by organizations where you would be representing the United States make up just a fraction of that.

Some believe that is already too much. Can you explain why it is in United States' interest to support these efforts to respond to crises around the world?

Mr. PRESCOTT. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I agree that it is extremely important for us to maintain our tradition—our bipartisan tradition of leadership on responding to humanitarian emergencies around the world and stepping up to help meet the food security needs of people all over the world.

As I mentioned in my testimony, as you mentioned in your opening, we are at an unprecedented scale of the global hunger crisis at this moment and the U.S. support for international institutions including those, if confirmed, I would be representing the United States before on the world stage helps address both the urgent hunger crisis that we are facing right now but also making investments to ensure that we can help people feed themselves and help people support their own societies over the long term.

It is important that we invest in resilience and we invest for the long term in addition to the need to respond to the immediate. This is important to us because with hunger, with the breakdown of the social safety net in places around the world, we see the rise of conflict. We see the flow of migration. We see challenges across the board.

It is in our national security interests to make these investments. As you mentioned, it is a very small percentage of the investments that we make to our national security around the world and it is important that we strengthen them, going forward.

If I may just say one more thing, Mr. Chairman. I do think it is important that we connect with the work that we do bilaterally around the world through our agencies—USAID, the State Department, other U.S. agencies—and the work of these international institutions and if confirmed I would like to make sure that those investments that we are making around the world are done in coordination and that we are maximizing the efficiency and effectiveness of the U.S. taxpayer dollar that is going to help protect our security in these critical issues.

Thank you.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, and I think you said it exactly right. Hunger equals instability equals risk to us, and there are moral reasons for us to stay engaged and to reduce the number of people who go to bed hungry every day. But even if that is not driving you it is certainly in our national security interest.

Mr. Maloney, the Biden administration announced plans to expand the U.S. Pacific Islands Infrastructure Initiative to provide more than $28 million to support secure, sustainable, and resilient infrastructure in the Pacific.

How would you work through the OECD to support our strategic development goals in the Pacific?

Mr. MALONEY. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I know this is an issue of real concern to you. I think the OECD is such an excellent forum for—as a values-based organization, as a group of like-minded nations, to provide something exciting and positive for countries around the world to look to in the area of developing their infrastructure and, of course, one way to look at that would be as a counter to the Chinese efforts with One Belt One Road but really at its core it is about creating opportunities—better opportunities for international financing for the private sector to really get in the game in an area where there is so much need for infrastructure. And, of course, resiliency particularly in the Pacific Area will be so critical as we go forward.

So it is really a win-win if we get organized properly and the OECD is an excellent forum as a group of like-minded countries to—through initiatives like the Blue Dot Network and others to really corral and organize international financing around better infrastructure investments and hopefully ones that do not come with a lot of the downsides that perhaps other opportunities from other sources do.

I should point out that my work in the private sector as a partner at Kirkland & Ellis focused on deploying private capital to infrastructure. So it is an area I am very excited to work with the committee on as we go forward.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you. And just one final comment on that as I have interacted with Pacific Island leaders.

Two thoughts. One is that they understand that there is a competition between the United States and China but they do not want to be viewed as instruments in that competition.

They may have a view but they are they—and they may be small but they are sovereigns and I think that we have done a better job over the last couple of years of being physically present but also understanding that to the extent that Secretary Blinken says friends, allies, partners, it starts with friendship.

It starts with a personal relationship. It starts with physical presence in the region and not just viewing these places as a possible location for a base or an installation or a carrier.

And so to the extent that we can cultivate those relationships I think it inures to our strategy as it relates to China but that has to be a secondary benefit to a friendship that is real.

Senator HAGERTY?

Senator HAGERTY. Mr. Chairman, I might just stay on this topic that you have raised.

Mr. Maloney, we will start with you and share a personal story if I might because it goes right to the point that our Chairman raised.

In my previous position I served as U.S. Ambassador to Japan. One day I happened to be reading the Nikkei Asia and I saw that the South Korean shipbuilder that was managing Subic Bay was in bankruptcy. There were two bidders. Both of the names sounded suspicious to me. I had my team check on it.

It turned out they were both related to the CCP and the Chinese interests there were very real. It took some work. I picked up the phone. I called the Secretary of the Navy.

I asked him if he wanted to be the Secretary of the Navy that got Subic Bay back for America or did he want to be the Secretary of the Navy that let it go to China.

I reached out to DFC, the components of that at the time. I reached out to a private equity firm in the United States to get their help.

The private equity firm wound up running the process. We got the Chinese bidders moved aside and went to the Japanese. They helped us put the financing together through their Development Finance Corporation to buy the land around it.

Our DFC could never get the deal done, and it is something that is very close and personal to me. We need to be able to make these institutions work.

I signed, on behalf the United States, the partnership with JBIC—that is the Japanese version—OPIC and the Australian counterpart. That was the beginning of the Blue Dot Network. The Blue Dot Network is now residing or being incubated inside the OECD and the standards for certification are going to be built there.

I want to get your thoughts, Mr. Maloney, on how you will drive this and how we will make certain that our interests are maintained and moved forward.

Mr. MALONEY. Well, thank you, Senator, and thank you for your work on this. Obviously, with your experience in the private sector and in Asia you are in an excellent position to understand how critical it is.

Look, I believe that the Blue Dot Network is an excellent beginning but it is just the beginning, and as you know there is so much potential in this area, and the scale of our efforts need to match those of other countries around the world, especially the Chinese, and that I think is the challenge going forward.

It is a good start. It is the right track we are on. But I will certainly be eager to work with you to accelerate our efforts, to make them more effective, and to scale them properly so that these represent real opportunities to get projects done because, as you know, that is the bottom line.

People need what they need to grow their economies, serve their citizens, and as with 5G and other areas where we have to have something to offer, not just something to oppose, I think there is real opportunity here.

And as you know, there is so much capital sitting on the sidelines eager to match its long-term liabilities to these, perhaps, lower returns but stable, effective returns that infrastructure can bring.

But you need to rationalize it, you need to reduce the political risk, you need to make the deal flow better, and I believe those are real opportunities and enjoy bipartisan support.

So it is a real opportunity to do something positive.

Senator HAGERTY. I would encourage you, particularly given your experience at Kirkland & Ellis where I have in my private sector career spent a lot of money with your firm.

[Laughter.]

Senator HAGERTY. But you have access to talent that I think can be very, very helpful here. I would encourage you to build a network. I would be happy to help you with that, to advise in this. But there is a real urgency here. We need to make this work, we need to broaden it, and we need the toolkit that we do not have alone.

We have got to have partners in the private equity arena whom you know, I am sure. We have got to have partners that can provide every aspect of the capital stack to make us competitive in this arena because our competition does not have the sort of limitations we have.

And so I would encourage you to take utmost speed and urgency as you take a very hard look at this and I hope you will prioritize it at the top of your list if confirmed.

Mr. MALONEY. Thank you, Senator.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you.

Mr. Prescott, I will turn to you for a moment to talk about the trade deficits that have emerged in agriculture. I was really surprised. In fact, I never thought in my lifetime I would find us become a net importer of food.

Are there tariff or nontariff barriers that are making this situation worse? What are your thoughts on addressing it?

Mr. PRESCOTT. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

I agree with you completely that we need to take a very hard look at this. Part of what this role would require, if confirmed, is representing the best of America on the world stage.

That means the American farmer and that means American agriculture, and these institutions—these international institutions play a role in setting the rules of the road, setting standards, and in some cases setting the technical standards that our farmers need to abide by to get their goods to the market.

We have a stake in making sure that those rules are fair, that the highest levels of science and technology are incorporated into those rules.

We have got to fight for our interests in these institutions and if confirmed that is where I would put my focus and I think there will be real opportunities to work. I hope there will be real opportunities, if confirmed, to work with you, work with other members of this committee and the Congress to make that happen.

Senator HAGERTY. It is no surprise to you that the agricultural elements of trade negotiations are the toughest and having the scar tissue from being involved in the U.S.-Japan trade deal negotiations I can tell you it is tough but it is absolutely critical.

So thank you for focusing on this.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Thank you very much, and I hope, if confirmed, I have an opportunity to sit with you and get your advice and wisdom about how best to go about that in this role.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much.

Senator KAINE?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and congratulations to the nominees. I particularly am happy to see my friend Governor Crist here.

We were Governors together and we have each had a number of different chapters in public life and we seem to braid back and forth together. It is good to see you here at the committee hearing.

Representative Maloney, I want to talk about two items with the OECD. First, if you look at the OECD list of nations—I guess 38 nations—it is a fascinating list. Big nations—you know, the United States, Mexico, Iceland, fewer than 400,000 people.

One of the things that is very notable, though, about the list is that there is one continent that does not have an OECD member and that is the continent of Africa.

The North and South America, yes. Europe, yes. Asia, yes. Australia, of course. I guess Antarctica does not have a membership. So there is there is two continents.

But the fact that Africa does not have a member I think is something that sends a message about the OECD, and if an Iceland with 400,000 or a Luxembourg with 600,000 can be an OECD member along with large countries then I would just hope that you might consider with your colleagues, first, nations have to want to be a member and they have to meet standards.

But it would really send a different message about the OECD if there were members of the OECD from all continents. So I am just going to state that as something I might hope to see during the time I am in the Senate.

The second thing I want to ask you about now is that OECD has an anti-bribery convention and it went into effect in 1999, more than 20 years ago, legally established binding standards to criminalize bribery of foreign public officials and international business transactions.

The 38 members and the seven—seven other non-OECD countries have embraced the OECD convention. Despite the fact that the convention has been in place for a long time domestic enforcement has been pretty uneven.

The OECD Working Group on Bribery's annual report in 2022 indicates that 18 of the 44 members have yet to conclude a single foreign bribery case even 20 years after its initiation.

Many member states have yet to implement recommendations for critical anti-bribery reforms. What might be done through the OECD to strengthen compliance with the anti-bribery convention?

Mr. MALONEY. Well, thank you for your question, Senator, and thank you for pointing out that the OECD, like all of our multilateral organizations, needs to be inclusive of all the peoples of the world, of course, keeping with our values and standards that are the pride of that organization.

Look, on the anti-bribery convention as you know the United States led with our values in the 1970s on the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act and if ever there was an example of where that far-sightedness has paid off it has been in setting that example of how what initially seemed like it might disadvantage our companies has in fact gone a long way to create exactly the kind of climate where American investment opportunities are maximized and that has to be the argument for countries that are perhaps lagging in some respects on their commitments to the convention.

Look, our argument is not do it for us. Our argument is do it for you—that your societies, your economies, will grow and be strengthened just as ours had by holding ourselves to higher standards and the OECD is a fantastic venue for that because you have got critical mass. As you know, it is two-thirds of the world's economy.

And so like many things in politics and in life it is about focus and emphasis and effort and I do think we just need to keep at that hard work. But the primary argument is that this is for your benefit as much as anything.

And I think that also should guide our efforts at accession as we move forward. We need to balance carefully our desire to grow any organization with an adherence to those core principles, and I do think that is why the collection of data and research that the OECD excels in is so valuable because it really does create that kind of transparency and shine a light on where we are succeeding and where we have more work to do.

Senator KAINE. Great. I appreciate that.

Governor Crist, I was struck by some of the positives coming out of the dialogue between President Biden and President Xi yesterday—Premier Xi—and particularly in the reduction of fentanyl, the resumption of better communication in mil-to-mil communication, which is so important.

Communication and engagement guarantees nothing, but the absence of communication and engagement usually guarantees problems.

Talk a little bit about China's priorities in the ICAO and should you be confirmed how you will make sure that we try to work productively together on important issues dealing with civil aviation around the world.

Mr. CRIST. Thank you very much, Senator, and thank you for your kind words at the outset of this meeting. I appreciate it very much.

The relationship with China is complicated and I, like you, and I think most Americans are very encouraged by the now open dialogue directly between our President and President Xi.

That is a positive sign, and as you well stated having a dialogue that is ongoing, that is direct, is a great positive not just for China and the United States but for the world. So I am encouraged by that.

Now, China's history at ICAO has been more complicated. One of the recent leaders of ICAO was from China and there were challenges as it relates to accountability and transparency at the agency.

We have new leadership now, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, and he has done a wonderful job from all indications that I have seen.

I am encouraged by that and I think we need to continue to foster a relationship at ICAO among its 193 members and over 30 members on the council to have good open dialogue that is honest and clear and transparent.

I commit to that, sir, and to this committee, to make sure that we stay on that path that ICAO is now on and I am very encouraged by that recent path.

Senator KAINE. Great. Thank you, Governor. I yield back.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much, Senator Kaine.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much, Chairman and, again, I am grateful for this extraordinary panel.

I just want to ask real quick, Sean, and forgive me for using your first name—Mr. Maloney—Honorable Mr. Maloney, OECD countries account for 95 percent of development assistance and my concern is just seeing this trend of countries not stepping up in a time that the demand for development assistance is obviously significantly higher.

How can you use your role to help galvanize that aspect of the OECD countries?

Mr. MALONEY. Well, thank you, Senator, and you can use my first name anytime.

Senator BOOKER. I appreciate that.

Mr. MALONEY. You will have to tell me later how somebody gets an introduction from you because—

[Laughter.]

Mr. MALONEY [continued]. Because except for this I cannot imagine anything better.

Look, you are so right. I mean, I do think there is much to be commended in the response to the Russian invasion of Ukraine, in the response of organizations like the OECD, the role they are playing in potential development assistance and reconstruction and the fact is is that more broadly these are the world's richest countries, after all.

These are the countries that have the most at stake in a stable, prosperous global economy and development assistance. Similar to Senator Kaine's question about anti-bribery efforts, ultimately this is in our interest to have better markets and better partners in the family of countries that are not yet in the OECD or that would through their development be at that level.

And so I do think the coordination, the research, the best practices, the standards, that the OECD excels at really have a key role to play here in just allowing decision makers like yourself to know what is going on and to make sure that everybody is doing their part, and, again, built around the concept that ultimately this is in our own self interest.

Senator BOOKER. Fantastic. And I will note for the record that you sincerely married up with the gentleman behind you. I just have that same concern. I mean, the scale of this crisis unbelievable. I have been to Burkina Faso with Senator Coons. The scale of this—the food insecurity—there is stunning. Millions in crisis.

But the challenge right now is we have a supplemental being discussed and debated here and other countries' commitments are going down as well. I just met with some European leaders talking about this.

It just seems that we are at a pivotal point in human history with the scale of the crisis, the diminishing amount of commitment of more developed nations.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Thank you, Senator, for that and thank you to you and to Senator Coons for your long-standing leadership on these issues. It is extremely important that we step up but we also have to get other countries to step up with us and that is just absolutely critical.

The short answer is on the supplemental if Congress does not provide these funds it is going to be very unlikely that we get other nations to step up with us. More around the world will go hungry, more will migrate, peace will be undermined, and the world will be less secure.

Food security is national security and these investments invest our interest as well as the interests of people around the world as well as our values, and I hope that we can see this body come together to ensure that the United States continues to play the global role that we have played, the leadership role in humanitarian issues on food security issues and on agriculture issues.

And if confirmed I would want to use the diplomatic platform that this provides—this position provides to be a champion for those issues and work very closely with you in doing so.

Senator BOOKER. And, Jeff, I am going to put both of these out there and then be done because I am afraid of the Chairman. Schatz runs a rough committee.

So really quick, first is that link between national security is really important for us to continue to state. I hear it from a lot of leaders involved in this, how failing to invest in food security now can cause political instability, lead to more fertile ground for terrorism and more. If you could address that link.

And then, secondly, I have been stunned at how immediate food security is necessary but the strategy for that does not get enough funding from the United States and other countries in developing resiliency and the capacity to prevent future food insecurity, which proportionately in terms of the payoff of that kind of investment seems extraordinarily low to me when I drill down on the numbers.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Senator, thank you for both of those points. I agree with you on the second point. We need to increase our investments in resilience, in long-term development—actually, the connection between development dollars and humanitarian dollars.

We need to find a way to make sure that we are not just responding to the crisis but we are investing in early warning systems and other efforts to prevent future crises from happening. We have to step up.

I think one of the advantages, if confirmed, I would bring to this job is a background and experience on hard national security issues and can help make that link that you pointed out, which I completely agree with, as clear as possible and help leverage our diplomacy to advance it around the world.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you. Chairman Schatz, I am sorry very much for going over, sir.

Senator SCHATZ. Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, and thank you to the three nominees before us, to your families, for your long service, Governor, Congressman, Mr. Prescott.

If confirmed, Mr. Prescott, Congressman Maloney, you will succeed close friends of mine who have held these two offices, Ambassador Cindy McCain and Ambassador Jack Markell, and I just want to touch on three broad issues, if I can.

First, the urgency of the supplemental request from the President, which has been touched on by all the others. The role of China in the U.N. system and the ways in which, whether it is the ICAO or the FAO, we have seen the impact when Chinese nationals lead organizations that have a global impact and then what happens if we fail to meet this moment.

So I will work backwards. The President's supplemental urges us to provide nearly $9 billion in humanitarian relief.

Mr. Prescott, a lot of time is being spent on the civilian tragedy in Gaza and the challenges in Ukraine but there are dozens of other countries to which the World Food Programme and FAO provide critical relief.

What would be the impact on the United States' standing in the world and our security if we fail to deliver on this humanitarian need?

Mr. PRESCOTT. Well, thank you, Senator, and, again, thank you for your long leadership on these issues.

We need to have those voices on the world stage. We need to make sure that not only that we are stepping up but that we are getting other countries to step up with us, and as I mentioned in my opening testimony, we need to find ways to bring other players into this picture as well.

That includes the private sector. That includes new mechanisms, and I think there are some good ideas that have been kicked around on this and I think we ought to take a hard look at them and really work together on that and if confirmed I would pledge to do that.

But as I just mentioned in response to Senator Booker, food security really is national security. When people go hungry we see conflicts increase, and so our—the urgency of stepping up not just to respond to the crisis in Ukraine, although, frankly, the crisis in Ukraine is having a spillover effect and other food security crises all over the world. That is why the Black Sea grain flow is so important and that is why we need to focus on it.

But we also need to make sure that we are paying attention to these other crises because when we do not they become bigger and they come back to haunt us at home.

Senator COONS. As you pointed out earlier, Mr. Prescott, hungry people do not just create conflict, they also migrate. They pick up and they move in ways that have security and stability consequences across whole regions and hemispheres.

You mentioned there are some good ideas. I think one of them is a bipartisan bill that Senator Graham and I have introduced to create a foundation for international food security which would attract private sector investment to partner with public sector investment. I hope you will work with me on that.

Congressman Maloney, direct budget support helps sustain the Ukrainian people. When Russia attacks infrastructure the first responders who come out and put out the fires and help restart the electric grid are folks who are being supported not just by the United States but by dozens of our partners.

The OECD is, largely, made up of those partners in that important work. What would it mean if we were to abandon Ukraine in their hour of need as they face a cold winter and ongoing Russian assaults not just on the military and the front lines but on the very fabric—the very infrastructure of the Ukrainian people?

Mr. MALONEY. Well, thank you, Senator, and thank you also for mentioning my predecessor, Governor—Ambassador Jack Markell. He and his wife Carla have been extremely generous to Randy and me and he is such an extraordinary public servant. No wonder he comes from Delaware.

Thank you for the question on Ukraine. The OECD obviously needs to stay in its lane to some degree. But when you think about the forum as a collection of countries value based, market economies, democracies, that is the key group of countries globally that will see the naked aggression Russia has demonstrated in Ukraine and the barbarity of that invasion the way we do and, more importantly, has the capacity to do something about it.

I think one of the great, perhaps, underdeveloped aspects of the OECD is its extraordinary value in a world where values come to define who you can work with.

It is not just the size of the economies. It is not just the size of the militaries. It is where can we get things done. The fact that it is a consensus organization and yet can be so effective really only underscores that and the effect of walking away from Ukraine is absolutely devastating.

I mean, I was there in Munich on that weekend before the invasion with Ambassador McCain and others, yourself, and listened to President Zelensky that day, and to think about the heroism they have demonstrated and the way the West has responded the President gets great credit for this, as you know.

But now is the moment. Now is the moment when we need to hang tough and to stand with our friends and, as you know, the United States is the absolute indispensable country in this and we must continue the effort.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Congressman.

One of the areas you will have the opportunity if confirmed to work in is development finance. I share the concerns of Senator Hagerty that the DFC, something I helped craft, has a huge amount of potential that it has not yet fully achieved.

I think the work against corruption, to promote transparency, to invest in more robust private markets and free enterprise that the OECD plays a central role in would be advanced by our being engaged in modern development finance.

So to the extent you have feedback for us on how we can strengthen the DFC it has impacts across all three of these areas but particularly one that may overlap with you.

Mr. Chairman, would you indulge me for a last question or should I—thank you.

Governor Crist, if I might, you referenced how the ICAO previously was under the leadership of a Chinese national and now is not. We just rejoined UNESCO. We were just voted in, I think, yesterday to the executive committee of UNESCO.

We have recently rejoined the Human Rights Council. There are all these organizations that most Americans do not know about and do not know what they do but that contribute to things like civil aviation safety and that helped with market access for American air carriers.

What is the consequence—and just a sentence of all three of you, if we could—what is the consequence for China's role in the world and America's role in the world if we step back from funding, participating in, and sustaining these critical multilateral organizations?

Mr. CRIST. Well, thank you, Senator. I appreciate the question.

We have to continue to participate. If we are absent our values are absent. If we are not present the kind of things that we cherish and hold dear—freedom, democracy—are not at the table to the degree that they should be, and we have been a leader at that and I think we need to continue to be and if we do not it is at our own demise.

Mr. MALONEY. I would certainly agree with that. The Governor said it very well, sir. It is sometimes difficult to defend every aspect of multilateral organizations and we should have a robust conversation and debate about that. But it is equally hard to defend ceding that ground, creating that vacuum, to an adversary or a strategic competitor in the international space.

And so I think when we are engaged we are stronger, especially vis-a-vis the People's Republic of China—the PRC.

Senator COONS. Mr. Prescott, bring us home. Wrap it up.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I could not say it better myself. If we are not at the table we are on the menu. We have to step up and lead in these organizations.

They are flawed and we need to make sure that we are working to reform them as well. But it is important that we engage in this vigorous competition and that means showing up and putting in the work.

Thank you, sir.

Senator COONS. Thank you all. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member. I look forward to supporting all of your nominations.

Senator SCHATZ. Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Governor Crist, I want to come to you on a topic that is of personal interest to me. It is something that the ICAO does not manage on a day to day basis but they do studies on it.

This has to do with slot allocations at international airports. I am sure you are aware, having been the Governor, the importance of airlift to foreign direct investment.

Making us competitive on the global stage requires U.S. access to slots around the world, and given what happened in the pandemic, the impact that had on aviation, in many areas aviation is swinging back very strong.

But I would not be surprised that that is an unequal result right now. In fact, the situation is probably quite different today versus where it was in 2019.

I just want to encourage you to take a very hard look at how slot allocations are working on an international basis, thinking about America's interest there, and as the ICAO studies this think about ways that we can advance America's interest in the whole process.

Mr. CRIST. Thank you. Thank you, Senator.

I appreciate that very much and you could not be more right. The slot allocations and the access to international travel, cargo, et cetera, are critically important to the U.S. economy and economies all over the world.

And so I commit to working with you, if confirmed, to be able to pursue this and advance that very important interest across the globe and an American interest in particular.

Senator HAGERTY. And what I have seen, I regret to say, is that there are other nations that do not play by the same set of rules that we do that would like to involve themselves in slot allegations maybe to disproportionately advantage themselves.

And so understanding the situation and making certain that we have got metrics and parameters that ensure that slots are allocated properly and fairly is absolutely important.

Mr. CRIST. Yes, sir. Absolutely. Thank you.

Senator SCHATZ. If there are no more questions for the witnesses, the record will remain open until the close of business tomorrow, Friday, November 17th, for questions for the record.

I urge our nominees—I know it is Thanksgiving but if you want to get confirmed quickly to try to complete those answers as rapidly and as thoroughly as possible so that we can clear you for committee action. Each of you have critical positions that need confirmation.

That concludes the first panel of today's hearing. We will excuse our nominees and allow our next panelists to get settled, and we will recess for two or three minutes.

[Recess.]

Senator SCHATZ. We will now consider another set of important nominations.

We have Mr. Cardell Kenneth Richardson, Sr., to be the Inspector General for the Department of State, we have Ms. Nicole Champagne to be the Ambassador to the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, and Ms. Joann Lockard to be the Ambassador to Burkina Faso.

Congratulations and thank you to each one of you. You are all extremely qualified for the positions for which you have been nominated and will promote U.S. foreign policy and national security interests in your respective roles, if confirmed. We thank you for your service.

Public service asks a lot of family members too so we would encourage you to introduce your family members when you have an opportunity to address the committee.

The first on the panel is Mr. Richardson, who currently serves as the Inspector General of the National Geospatial Intelligence Agency where he provides independent oversight and objective assessments of agency programs and operations.

He is a retired United States Air Force colonel, having served 26 years in active duty. Mr. Richardson has been honored twice with the Presidential Rank Award for his service.

Next we have Ms. Nicole Champagne, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service who currently serves as the Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy in Cairo, Egypt.

She previously served as charge ad interim to the U.S. mission in the Vienna office of the United Nations and at the International Atomic Energy Agency among, other postings.

Ms. Champagne is nominated to represent our nation at the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons where she would support global efforts to permanently eliminate weapons under the Chemical Weapons Convention.

Finally, we also have Ms. Joann Lockard, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service most recently serving as the DCM in the U.S. Embassy in Cote d'Ivoire.

Ms. Lockard's assignments also have included serving as the public affairs officer at the U.S. embassies in Uganda and Burkina Faso. If confirmed, Ms. Lockard will return to Burkina Faso as Ambassador.

Burkina Faso has experienced a coup and a military takeover in just the last year. More than 2 million people are internally displaced as of this past July and an estimated 4.7 million people need humanitarian assistance. It is a volatile situation, to put it mildly, and that makes this role especially challenging.

But Ms. Lockard's deep knowledge of and experience in the region will be vital for the U.S. efforts to support regional stability through the promotion of democratic values, respect for human rights, and sustainable economic development.

The positions that each of you have been nominated for are essential to promoting American values of democracy and equality around the world. Each role requires specific skills and expertise that you bring.

Once again, I thank you for your continued willingness to serve and now yield to the vice Chair, Senator Hagerty.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And, again, I want to thank the nominees for appearing before this committee today, your willingness to serve this great nation. These are very important positions that you are up for.

First of all, I want to say this, that if you are confirmed you are going to have the opportunity to serve the most exceptional nation in the world and I hope you will always remember that and take it to heart. I am sure you will.

And for your families that support you I very much appreciate the contributions that you make to the success of your loved one.

I would like to start with the nominee to be Inspector General of the Department of State. You will play a critical role in audits, evaluations, inspections, and investigations at the department, and the State Department's Office of Inspector General plays a critical role in investigations.

In July of this year I led a group of 17 Senators to ask the State Department's Office of the Inspector General to investigate whether State Department officials have complied with all appropriate laws and regulations with respect to the suspension of Special Envoy for Iran Robert Malley's security clearance.

On June 29th, 2023, news reports revealed that the State Department had suspended Special Envoy Robert Malley's security clearance earlier this year due to serious allegations of mishandling information.

In early July of 2023 news reports revealed that the FBI is also investigating Special Envoy Robert Malley for allegedly mishandling classified information, and just a few days ago one news reporter wrote, quote, "Two government officials tell me that Malley was picked up on an intercept revealing something he was not supposed to reveal in a private conversation with a foreign official," close quote.

And I should also add that in August of 2023 we learned that Malley's security clearance had actually been suspended back in April of '23, three months before the suspension was actually reported in public.

And how did we learn about it? The Tehran Times, which is a propaganda arm of the Iranian regime, somehow got hold of the sensitive but unclassified memo. That memo is the one that informs Robert Malley that his clearance was being suspended. They published it.

As you should know, State Department regulations known as the Foreign Affairs Manual describe in detail how diplomats are supposed to carefully handle sensitive but unclassified information.

That is why it is especially shocking that sensitive but unclassified material related to Robert Malley's case was either so poorly handled or perhaps it was stolen.

Our group of Senators have also asked the State Department's inspector general to look into how the Tehran Times got its hand on the sensitive memo.

Mr. Chairman, I want to enter this memo for the record, if I might, and also our letter.

[The information referred to is located at the end of this transcript.]

Senator HAGERTY. In September of 2023 news outlets reported that individuals who had worked closely with Special Envoy Robert Malley were intimately involved in the so-called Iran experts initiative, which is a foreign influence and collusion network run by the Iranian regime.

In fact, one of these individuals recently worked for Robert Malley at the State Department before moving to work at the Department of Defense for the assistant secretary who oversees Special Operations.

I would refer these ongoing—I refer to these ongoing investigations to highlight the need and significance of filling the position of Inspector General for the State Department so we can get at these deeply concerning issues.

I would now like to turn to the nominee to the U.S. Representative of the Organization for Prohibition of Chemical Weapons. The OPCW is international organization that is charged with overseeing the implementation of the Chemical Weapons Convention.

The nominee, if confirmed, will represent the United States at this organization and advocate for U.S. national security interest with respect to preventing the development, production, and stockpiling of chemical weapons by foreign countries and other actors.

Last but certainly not least I would like to focus on the nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Burkina Faso. Burkina Faso is facing seemingly intractable political and security crises. Burkina Faso, like Niger, was until recently an emergent democracy and U.S. security partner.

Now it has joined the growing ranks of countries in the region experiencing coups and turning toward Russia. Growing violence and instability has dramatically accelerated the humanitarian emergency in Burkina Faso, leading to one of the most—leading to one of the worst internal displacement crises in Africa.

The Biden administration will have to continue working closely with the international community to support efforts to restore security, the rule of law, and economic and social stability.

To all three nominees, again, thank you for your willingness to serve our nation and I turn the gavel back to you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Vice Chair.

I will now turn to our nominees. Mr. Richardson, please proceed.

STATEMENT OF CARDELL KENNETH RICHARDSON, SR., OF VIRGINIA, NOMINATED TO BE INSPECTOR GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, VICE STEVE A. LINICK

Mr. RICHARDSON. Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, members of the committee, thank you for the invitation to appear before you today as you consider my nomination to be the Inspector General for the Department of State. I am honored to have been nominated by President Biden to serve in this key role in government oversight.

I would like to introduce my family members who are here supporting me today: my wife Jackie, my daughter Chandace Richardson-Arledge, and my son, who is my namesake and shares the same birthday, Cardell II, and my brothers Canardo and Carlton Richardson. I also recognize many family members, colleagues, and friends who have helped me during this nomination process and throughout my career.

I have dedicated my entire professional life to public service. I have over four decades of serving in diverse and complex positions of leadership and responsibility.

My parents inculcated in my siblings and me an unshakeable foundation of faith and a strong work ethic. They encouraged me to live an open-book life, help those in need, and always do your best. These values have shaped my life.

Upon graduating from Howard University School of Architecture and Engineering I was commissioned as a U.S. Air Force officer and internalized the Air Force core values which are integrity first, service before self, and excellence in all we do, which naturally resonated as they reflect the same values I learned growing up.

I served our great nation in a multitude of assignments throughout the continental United States and around the world. In 2003, after 26 years of dedicated service to the defense of our great nation I retired from the Air Force in the rank of colonel with an honorable discharge.

Upon retirement from the Air Force, I turned down a lucrative offer to join a large engineering firm because I am committed to continuing my public service and so I instead accepted the opportunity to serve as a Defense Intelligence Senior Executive Service civilian with the National Imagery and Mapping Agency, renamed the National Geospatial Intelligence Agency (NGA).

During my 20-year tenure at NGIA I have served administrations of both political parties. I have established a reputation of a strong leader with impeccable integrity and I am renowned for surmounting undifferentiated challenges.

As a result, I was twice recognized with the Presidential Rank Award for strong leadership and extraordinary accomplishments. For these reasons I was selected to be the Inspector General for the National Geospatial Intelligence Agency, a position in which I have served successfully for the last six years.

In this role I am responsible to Congress and American taxpayers. I lead an office of auditors, inspectors, investigators, attorneys, and staff whose mission is to detect and deter fraud, waste, and abuse and misconduct, and to promote the economy and efficiency in agency operations.

I routinely report to Congress and agency director with independent assessments and oversight of NGA's programs and operations and processes.

If confirmed, I will focus on four main areas to continue to add significant OIG value.

First, I pledge to bring strong leadership, energy, vision, and independence to the department's Office of Inspector General, recognizing that there has not been a confirmed Inspector General at the Department of State in more than three years.

If confirmed my highest priority will be the mission of oversight and the dedicated professionals that carry out this important oversight mission.

I will continue to build a highly professional environment that attracts and retains the most talented employees to meet and exceed current and future oversight demands.

Second, if confirmed I commit to work closely with this committee and other committees of jurisdiction as well as develop and sustain an effective and appropriate working relationship with the State Department management.

I will provide timely comprehensive information relating to programs and operations of the department and other agencies under the department's oversight mandate to ensure that the activities of these entities are as effective, efficient, and as economical as possible.

I will also continue to ensure the integrity of the U.S. foreign relations efforts by holding accountable those who corrupt or defraud taxpayer-funded programs.

Third, I will ensure that the Office of Inspector General remains an independent, objective organization that provides robust oversight, transparency, and accountability to the programs and operations of the department and the agencies under the department's oversight mandate.

And finally, if confirmed as Department Inspector General I will commit to being a strong partner for overseas contingency operation efforts including Ukraine and U.S. foreign relations programs in the Levant area and elsewhere around the globe.

I am honored to be considered for this important position, and I look forward to answering your questions. Thank you very much.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Richardson follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF CARDELL KENNETH RICHARDSON, SR.

Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, and members of this committee, thank you for the invitation to appear before you today as you consider my nomination to be Inspector General for the Department of State. I am honored to have been nominated by President Biden to serve in this key role in government oversight.

I would like to introduce my family members who are here supporting me today: my wife, Jackie; my daughter, Chandace Richardson-Arledge; my son, who is my namesake and shares the same birthday, Cardell, 2nd; my brothers, Canardo and Carlton Richardson; and my sister-in-law, Joanne Finney.

I also recognize the many family members, colleagues and friends who have helped me during this nomination process and throughout my career.

I have dedicated my entire professional life to public service. I have over four decades of serving in diverse, and complex positions of leadership and responsibility.

My parents inculcated in my siblings and me: an unshakeable foundation of faith, and a strong work ethic. They encouraged me to live an open-book life; help those in need, and always do my best. These values have shaped my life.

Upon graduating from Howard University School of Architecture and Engineering, I was commissioned as a U.S. Air Force officer, and internalized the Air Force core values, which are: Integrity First, Service Before Self, and Excellence In All We Do; which naturally resonated, as they reflect the same values I learned growing up.

I have served our great nation in multiple assignments, throughout the continental United States, and around the world. In 2003, after twenty-six years of dedicated service to the defense of our great nation, I retired from Air Force in the rank of Colonel, with an honorable discharge.

Upon retirement from the Air Force, I turned down a lucrative offer to join a large engineering firm because I was committed to continuing my public service. I instead, accepted the opportunity to serve, as a Defense Intelligence Senior Executive Service civilian, with the National Imagery and Mapping Agency, renamed the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency (NGA).

During my 20-year tenure at NGA, I served administrations of both political parties. I established a reputation of a strong leader, with impeccable integrity and I am renowned for surmounting undifferentiated challenges. As a result, I was twice recognized with the Presidential Rank Award for strong leadership and extraordinary accomplishments,

For these reasons, I was selected to be Inspector General for the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency, a position, in which I've served successfully, for the last six years.

In this role, I am responsible to Congress and American taxpayers. I lead an office of auditors, inspectors, investigators, attorneys, and staff whose mission is to detect and deter fraud, waste, abuse, and misconduct; and to promote economy and efficiency in Agency operations. I routinely report to Congress and the Agency Director with independent assessments and oversight of NGA's programs, operations and processes.

If confirmed, I will focus on four main areas to continue to add significant OIG value:

- First, I pledge to bring strong leadership, energy, vision, and independence to the Department's Office of Inspector General. Recognizing that there has not been a confirmed Inspector General at the Department of State in more than three years; if confirmed, my highest priority will be the mission of oversight, and the dedicated professionals that carryout this important oversight mission. I will continue to build a highly professional environment that attracts and retains the most talented employees to meet and exceed current and future oversight demands.
- Second, if confirmed, I commit to work closely with this committee and other committees of jurisdiction, as well as develop and sustain an effective and appropriate working relationship with State Department management. I will provide timely, comprehensive information relating to the programs and operations of the Department and the other agencies under the Department's oversight mandate: specifically, the U.S. Agency for Global Media (USAGM) and the U.S. Section of the International Boundary and Water Commission (IBWC); to ensure that the activities of these entities are as effective, efficient, and economical as possible. I will also continue to ensure the integrity of U.S. foreign relations efforts by holding accountable those who corrupt or defraud taxpayer-funded programs.
- Third, I will ensure that the Office of Inspector General remains an independent, objective organization that provides robust oversight, transparency, and accountability to the programs and operations of the Department and the agencies under the Department's oversight mandate.
- Finally, if confirmed as the State Department Inspector General, I commit to being a strong partner for Overseas Contingency Operation efforts, including Ukraine and U.S. foreign relations programs in the Levant Region and elsewhere around the globe.

I am honored to be considered for this important position, and I look forward to answering your questions. Thank you.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much.

Ms. Champagne, please proceed with your testimony.

STATEMENT OF NICOLE SHAMPAINE, OF CALIFORNIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, NOMINATED TO BE UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE TO THE ORGANIZATION FOR THE PROHIBITION OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR DURING HER TENURE OF SERVICE

Ms. SHAMPAINE. Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to come before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the next U.S. Permanent Representative to the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons.

I am grateful for the confidence the President and Secretary Blinken have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with this committee and members of Congress to advance U.S. interests at the OPCW.

Joining me here today are my husband Martin, my mother Françoise, my nephew William, my sister-in-law Leslie, and my other relatives Richard and Nancy.

My mother and my father Marshall, who is looking down on us from above, instilled in me and my brother Alain the importance of using one's life to make the world a better place.

They showed us through their example the difference each of us can make in service to others and it is this commitment to service—in my case service to our country—that inspires me daily.

I am also profoundly grateful to my husband Martin, who is my constant source of love, support, and strength. It has been a privilege to serve the American people as a Foreign Service officer and I have sought throughout my career to protect and advance the interests of the United States whether at the U.S. Mission to International Organizations in Vienna working on counterterrorism at the National Security Council or on other assignments domestic and overseas.

If confirmed I look forward to continuing my service as the U.S. representative to the OPCW. The mission of the OPCW is to end the development, production, stockpiling, transfer, and use of chemical weapons. This is essential to the security of the American people.

Back in 1995 then Senator Biden stated, quote, "The single greatest threat facing the United States today is the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. We need to use every means at our disposal to reduce the chances of a chemical attack in our country. The Chemical Weapons Convention is an irreplaceable tool to achieve that goal," end quote.

His statement was true in 1995 and remains so today. When the Chemical Weapons Convention entered into force in 1997 the main function of the OPCW was to verify the destruction of declared chemical weapons stockpiles and confirm the chemical industry was not involved in the proliferation of chemical weapons or their precursors.

When the United States concluded the destruction of all U.S. chemical weapons stockpiles this year the international community celebrated the completion of the destruction of all declared chemical weapons stockpiles worldwide.

Frustratingly, however, now in the 21st century the international norm against using chemical weapons is being challenged. The Assad regime has used chemical weapons repeatedly against the Syrian people since it acceded to the convention in 2013, and Russia use Novichok nerve agents in assassination attempts at least twice in recent years.

In this environment the work of the OPCW is more essential than ever. Thanks to the OPCW's dedicated staff the Assad regime's repeated use of chemical weapons has been independently confirmed by the international community.

Additionally, in light of Russia's past behavior the United States has serious concerns that Russia may use chemical agents in Ukraine. That is why the United States along with our allies and partners is working with Ukraine at the OPCW to ensure the OPCW is prepared to render assistance if so asked.

If confirmed I will actively seek to advance U.S. interests at the OPCW. This includes continuing to support international efforts to hold both Syria and Russia to account for their use of chemical weapons, and I would work to counter Russia's ongoing chemical weapons-related disinformation campaigns that distract from its invasion of Ukraine, seek to discredit the OPCW's impartial and objective work, and attempt to shield the Assad regime from accountability for its chemical weapons use.

If confirmed I will work to ensure the OPCW remains an effective force for addressing the ongoing threat posed by the use of chemical weapons.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

Ms. Lockard, please proceed.

STATEMENT OF JOANN M. LOCKARD, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, NOMINATED TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO BURKINA FASO

Ms. LOCKARD. Chairman Schatz, Ranking Member Hagerty, and distinguished members of the committee, it is my great honor to appear before you today as President Biden's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to Burkina Faso.

I deeply appreciate the confidence and trust the President and Secretary of State have shown in nominating me for this position. If confirmed I will work closely with you and all members of Congress to advance our nation's interests in Burkina Faso.

I am here today because of the support of my family and friends. I am joined by my mother Lois Clark, my husband Aaron, and two of my three children, Caitlin and Sam.

My father was a 23-year Air Force veteran and my mother a 36-year civil servant. They instilled in me a great love for our country and inspired me to serve the United States in global affairs.

Together with my husband Aaron and my three children, Caitlin, Alexandra, and Sam, I have dedicated the last 25 years to doing just that. Across Latin America, Africa, and Europe together we have served the American people, building bridges across oceans and cultures. I am tremendously grateful for my family's support.

One assignment left an indelible mark upon us. In 2006, as we touched down in Ouagadougou for the first time, Caitlin, then four, crawled up on her knees to peer out of the window and exclaimed "Mommy, Papi, thank you for bringing me to Africa."

Our fellow passengers erupted in applause for her enthusiasm. It set the tone for our coming adventure and launched a decade and a half of love and respect for the welcoming embrace of Burkina Faso and the Burkinabe people.

Unfortunately, as you have noted, subsequent years have brought Burkina Faso daunting and unrelenting challenges, and I would like to take this opportunity today to express my deepest condolences to the Burkinabe people for the losses they have suffered at the hands of terrorists in recent years.

At the heart of U.S. foreign policy in West Africa, Burkina Faso now faces an unprecedented security, political, and humanitarian crisis. The country finds itself at the epicenter of violence in an increasingly fragile region.

Leaders of the January 2022 coup d'état and subsequent September military takeover cited this insecurity as their motivation. Yet, the situation continues to deteriorate.

Continued U.S. engagement is more vital than ever to help Burkina Faso confront the spread of terrorism and respond to the needs of its citizens both while respecting human rights and protecting civilians.

Our ability to provide military assistance to Burkina Faso is restricted by Section 7008. Given the urgent security situation, if confirmed it will be my highest priority to support Burkina Faso's return to a democratically-elected civilian-led government as soon as possible.

Such progress will allow us to increase cooperation and assist Burkina Faso in its struggle against violent extremism while simultaneously reinforcing the voice of the Burkinabe people in their own governance and promoting peace, stability, and security while countering threats to U.S. citizens and interests.

The conflict in Burkina Faso has displaced more than 2 million people and resulted in limited food access for more than 15 percent of the population.

In addition to facing a grave security crisis Burkina Faso confronts high population growth, limited natural resources, and a vulnerability to climate change, all of which contribute to bleak economic prospects in one of the poorest countries of the world.

If confirmed I will work with colleagues across the United States Government to increase health security for the Burkinabe people, promote economic and social development, and strengthen Burkina Faso's resilience to climate shocks.

Reports of human rights violations, increases in political intimidation tactics, undue restrictions on freedom of expression, and a clamp down on journalists and civil society are deeply concerning.

I am encouraged, however, by recent efforts towards change such as trials for accused terrorists and positive steps forward to prevent trafficking in persons. If confirmed I will encourage Burkina Faso, known as the land of the upright people, to uphold the rule of law and to continue to build on these initial steps.

Finally, I take very seriously my commitment to protect U.S. citizens overseas including our mission personnel.

This includes ensuring that our Embassy in Ouagadougou is properly staffed to undertake these challenging tasks, and if confirmed I will do everything in my power to protect Americans and American interests in Burkina Faso and ensure the security of our mission.

At this crucial time in history when Burkina Faso is severing historic ties and seeking new partnerships it is more critical than ever that the United States remain engaged.

I believe that the Burkinabe people are looking for a partner who can instill hope and stand by their side to tackle the difficult challenges ahead and I believe that the United States can and should be that partner.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to your questions.

Mr. Chairman, ranking member, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to your questions.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you all for your testimony.

We will now continue with a few questions that speak to the importance of the committee and our prioritization of responsiveness by all officials in the executive branch and we expect and will be seeking from you. Just please answer yes or no.

If you are confirmed do you agree to appear before this committee and make officials from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

[All witnesses answered in the affirmative.]

Senator SCHATZ. Do you commit to keeping this committee fully and currently informed about activities under your purview?

[All witnesses answered in the affirmative.]

Senator SCHATZ. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed and not just providing notification after the fact?

[All witnesses answered in the affirmative.]

Senator SCHATZ. Do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

[All witnesses answered in the affirmative.]

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

Mr. Richardson, as you know DOD has appointed a lead IG for the oversight of Ukraine. Maintaining strong oversight of U.S. aid to Ukraine is critical.

Just walk me through how the State Department IG and the DOD IG collaborate in an instance where they have sort of joint oversight jurisdiction.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes. So, Senator, thank you for your question. First of all, because of the assistance that we have given to—we are providing Ukraine, obviously, it requires a tremendous amount of oversight.

As you mentioned, the DOD IG has been designated as the lead IG for Operation Atlantic Resolve, which includes Ukraine assistance, and in that process three entities

—the Department of Defense, Department of State, and USAID—have collaborated, gotten together and put together a joint strategic oversight plan which I have been made familiar with and in that process they have articulated some very distinct programmatic projects that range from audits through inspections and evaluations to provide proactive oversight.

Also, as I understand it they also have individuals in country that are right there in Kyiv that can also provide oversight, and as I understand there is a pending trip beginning of the year that if confirmed I certainly will be a part of.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much.

Ms. Shampaine, you mentioned Russian disinformation about chemical weapons. Very briefly, what do you mean by that?

Ms. SHAMPAINÉ. Thank you for that question.

There are two areas that come to mind most immediately. First of all, Russia, together with Syria, has been engaged in a years-long campaign to try to persuade the international community that the Assad regime is not responsible for chemical weapons used in Syria.

Of course, that is completely false and the OPCW's technical staff has put together reports making very clear the Assad regime is indeed responsible for those attacks. So that is one area the Russians have been extremely active in trying to deceive the international community.

Another area regards Ukraine and that is where since the beginning of Russia's invasion of Ukraine Russia has been alleging that the United States, NATO, and Ukraine have been using chemical weapons.

Again, completely false. So those are the types of disinformation campaigns that if confirmed I would fight against at the OPCW.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you very much.

Ms. Lockard, how would you characterize the relationship between Wagner and the Burkina Faso Government, such as it is?

Ms. LOCKARD. Thank you very much, Senator, for that question.

The situation right now in Burkina Faso relating between the transition authorities and the Russian Government and other organizations is concerning, and if confirmed I will work throughout my tenure as Ambassador to demonstrate to the transitional government and the BurkinabeRople most importantly that the United States is the partner that shares their values.

We care that the country is returning to a democratic trajectory and respecting human rights. We want to restore stability and security and build economic prosperity for the Burkinabe people. Russia does not.

Senator SCHATZ. But what is Wagner doing now?

Ms. LOCKARD. Senator, thank you very much.

Unfortunately, I do not have access to that information currently but I commit to you that if confirmed I will work with you to ensure that the committee is fully informed.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you.

Senator Hagerty?

Senator HAGERTY. I think the Chairman and I are both interested in what the military government there is doing with Wagner. I think we would both appreciate an update on that when you have the opportunity.

Mr. Richardson, I would like to come back to you if I could. As I noted in my opening statement, one issue that is of particular concern to me is whether the State Department complied with all appropriate laws and regulations with respect to the suspension of Special Envoy Rob Malley's security clearance.

I would appreciate your taking the time to meet—I appreciate you took the time to meet in my office yesterday and your unequivocal assurance that you will follow the facts wherever they may lead you.

My question for you is will you commit to this committee that if confirmed you will ensure that the Office of the Inspector General's ongoing investigation into the State Department's actions related to Malley's security clearance proceeds independently, expeditiously, and with appropriate transparency?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can give you unequivocal assurance it will.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you. Will you further commit that if confirmed you will keep this committee informed on your office's interim and final findings including in a classified setting if that is necessary?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I absolutely will. I think keeping Congress informed is critical to exactly why I am being considered for this position.

Senator HAGERTY. And I appreciate your commitment to the Chairman earlier in that regard.

I would like to turn now to the situation in Ukraine. Since February of last year the United States has committed over $113 billion in supplemental appropriations to help Ukraine defend itself against Putin's war on Ukraine.

You think about this funding level, it is getting close to the $146 billion that we spent in Afghanistan over the course of 20 years.

In Afghanistan rampant corruption and weak governance actually undermined our war effort. The Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction identified $19 billion in fraud, about a third of the $63 billion that he reviewed.

John Sopko, the head of the Afghan Reconstruction Special IG unit said, and I quote him, "When you spend so much money so quickly with so little oversight you are going to have massive fraud, waste, and abuse."

I would note that our Ukraine funding is flowing much more rapidly than it did in Afghanistan. So my question to you is do you believe the existing inspector general system is well positioned to handle the Ukraine challenge?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it is, sir, and I will tell you why. Because most of the resources that are going to Ukraine are either under control of one of the three entities that we talked about—that is Defense, State, and USAID.

Also, I think the way you get to any corruption is to find fraud indicators and you do that through these programmatic reviews, audits, inspections, evaluations and the like, and, first, you want to make sure they are doing the things that they should be doing and they have internal controls and if they do not then you go where the trail leads you.

My point really is I think having these three inspectors general—inspectors general for these three organizations already have apparatus in place that make them uniquely prepared to uncover any fraud, waste, or abuse or gross mismanagement wherever it exists.

Senator HAGERTY. I appreciate the collaboration that you discussed with the Chairman as well and I hope that will manifest itself.

I want to say this, though, Mr. Richardson. I am, and I think I am like many Americans—I am concerned that corruption in aid diversion remain a real threat in Ukraine.

In 2023 Ukraine was ranked 118 out of 130 on the Transparency International's corruption index. President Zelensky has purged several top officials for corruption. And though the Biden administration has publicly claimed that there have been no evidence of misuse of taxpayer dollars, Politico reported just last month that Biden administration officials are privately far more worried about corruption in Ukraine than they publicly admit and they have identified numerous long-term anti-corruption goals.

According to the confidential strategy document that was obtained by Politico, and I quote, "Perceptions of high-level corruption could undermine Ukraine public's and foreign leaders' confidence in the wartime government." That ended the quote. I could not agree more.

Mr. Richardson, if you are confirmed what additional specific steps could you take to address the American taxpayers' concerns about fraud in this arena?

Mr. RICHARDSON. So I absolutely agree. To answer your question, the additional steps we take is to, one, make sure I am working with the stakeholders that are in country.

I am talking about entities like the National Anti-Corruption Bureau that are in Ukraine as well as the Special Anti-Corruption Prosecutor's office of which I know there has already been some discussion and working with.

There is a High Anti-Corruption Court also. So it is reasonable to assume that with this level of resources that there are a likelihood—some likelihood that there might be some corruption.

We ought to look for it and so I can commit to you that will be a top priority to do just that.

Senator HAGERTY. Well, I appreciate that.

As we look at where Russia's unprovoked war on Ukraine is leading us toward a stalemate I think it is absolutely imperative that the Biden administration provide us with a clear and persuasive theory of victory in the conflict and I think the American people are very clear in the fact that they do not support some type of open-ended commitment.

So as we consider additional supplemental assistance here for Ukraine we really expect and appreciate robust oversight of the funds.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Senator Hagerty.

Senator Booker?

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I just want to pause for a moment if I can. You have two—a great ranking member who is just an extraordinary Senator and a Chairman who are pretty extraordinary.

You got three Senators here. Two out of three is not bad. It depends on the quality. And it seems like this room has a smattering if at all of staff and Senators. But you should think of that as no diminution of the gravity of this moment.

This is not just a rote routine Senate hearing. This is an extraordinary part of our democracy, and the administration puts up incredible candidates and the Senate has obligations defined by our Constitution to advise and consent and ultimately approve them.

I am just sitting here and getting more and more moved because I am thinking about my mom and dad, who met here and married here, and I was born in this city, the only one of the hundred Senators born in Washington, D.C.

And my mom is relentless—I am going to get a chance to see her this week—because she will always try to remind me so that I never lose the gravity of moments like this about what was going on around the time that I was born.

A woman could not get credit. They had to get their husband to sign on with it. My parents, a black family, would tell me time and time again how many companies in Washington, DC., would not hire black people.

And so from the time I was born I am now sitting here looking at a panel that just some 50 years ago this country could not have imagined that you would have two women up for extraordinarily important positions to lead and represent our nation and a black man who has had such a career of distinction.

The three of you are different. You are just different. Not your race and gender. You are different because of the commitment of your lives.

Sir, when you said you gave up a lucrative position in the private sector to stay in service I got chills. What is on this panel right now is just an extraordinary American story, a story of who we are as a nation which has overcome so much to get to this point in American history and it is extraordinary because the three of you have spent your entire careers as humble servants of this nation, not for the money, not for the attention and the fame that we get as Senators where our names are in the press all the time. Sometimes I wish not as much.

So I just want to pause and just let you all know that I am grateful for you. You are a towering testimony to what makes this nation special, and while many of us Americans luxuriate in the blessings of liberty in this nation there are people on the front lines doing the hard, important, unglamorous work of advancing the call and the cause of our country.

And so for the families that are assembled here this is not normal. This is not a routine thing in the United States Senate. This is a great American moment and these are three great Americans. So, I just say thank you.

I have a lot of concern about the Sahel. I am anguished to see what is happening there now. I have had a chance to visit Burkina Faso and see the greatness of the people.

The way you spoke in your testimony showed me that you respect these extraordinarily kind every day folks that right now are suffering this military junta and struggling at the same time with terrorism.

But I will never forget when our military—I was sitting in our Embassy in Ouagadougou and you had our military training these young Burkinabe men to protect and defend their own nation and just to see the connection between our two countries who shared values and even more so they shared this aspiration that seemed to be fueled by American energy that they could be a nation that was free and democratic and secure.

And so we are going to deal with each other because I am the—by somebody's decision I am the Chairman of the Africa Subcommittee and I just look forward to working with you and the administration, who I talk to quite often about these issues, to find a way to stop this growing insecurity in the Sahel, specifically, that is creating so much political instability, such a rise in terrorism, so many political coups, all undergirded by painful levels of food insecurity and suffering when it comes to just basic humanitarian issues.

So thank you. I plan on voting for you on the floor. I know there are some follow-up questions about the influence of Russia and China, if you can add into that. But I will leave this committee today a very inspired American. So thank you all for your service.

Senator SCHATZ. If there are no more questions for the witnesses the record will remain open until the close of business tomorrow, Friday, November 17th, for questions for the record.

I urge our nominees to try to complete those as rapidly as possible so that we can clear you for committee action and move you to the floor. Each of you have critical positions that we need to confirm you for.

If there is no further business, I thank the ranking member, I thank Senator Booker and everyone else, and all of your families and all of the nominees.

This committee stands adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:53 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JEFFREY PRESCOTT BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Mr. Prescott, the world faces a global hunger crisis of unprecedented proportions. In just two years, the number of people facing, or at risk of, acute food insecurity doubled from 135 million in 53 countries to 345 million in 79 countries this year. Fueled by conflict, climate shocks and COVID-19, the crisis is escalating as the war in Ukraine drives up the costs of food and fuel. Given all of this, it is critical that we are using all of our diplomatic tools, including a confirmed Ambassador, to address this crisis.

Question. If confirmed, what steps would you take to address the growing global scale of the current food security crisis?

Answer. I agree that we face an unprecedented global food security crisis, compounded by the factors you indicated, including the pandemic, drought and other climate shocks, and conflict. Russia's brutal, unprovoked invasion of Ukraine has further worsened an already profound challenge and additional conflicts across the world are further straining the global humanitarian system. While international organizations are critical to galvanizing international action to addressing global food insecurity, it is also clear that the scale of the crisis is outpacing assistance. There has never been a more important time for sustained U.S. leadership to help address global food insecurity, further agriculture trade, and meet acute lifesaving humanitarian need.

If confirmed, I would use every tool available to confront these crises, working with the Department, the interagency, and members and staff of the committee to keep food security at the forefront of the international agenda. While America has stepped up—and there is an urgent need to sustain and expand our leadership—our efforts alone are not sufficient to match the scale of the need. The United States cannot solve these problems alone and, if confirmed, I will seek to expand opportunities for both traditional and non-traditional donors to share the burden, leverage the private sector in responding to emergencies and building resilience, and to establish new, innovative sources of support.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JEFFREY PRESCOTT BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Long-established humanitarian principles suggest that food aid should be “agnostic,” meaning that it should be targeted toward those with the greatest need regardless of their affiliation. Unfortunately, there is also a long history of food aid being used by malign actors as a weapon against those it is meant to help.

Question. If confirmed, are you prepared to halt aid deliveries to areas where it is being manipulated by malign actors?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be to ensure that we use taxpayer dollars as effectively and efficiently as possible in international institutions. Waste, fraud, and abuse of U.S. food assistance—including manipulation by malign actors—is unacceptable. I will be your partner in fighting to maintain integrity, promote U.S. values, and uphold good governance in these institutions and in our food aid programs. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with USAID, the Department of State, and the Department of Agriculture, our international organization partners, and relevant oversight bodies on ways to prevent, detect, respond to, and end abuses of food aid by governments or any other actors. If confirmed, I would support the Administration’s commitment to take every possible measure—up to and including, where appropriate, the suspension of assistance—to ensure that U.S. humanitarian assistance is used for its intended purpose, reaches the most vulnerable, and ultimately saves lives.

The World Food Program takes a blended approach in its food aid programs: it provides commodities in areas where food is scarce and market-based assistance (electronic transfers, vouchers, etc.) where food is available but inaccessible. When providing commodities, the agency often has to provide “blanket” feeding. When providing market-based assistance, there is room to target assistance more deliberately. There are benefits and risks associated with each of these approaches. If confirmed, it will be your job to find ways to maximize the benefits and minimize the risks associated with each of these approaches, so that the WFP can reach the right people with the right support in the right place at the right time.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to advocating for the use of biometrics within the World Food Program and across other U.N. agencies, particularly when providing market-based assistance, in order to more effectively target assistance, verify beneficiaries, and eliminate duplication and waste?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I would advocate for improved oversight measures for food aid programs including use of biometrics and other technologies, where appropriate. Biometrics and other advanced technologies help mitigate risk in the provision of assistance and help maximize the impact of programs by ensuring that assistance is reaching those for whom it is intended.

Question. Beyond biometrics, are there other ways in which you would seek to enhance the WFP’s efficiency and effectiveness, so we can stretch U.S. food aid dollars farther and save more lives?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my top priorities would be to ensure that U.S. taxpayer dollars are used as effectively and efficiently as possible by the international organizations we support, and I would work with the Department of State, USAID, and the members and staff of this Committee, to advocate for policy and programmatic changes that would further improve these programs, including at the World Food Program (WFP). WFP provides assistance in many complex operating environments, so solutions can often vary by context. If confirmed, I would advocate for WFP to employ real-time feedback systems that allow it to adapt to changing contexts, as well as promote a culture of reform, improvement, and accountability. I would use my position to support WFP in its ongoing internal reform process, working with them to meet the objectives outlined in their Reassurance Action Plan. In advocating for these reforms, I would seek to collaborate with the members and staff of this committee.

Even as the U.S. has stepped up to support humanitarian programs—a testament to the work of members and staff of this Committee—our efforts alone are not sufficient to match the scale of current or anticipated global needs. Certain reforms—such as using joint procurements and cooperative administrative arrangements with other U.N. agencies to create economies of scale—can help stretch resources further to meet these growing needs. However, reforming WFP and other U.N. institutions, alone, will not overcome the large and growing gap between need and contributions. Food security is national security, and U.S. leadership on global food security, agriculture, and humanitarian issues will be critical to leverage support from international donors, host country governments and other partners, and to establishing new, innovative sources of support.

Question. The United States works both bilaterally and through multilateral institutions—including the United Nations food and agriculture agencies in Rome—to ameliorate humanitarian conditions, promote food security, and catalyze agriculture-led economic growth in developing countries. In your view, what is the appropriate balance between U.S. bilateral and multilateral assistance for food aid and food security?

Answer. There are important roles for both bilateral and multilateral food security assistance, and striking the appropriate balance is often context specific. The United States and its partners assess market conditions, feasibility, programmatic purpose, and cost effectiveness when determining which modalities and partners are most appropriate for delivering food assistance in any given context. If confirmed, I would work closely with the Interagency to critically evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of food aid interventions and to ensure that they are cost efficient as well as effective. In addition, I would like to continue to integrate and improve the use of objective criteria in the provision of all international aid, so that we can further support interventions that demonstrate success on the ground.

Initiatives like Feed the Future, which support food and nutrition security through bilateral assistance, are important tools for driving hunger, malnutrition, and poverty alleviation. The United States also supports transformative school meals programs in food-deficit countries through the USDA McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition program, of which WFP is one of the largest implementers. For many schoolchildren in these food-insecure contexts, a school meal may be the only meal they receive in a day. However, the demand for food security programming far outstrips what the U.S. alone is able to support. Through multilateral institutions, the U.S. is able to maximize funding and better leverage U.S. taxpayer dollars.

Question. Are there instances when U.S. bilateral assistance might be more appropriate than assistance delivered through the U.N. agencies for food and agriculture?

Answer. The fact that the United States leverages both bilateral and multilateral approaches is part of what makes our nation the preeminent leader in addressing global food security. This is a testament to the leadership of the members and staff of this Committee, and if confirmed would seek to partner closely with you and your staff in sustaining and expanding this leadership.

Our bilateral and multilateral activities are designed to complement each other. The choice of approach takes into account important context-specific factors, including organizational comparative advantages, presence on the ground, political dynamics, and operational security.

Bilateral assistance can provide an advantage for food security programming due to the unique, context-specific needs of communities. However, the U.S. cannot solve hunger alone and engagement through U.N. agencies and other multilateral institutions provides a multiplier effect on U.S. taxpayer dollars.

Question. What role could or should the private sector play in promoting food security and catalyzing agriculture-led economic growth?

Answer. The private sector already plays a critical role in producing, processing, storing, transporting, and marketing food around the world, and the U.S. is actively engaging with companies to catalyze their support for global food security and resilience efforts. For example, to meet the food needs of a world with growing challenges, there is an important role for the private sector to help integrate small-scale farmers into broader supply chains, reduce food loss and waste across supply chains, develop resilient crop varieties, and scale up the use of irrigation and water conservation technologies and practices. Moreover, the private sector brings science-and technology-based solutions to improve supply chains, which can benefit our partner countries and programs.

If confirmed, I would also seek to strengthen partnerships with American farmers in our work on agriculture and hunger around the world, so that farmers can share the very practices that made American agriculture the international gold standard directly with the farmers we support abroad.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to advancing science-based approaches to promoting food insecurity at the Food and Agriculture Organization, including through the use of innovative agricultural technologies?

Answer. Yes. In the past year, we have seen signs of the FAO shifting towards embracing innovative agricultural technologies, including biotechnology. Our approach to further building resilient food systems at the scale needed to feed a growing population and create jobs across the entire food system means that we must put all tools on the table, including sustainable farming practices, agricultural inputs, investments in agriculture-related infrastructure, and seed production. If confirmed, I will continue to push the FAO at the highest levels to embrace science-based approaches.

Question. If confirmed, please describe how you will work with colleagues at USUN New York, the Bureau of International Organizations (IO), and other stakeholders on recruiting and retaining qualified Americans for placement and promotion with the U.N. system?

Answer. Increasing U.S. citizen employment in United Nations (U.N.) agencies is an important tool for advancing American interests and values. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with the Bureau of International Organization Affairs (IO), which coordinates advocacy on behalf of U.S. citizen applicants, and with other IO Missions, which have longstanding relationships with U.N. leadership. I will also engage regularly with the executive heads of the Rome-Based Agencies (RBA) about upcoming vacancies. I will meet with U.S. citizens working in the RBAs to show my appreciation for their service and learn from their experiences navigating the RBA recruitment systems. Finally, I will make time to encourage and advise U.S. citizens pursuing U.N. careers, including through the U.S.-sponsored Junior Professional Officer (JPO) program and those targeting jobs in the RBAs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO JEFFREY PRESCOTT BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People’s Republic of China is the “only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it.” The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People’s Republic of China (PRC) and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the CCP a threat to the United States?

Answer. I agree with the Director of National Intelligence’s testimony that the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) “represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under Xi Jinping, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. The United States has an imperative to advance our interests and values in the face of the unrelenting efforts of our competitors. After all, great power competition does not end at the U.N.’s front door, certainly not from the perspective of our adversaries. If confirmed, I would vigorously engage in this intense competition, work to advance U.S. national security interests, and push back against PRC efforts to expand its influence, including through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and sustained advocacy for American interests and priorities in the U.N. agencies under my purview in this position.

Question. Does the CCP undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. I agree with the widely held bipartisan view that the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. I concur with the Office of the Director of National Intelligence’s 2023 Annual Threat Assessment that the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.” Informed by this assessment and my clear-eyed view of the threats posed by the People’s Republic of China, if confirmed, I would engage in intense diplomacy to advance U.S. national security interests and shared values in the international institutions under my purview in this position.

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the CCP that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment’s notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. This is a complex and consequential moment, as we vigorously engage in a geopolitical competition to shape the future of the international order and grapple with intractable global challenges that cross borders. Food security sits at the intersection of these two great strategic challenges, and there has never been a more important time for U.S. leadership on global food security, agricultural trade, and humanitarian issues. We have an imperative to advance American interests and values in the face of unrelenting efforts of our competitors, including in international organizations. As we use every tool available to confront the drivers of global food insecurity, the United States must fight to maintain integrity, promote U.S. interests and values, and uphold good governance in U.N. institutions. If confirmed, I would work with the Department of State’s leadership, interagency counterparts, and members and staff of the Committee to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors at the U.N. Agencies under my purview in this position.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the PRC in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine our interests and values. The Administration has been clear that the People’s Republic of China (PRC) is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners around the globe. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and members and staff of this committee to address China’s efforts to expand its influence at the U.N. and would be your partner in fighting to maintain integrity, promote U.S. values, and uphold good governance in international institutions.

Question. As you may be aware, a group of federal employees penned an open letter to President Biden criticizing U.S. support for Israel in the aftermath of Hamas’ brutal terrorist attack on October 7, 2023. Efforts like these directly undermine the duty of our diplomats to advance the policies of the President of the United States. Yes or no, did you sign the open letter to the President expressing opposition to the President’s Israel policy?

Answer. No.

Question. Have you ever expressed support for an Israeli ceasefire in Gaza?

Answer. No, I have not. As Secretary Blinken has noted, there was a ceasefire on October 6—and Hamas violated it. The Administration does not support calls for Israel to stop defending itself from Hamas’ continuing terrorism and indiscriminate rocket attacks, which would be a result of any premature, permanent ceasefire. I believe that Israel has the right, and indeed the duty, to defend its people against the heinous attacks by Hamas on October 7. I also support efforts to secure the safe return of Americans and other held hostage by Hamas. Toward that end, the United States is working intensively with other parties to facilitate release of hostages and related humanitarian pauses. The United States continues to work with Israel, Egypt, the U.N., and other partners to facilitate a sustained flow of humanitarian assistance into Gaza.

Question. Do you agree that Hamas is an antisemitic entity and that a ceasefire would allow these groups to reconstitute and attack Israel, and Americans, in the future?

Answer. Yes, Hamas is a terrorist group that seeks to eliminate the State of Israel and whose founding charter calls for the killing of Jewish people. A ceasefire right now would give Hamas time to regroup, allow it to retain the capacity to conduct future attacks, and would fail to prevent Hamas from continuing terror attacks and firing indiscriminate rockets at Israel.

Question. Do you agree that calling for a ceasefire in Gaza means calling for Israel to stop its pursuit of Hamas, a designated foreign terrorist organization, that orchestrated the October 7 attacks and still refuses to release Israeli and American hostages?

Answer. Yes, I agree that a ceasefire would be premature at this time. The Administration, in coordination with Israel, supports humanitarian pauses to enable a sustained flow of aid and to allow the voluntary movement of civilians who are seeking to move to safer locations. Additionally, I support efforts to secure the safe return of Americans and others held hostage by Hamas, including through intensive diplomacy to facilitate release of hostages and related humanitarian pauses.

Question. Do you believe that Israel, in its operation against Hamas, which is known to use civilians as human shields, is taking all necessary steps to minimize civilian casualties?

Answer. Israel has the right and, indeed the obligation, to protect itself from terrorism, consistent with international law. It is clear that Hamas is not concerned with protecting civilians and has been deliberately and callously putting civilians in harm's way, a blatant violation of international law. The United States has also emphasized in constructive conversations with Israel that as it carries out military operations, it is vital that steps be taken to protect civilians from harm, to differentiate between civilians and Hamas terrorists, and do everything possible to avoid civilian casualties. Efforts to mitigate and respond to civilian harm are both a moral and a strategic imperative.

Question. If confirmed, would you define one of your employees or contractors signing an open letter criticizing you, or policies you undertake at the instruction of the President, as insubordination as defined by the Government Accountability Office?

Answer. The President has made clear that the Administration's policy is to value and respect the expertise of the nonpartisan, career employees of the Department of State, and to empower U.S. diplomats to do their jobs without being targeted or subjected to retaliation in violation of applicable policies and laws that allow for employees to express dissent as well as report wrongdoing or a violation of the law. Secretary Blinken has made clear that he welcomes active use of the Department of State's dissent channel, takes it seriously, and uses it to reflect on his own thinking in terms of policy making and what he proposes to the President. If confirmed, I would uphold the Administration's approach, and reflect considered views of employees in the Mission in making recommendations to the Department for policy making.

Question. If confirmed, how will you address discipline issues, such as insubordination, that do not take established dissent channels?

Answer. The Department maintains established procedures, including in the Foreign Affairs Manual, for addressing incidents or allegations that may serve as grounds for disciplinary action. If confirmed, I will scrupulously follow established procedures for handling such issues, consistent with the rights and responsibilities of Department employees.

Question. In your view, are the actions these federal employees took, by anonymously signing a letter to the President of the United States, covered as "whistleblowing?"

Answer. Whistleblowers perform an important service for the public and the Department when they report evidence of wrongdoing. All Department of State employees, contractors, subcontractors, grantees, subgrantees, and personal services contractors are protected from retaliation for making a protected disclosure. If confirmed, I would uphold relevant laws and policies pertaining to the protection of whistleblowers, including the provisions of 5 U.S.C. §2302(b)(8).

Question. The U.S. is the top financial contributor to several U.N. food security programs. In FY 22, the U.S. contributed approximately $5.7 billion to the U.N. for this global effort in more than 130 countries to address instability and humanitarian crises. Given the scope and anticipated increased need, there is concern that there is multiplicity of programs that do not coordinate at the U.N. In your view, would the U.S. be better served to provide bilateral aid to closer align with U.S. policy and ability to conduct direct oversight?

Answer. The world is facing an unprecedented global food security crisis, with approximately 735 million people around the world suffering from hunger. It is a complex crisis that no individual country or even group of countries can solve alone. We must use every tool available and continue to bring food security to the forefront of the agenda of the United Nations.

If confirmed, I will strive to ensure that food security programming conducted by the Rome-based food agencies, including the World Food Program, U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, and International Fund for Agricultural Development are coordinated among themselves and with broader U.N. efforts, and are fully transparent and accountable. I will fight to maintain integrity, promote U.S. values, and uphold good governance at the Rome-based food agencies, which continue to deliver on critical emergency, development, and normative efforts to reduce global food insecurity. If confirmed, I would commit my unrelenting efforts to advance U.S. interests and values in the face of the unrelenting efforts of our competitors in the U.N. system.

Question. If confirmed, how will you effectively track U.S. funding to the U.N. that matches U.S. policy objectives?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my top priorities will be to ensure the effective and efficient use of American taxpayer dollars in a manner consistent with the strategic objectives and policy priorities of the United States. Transparency, accountability, and tracking are a critical part of ensuring efficient use of funds.

If confirmed, I will ensure that development and humanitarian policies, strategies, and programs involving the Rome-based U.N. agencies (RBAs) are developed in close partnership across the U.S. Government, including with U.S. missions abroad, and other partners, and that programs align with the objectives in the National Security Strategy and the Joint Department of State-USAID Strategic Plan.

And, if confirmed, as part of the Administration's focus on strategic competition, I will monitor RBA activities internally through their governing bodies—including reviewing internal and external audits—and externally through field visits and our U.S. interagency network on the ground.

Question. If confirmed, how will you ensure effective vetting procedures and monitoring mechanisms actually occur at the U.N. for your area of responsibility?

Answer. If confirmed, my first priority will be to ensure the effective and efficient use of U.S. taxpayer dollars. I will be your partner in fighting to maintain integrity, promote U.S. values, and uphold good governance and oversight. I will monitor the organizations' activities internally through their governing bodies and externally through field visits and our interagency network working on the ground.

I will also work with likeminded countries, to the greatest extent possible, to keep member states that flout an organization's founding principles from being elected to governing bodies and leadership positions. I would use the United States' leadership role in governing bodies to actively monitor human resources policies and actions to ensure applicants are screened for prior misconduct and that executive heads take appropriate disciplinary action when staff engage in misconduct and criminal acts. Finally, I would advocate for highly qualified U.S. citizens to serve at all levels in the organizations.

Convention on Combatting Bribery

One of the OECD's most powerful tools is its Convention on Combatting Bribery, which sets a global gold standard for preventing corruption. While its impact is greatest in OECD member countries, the standards set forth in the Convention are recognized around the world. In fact, Senator Risch and I—as part of legislation that we are developing to strengthen U.S. competition with the PRC—have developed a provision that will require the State Department and Treasury Department to provide technical assistance to non-OECD member states to help them develop and adopt legal standards that match those in the Convention.

Question. Representative Maloney, can you talk to us about the Convention on Combatting Bribery, why it is so important, and what steps you will take, if confirmed, to strengthen its impact around the world?

Answer. The Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions (Anti-Bribery Convention) entered into force in 1999 and levels the global playing field for U.S. businesses by discouraging foreign business competitors from leveraging certain anti-competitive and unfair business practices such as bribery.

The Convention is one of the few international instruments focused on the “supply side” of bribery—the person or entity offering or giving a bribe—and is a vital tool for pressing OECD member states to enforce laws that criminalize bribery of foreign public officials in international business transactions. If confirmed, I will continue U.S. leadership within the Working Group on Bribery (WGB), which is fundamental to ensure effective monitoring and enforcement of the Convention. If confirmed, I also will continue U.S. support for the WGB so it can continue to achieve its mandate: implementation of the Convention in all 45 member countries to ensure partners adopt and enforce legislation and regulations to combat foreign bribery, as well as cooperate with U.S. and other law enforcement entities in the investigation and prosecution of foreign bribery cases.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. SEAN PATRICK MALONEY BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Americans at the OECD

Question. Please provide your views on how the United States can encourage more Americans to explore employment opportunities at the OECD. Will you commit to observing and analyzing the practices of other OECD members in supporting the employment of their own citizens at the OECD?

Answer. The Department of State collects information annually on the number of Americans employed at international organizations, including the OECD. If confirmed, I will commit to continue the practice of advocating strongly for American candidates applying for positions at the OECD and look at the practices of other members for additional opportunities to grow the number of American employees. If confirmed, one of my top priorities will be to engage with state and local government officials to share the OECD’s research, data, and best practices to better inform policies ranging from education to homelessness. Public discussion and application of OECD products is likely to raise the profile of the organization and draw the attention of young professionals and senior officials looking for opportunities in international organizations.

Question. Will you commit to investigate any challenges or barriers you might find that may be dis-incentivizing U.S. citizens who might seek employment with the organization?

Answer. Yes. I will seek out and work to mitigate any formal or informal barriers to U.S. citizen employment with the OECD. As you know, Americans working at international organizations remain subject to taxation at home, unlike their peers from other countries.

Question. Will you commit to report back to the committee with your findings and recommendations?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to keeping the committee informed.

Supporting Debt Transparency and Fiscal Responsibility

Enhancing public debt transparency should be a priority. China continues to engage in irresponsible lending practices that hide the true extent of its public sector lending. The OECD Debt Transparency Initiative (DTI), launched in 2019, includes a voluntary set of principles designed to enhance transparency in private sector lending to the public sector, particularly to vulnerable low-income countries. The DTI obligates lenders to disclose information about their loans to governments, including the amount of the loan, the interest rate, the repayment schedule, and the purpose of the loan. In addition, lenders disclose information about any guarantees or collateral they have received in connection with the loan.

Question. Please provide your thoughts on how the United States can advocate at the OECD for better debt transparency, particularly with lenders who are neither OECD and nor Paris Club members.

Answer. The United States, through leadership roles in a range of OECD working groups and committees, including the Working Group on Bribery and the Public Governance Committee, is well positioned to advocate for improved debt transparency at the OECD. Debt transparency is fundamental for public accountability and economic growth, and, if confirmed, I look forward to robust engagement with the OECD to bolster ongoing efforts to advocate for improved debt transparency, specifically for loans from non-OECD and non-Paris Club member countries.

Through amplifying the OECD's Public Debt Transparency Initiative and other related efforts from the OECD Financial Markets Division to improve the scope, quality, and consistency of debt statistics and loan terms, U.S. leadership will ensure the OECD is a resource and advocate for transparent lending. The lack of transparency in debt practices, specifically non-disclosure clauses, complicates international efforts to promote sound debt management and prevent debt crises. If confirmed, as Ambassador I will press the OECD to encourage borrowers to adopt best practices for debt management, including public disclosure of debt and only contracting loans which do not include non-disclosure clauses.

Export and Other Subsidies

Government subsidies can distort markets, leading to inefficient allocation of resources and the creation of unfair trade advantages. Historically, the United States has led the world in establishing disciplines on government subsidies to keep international trade free and fair. Some are now advocating for reopening such disciplines to promote favored policy outcomes, for example, creating exceptions for "green subsidies" in the pursuit of carbon mitigation and reduction.

Question. What are your thoughts on reopening established rules on subsidies?

Answer. The United States is firmly committed to the rules-based international trading system. We seek fair competition, transparency, respect for the rule of law, and trade that promotes these shared values and helps meet the challenges of our time, including strained supply chains, equity for workers, and the climate crisis. Any change to the established rules on subsidies would need to align with these shared values.

Question. Do you see any potential dangers with this approach?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) to ensure U.S. interests are protected. I would refer you to USTR for more details on the reform initiatives the U.S. is actively involved in.

Question. Do we risk an escalation over which we will quickly lose control?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) to ensure that U.S. interests are protected.

Countering China

China appears to be growing increasingly hostile to the idea of the OECD and its work. Many OECD members see the organization as a vital network of friendly partners, protecting them from Chinese retaliation.

Question. How can the U.S. and its allies leverage the OECD and its best practices and principles to counter authoritarian, state capitalism messages and advocacy coming from China?

Answer. I am deeply concerned by the People's Republic of China (PRC) actions in international organizations that aim to reshape the international order to align with its authoritarian system. If confirmed, I will seek to ensure that any OECD engagement with the PRC supports member nation interests and upholds the norms, high standards, and practices that underpin the rules-based global economic order. Additionally, I will work to leverage the OECD's role in developing best practices for global trade, digital economy policy, anti-corruption, infrastructure, and other policy areas to counter alternative models pushed by authoritarian states that undermine global values, rules, and norms.

The Chinese continue to facilitate steel and aluminum overproduction. Many see worrying trends that China is 1) exporting its subsidized steel and aluminum investment to lower quality (and higher carbon content) production capacity to its neighbors so that it can focus on 2) subsidizing the production of higher quality steel (for aerospace and automotive, for example) at home and further crowd out any competitors in the OECD countries. The result is that Chinese overproduction of steel is expected to continue but will spread to include production in third countries.

Question. What steps do you intend to take to support the OECD's work in this area of curbing harmful Chinese steel overproduction and to ensure this problem remains an important topic on the G7 agenda?

Answer. Last year, the United States agreed to remove the 232 tariffs on the EU as a condition for negotiating a Global Arrangement. I understand that a Global Arrangement is envisioned to cover all steel and aluminum products subject to the Section 232 tariffs. We have a real opportunity to modernize our approach to trade, notably in how we consider carbon intensity in emissions intensive goods and collectively address the effects of non-market excess capacity on our market-oriented steel and aluminum industries.

OECD Membership

Question. The OECD appears to be headed for a final, total membership of 50 member states. What are your thoughts regarding the accession process and the geographical balance of potential members?

Answer. The OECD's global influence derives not from the size or composition of its membership but from the quality and impact of its policy instruments and best practices. The accession process is a valuable tool to align aspiring members with the OECD's high standards and values, including a commitment to democratic governance and a market-oriented economic system. While it is important the OECD's membership reflects the world's geographic and cultural diversity, expansion for the sake of expansion is not the goal. The accession process is a way to reinforce the values aspirant countries share with current members, such as anti-corruption, open investment climates, and environmental commitments, to name a few. If confirmed, I will continue our work to ensure that the OECD can absorb and integrate new members without weakening its high standards or the effectiveness of its work. We must ensure that candidate countries are also prepared and committed to becoming members.

Because the OECD is a consensus decision-making body, it is vital that any new candidates for OECD membership support and be positioned to maintain the important shared principles of the organization and not be vulnerable to outside influence or pressures to undermine the OECD's important work.

Question. How will you ensure that any new members will remain fully committed, over the long-term, to long-standing established OECD principles and procedures?

Answer. The OECD is a group of like-minded countries committed to a market economy and pluralistic democracy. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring the integrity of the OECD's peer review process to ensure that members live up to their obligations as OECD members. I also commit to ensuring that potential new members demonstrate political commitment to core OECD values, including democratic principles, respect for rule of law, transparency, and human rights. Finally, I commit to encouraging the review of OECD engagement with non-members to ensure democratic principles remain key and that engagement is not merely done for the sake of engagement.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. SEAN PATRICK MALONEY BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy in the OECD as the United States' Permanent Representative and Ambassador to the organization.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests?

Answer. As Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system."

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party would constructively work with the United States in good faith?

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational and global challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's new Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in the OECD.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the country in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests in the OECD and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State, interagency colleagues, and Congress to address China's efforts to expand its influence in the OECD and with its member states.

Question. As you may be aware, a group of federal employees penned an open letter to President Biden criticizing U.S. support for Israel in the aftermath of Hamas' brutal terrorist attack on October 7, 2023. Efforts like these directly undermine the duty of our diplomats to advance the policies of the President of the United States. Yes or no, did you sign the open letter to the President expressing opposition to the President's Israel policy?

Answer. No, I did not sign the open letter to the President expressing opposition to the policy on Israel.

Question. Have you ever expressed support for an Israeli ceasefire in Gaza?

Answer. No, I have not expressed support for an Israeli ceasefire in Gaza.

Question. Do you agree that Hamas is an antisemitic entity and that a ceasefire would allow these groups to reconstitute and attack Israel, and Americans, in the future?

Answer. Yes, Hamas is a U.S. designated terrorist group that seeks to eliminate the State of Israel and whose founding charter calls for the killing of Jewish people. A ceasefire right now would give Hamas time to regroup and would fail to prevent Hamas from continuing terror attacks and firing rockets at Israel.

Question. Do you agree that calling for a ceasefire in Gaza means calling for Israel to stop its pursuit of Hamas, a designated foreign terrorist organization, that orchestrated the October 7 attacks and still refuses to release Israeli and American hostages?

Answer. A ceasefire in Gaza would allow Hamas time and space to regroup. The U.S. Government is working intensively with the Governments of Qatar, Egypt, and Israel to secure humanitarian pauses and the release of all hostages from Gaza. We are focused each day at the highest levels on freeing hostages and facilitating safe passage for wounded civilians and third country nationals, including Americans, out of Gaza.

Question. Do you believe that Israel, in its operation against Hamas, which is known to use civilians as human shields, is taking all necessary steps to minimize civilian casualties?

Answer. Hamas has deeply embedded itself within the civilian population, which creates an added challenge for the Israeli military in conducting its operations in Gaza. The U.S. Government has been clear on the necessity for Israel to act in full compliance with its obligations under international humanitarian law and has urged all possible steps to protect civilians. The United States supports Israel's right to protect itself from terrorism, consistent with international law.

Question. If confirmed, would you define one of your employees or contractors signing an open letter criticizing you, or policies you undertake at the instruction of the President, as insubordination as defined by the Government Accountability Office?

Answer. As a nominee for Ambassador, I believe valuing opinions, trust, and fostering a harassment-free workplace are all key to managing dissent.

While I would prefer to address employee concerns personally, making concerns known publicly is not insubordination, as defined by the Government Accountability Office.

Question. If confirmed, how will you address discipline issues, such as insubordination, that do not take established dissent channels?

Answer. If an employee did not express dissent through official channels, I would make sure that the employee knew of the many opportunities available to employees to express dissent and knew that Department leadership listens to varying views on policy issues.

If confirmed, I would then encourage the employee to use standardized dissent channels to express views and affect change. While we may not always agree, employees must know they are safe bringing their opinions to leadership.

Question. In your view, are the actions these federal employees took, by anonymously signing a letter to the President of the United States, covered as “whistle-blowing?”

Answer. Employees must feel safe to express dissenting views to leadership. While anonymously signing a letter to the President is a less than ideal mechanism to bring an alternative policy view before leadership, it is important that employees be able to safely express disagreement without fear of reprisal. Employees should feel that their opinions are protected and that they will not be subject to reprisal.

Question. In 1961, the OECD was created to be the economic counterpart to NATO and has 20 founding country members. Since its creation, OECD has expanded to 38 countries and aims to shape policies that foster prosperity, equality, opportunity and well-being for all in spaces where the IMF, World Bank, or UN do not operate such as anti-bribery conventions, data privacy guidelines, and enforcement of laws protecting privacy. OECD carries out most of its work via committees. Do you believe U.S. interests are being fairly represented in these committees?

Answer. Yes, I believe U.S. interests are being fairly represented in the OECD’s committees. Subject matter experts from across U.S. Government departments and agencies represent the United States on the OECD’s various committees and working groups. These experts collaborate closely across the U.S. Government as they formulate their positions in committee and consider the views of other U.S. stakeholders, including the private sector, where appropriate. As you have noted, issues such as anti-bribery, data privacy, and enforcement of laws protecting privacy are important, and the OECD is an important forum of like-minded countries to discuss best policies and practices. In addition, the OECD operates by consensus, and a proposed policy measure or committee stance will not move forward in the OECD if the United States objects. If confirmed, my door will always be open to our inter-agency delegates, the U.S. Congress, and other American stakeholders to ensure U.S. interests are well represented in the organization.

Question. Should OECD invite China to join in its work?

Answer. China is not a member of the OECD. It is one of five designated “Key Partner” countries, along with Brazil, India, Indonesia, and South Africa, given the size and importance of their economies. OECD’s membership represents most of the world’s economy; the organization gathers and analyzes global, regional, and country-specific economic data, so it is important, for example, that economic data on China be considered along with the rest of the world in the research and analysis that the OECD conducts. China is, therefore, sometimes invited by OECD members to be present in select committees, working groups, and meetings. The United States and other likeminded countries do not support China’s inclusion as a member of the OECD. If confirmed, I will continue to support the Administration’s position.

Question. If confirmed, will you support China’s efforts to join OECD?

Answer. Throughout the OECD’s 62-year history, China has not been an OECD member. Accession to the OECD is only by invitation from all members after an aspiring country has been deemed to share common principles and values, and is subject to that country’s successful completion of a rigorous roadmap set by OECD members, with the aspirant committing to adhere to a set of democratic and eco-conomic principles and achieving specified benchmarks. China does not meet OECD's membership invitation criteria.

Moreover, China has never expressed an interest in joining. Any future decision to invite China to pursue accession would need to be by consensus of the entire OECD membership—including the United States—and we are not in favor. If confirmed, I will continue to advance the U.S. Government's position on this and other issues at the OECD.

Question. The OECD is attempting to regulate brazen practices of some developing countries which have been identified as tax havens. In your view, should the U.S. support OECD efforts to address this problem?

Answer. Tax policy is an area where the OECD plays a pivotal convening role for the 145 countries engaged in the multi-year Inclusive Framework for negotiating new tax architecture to prevent Base Erosion and Profit Shifting.

This progress towards rules to create a fair, stable, and predictable international tax regime, including a global minimum tax, directly respond to concerns from U.S. investors over the years. Achieving these objectives will create a fairer tax system for U.S. workers and U.S. companies, while generating tax revenues to cover critical national priorities.

If confirmed, I will work closely with the Treasury Department—the U.S. Government lead on tax policy—and our partners at the OECD to protect U.S. interests, both at home and abroad.

Question. If so, how aggressively and in what manner?

Answer. The United States has been a leader in OECD/G20 Inclusive Framework negotiations for the last decade, spanning various Administrations. The United States has consistently sought ambitious timelines and actively pursued consensus positions that benefit U.S. interests in an effort to achieve a new global tax architecture that is fit for the digital economy, as soon as possible to minimize uncertainty and support long-term planning for U.S. businesses and investors.

This effort includes Treasury's request for stakeholder comments on the Pillar 1 agreement that provides a fair, stable, level playing field, that allows U.S. companies to win on a global scale.

Question. Does this include setting a so-called "global" minimum corporate tax rate that is higher than the current corporate tax rate in the United States?

Answer. Overall, Pillar Two makes U.S. companies more competitive. Before Pillar Two, U.S. multinationals were the only taxpayers subject to a minimum tax on foreign earnings. Now, all multinationals are subject to a minimum tax, no matter where they are headquartered or operate.

When we level the global playing field by eliminating other jurisdictions' tax advantage, U.S. companies and workers can compete to win.

The global floor of 15 percent is lower than the current 21 percent corporate tax rate in the United States.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. SEAN PATRICK MALONEY BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question. As a threshold question, do you believe that protecting and defending American interests and our domestic tax revenues should be the most important goal for the Biden Administration in these negotiations, yes or no? Please explain your response.

Answer. Yes, we all agree that protecting and defending American interests—including those of U.S. workers and the U.S. economy—and our domestic revenues are the most important goals for the Biden Administration in the OECD/G20 global tax negotiations.

Overall, Pillar Two makes U.S. companies more competitive. Before Pillar Two, U.S. multinationals were the only taxpayers subject to a minimum tax on foreign earnings. Now, all multinationals are subject to a minimum tax, no matter where they are headquartered or operate.

When we level the global playing field by eliminating other jurisdictions' tax advantage, U.S. companies and workers can compete to win. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Treasury Department and our partners at the OECD to protect U.S. interests, both at home and abroad.

Question. Are you troubled by JCT's June 2023 findings referenced above? Why or why not?

Answer. While I would refer you to Treasury for specifics, it is my understanding that the JCT June 2023 analysis begins with the assumption that over 40 countries adopt Pillar Two and that the United States does nothing.

Under that assumption, the JCT finds that the U.S. revenue impact could vary by about $400 billion—with the midpoint being an increase in U.S. tax receipts by $25 billion. Then the JCT analyzes several scenarios; in each scenario, U.S. adoption of Pillar Two is better from a revenue perspective than the United States doing nothing. For instance, scenario 5 shows that U.S. adoption along with the 40+ countries in the baseline means a U.S. revenue increase of $237 billion.

So, overall, the takeaway is if other major members of the global economy are moving ahead—and they are doing so—it is better from a revenue perspective for the United States to act than to remain on the sidelines.

Question. If confirmed as Ambassador, how would you utilize your position to ensure American domestic interests are protected?

Answer. I believe that it is essential to continue discussions at the OECD/G20 Inclusive Framework to protect U.S. interests, level the playing field for U.S. companies, and prevent double taxation.

If confirmed, I will work closely with Treasury and other U.S. agencies to ensure that U.S. views continue to be reflected in the tax policy work of the OECD, and to provide appropriate policy articulation to the OECD and feedback to the U.S. Government.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. CHARLIE CRIST BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Emissions Reduction Efforts

ICAO has introduced the Carbon Offsetting and Reduction Scheme in International Aviation (CORSIA), intended to “harmonize” emissions reduction efforts across international aviation.

Question. How do you see this effort interacting with aviation industry-led initiatives to reduce emissions?

Answer. Over time, the aviation industry has made concerted voluntary efforts to reduce its “value chain emissions”—emissions from assets not owned or controlled by the company, but in its value chain. However, like any corporate sustainability initiative, the aviation sector’s voluntary actions are not always implemented consistently, and certainly not universally. CORSIA ensures that airlines are taking sustained climate actions that meet a high and common bar for effectiveness. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage airlines to go above and beyond CORSIA’s core requirements, which many U.S. airlines already do.

Question. Are there points of tension between CORSIA and any efforts industry may have already begun to reduce emissions?

Answer. Those types of tensions are generally not evident. Some airlines may choose to voluntarily purchase carbon credits or to invest in early-stage sustainable alternative fuels that, in either case, are not yet eligible under CORSIA. But most airlines recognize the importance of ensuring that compliance-eligible credits or fuels meet a high, common bar for quality, to preserve the integrity and reputation of CORSIA as a global climate measure.

Question. How can ICAO work constructively with industry on this issue?

Answer. The United States and other ICAO member states work directly with industry and civil society representatives in the ICAO technical bodies that develop and recommend guidance or standards for CORSIA’s implementation. It appears that arrangement is quite unique in the UN system. It has proven to be constructive in helping to ensure broad acceptance of ICAO’s decisions on CORSIA across a range of stakeholder groups, including industry, and if confirmed, I will continue this practice.

Passenger Safety

The most important responsibility of ICAO is ensuring passenger safety.

Question. What more needs to be done to make civil aviation safer for passengers?

Answer. As I said in my testimony, passenger safety would be my top priority, if confirmed. ICAO’s mission proactively focuses on enhancements in technology, regular reviews of standards and recommended practices (SARPs), conducting thorough safety audits, and promoting global cooperation to bolster passenger safety. The United States is an active participant in all of these activities, and if confirmed I will make sure these continue to be a priority in our engagement with ICAO.

Question. Are ICAO's current passenger safety standards sufficient?

Answer. ICAO is responsive to the dynamic nature of the aviation industry and continually assesses the evolving landscape to ensure its global aviation standards remain effective and adaptable to emerging challenges. If confirmed, I will work with our U.S. interagency team to ensure that we continue to move forward ICAO's work in this area.

Airspace Security

Airspace security over high-traffic, active warzones—such as Ukraine and the Middle East—is of the utmost importance.

Question. What role do you see ICAO playing in developing alternative routes for flights in these regions?

Answer. Throughout the world, in various high-traffic or conflict areas, ICAO plays a pivotal role in developing alternative routes by facilitating international cooperation and coordination. This work involves ICAO bringing together member states, airlines, and relevant authorities to assess and establish safer options.

Question. How can ICAO best support airspace security efforts, and how can the Biden administration best support ICAO in this regard?

Answer. ICAO supports airspace security efforts by fostering international collaboration, communication, and leveraging advanced technologies for real-time threat assessments. The Biden administration can support ICAO in these efforts by promoting ICAO's initiatives and encouraging adherence to international aviation safety and security standards.

Taiwan Observer Status

Members of Congress, on a bipartisan basis, have repeatedly made the case for including Taiwan as an observer of ICAO. They are an important stakeholder in global aviation, and can substantially contribute to safe and secure international air navigation and transport. However, in the past, influence from the People's Republic of China—both internal and external to the organization—has made that impossible to achieve.

Question. How would you seek to address this issue, if confirmed?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to supporting Taiwan's meaningful participation in ICAO, in line with longstanding U.S. policy. I would continue to support Taiwan's membership in international organizations where statehood is not a requirement and encourage Taiwan's meaningful participation in organizations where membership is not possible.

Aviation security, safety, and environmental impacts are matters of global importance, and should involve all interested stakeholders, including Taiwan, which has a major aviation sector and can both benefit from and contribute to technical discussions on aviation safety and security based on its own aviation experiences.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. CHARLIE CRIST BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

Question. Prior to 2019, the State Department withheld about $2 million in contributions pursuant to Sec. 7048(a) of the FY2019 Consolidated Appropriations Act, which mandates the withholding of 15 percent of contributions to international organizations that do not implement sufficient whistleblower protections. After the adoption and implementation of key ethics and oversight reforms, the U.S. restored full funding. However, this is no longer standard practice and concern remains regarding adherence to ethics and whistleblower protections. If confirmed, how will you direct the U.S. Mission to ICAO to push for transparency, adherence to ethics and oversight reforms, and the protection of whistleblowers?

Answer. The Administration is committed to improving transparency and accountability at ICAO, which includes eliminating waste, fraud, and abuse, as well as protecting whistleblowers from retaliation. If confirmed, I will continue and build on the United States' work to ensure that whistleblowers can report wrongdoing without fear of reprisal.

Following a high-level claim of retaliation in June 2019, the U.S. Mission increased its efforts to address deficiencies in ICAO's ethics framework, investigation procedures, and Secretariat transparency. Concerted action on the part of the Mission and its stakeholders led to ICAO's adoption of a new whistleblower protection policy and new procedures for investigating complaints of staff misconduct.

In addition, in April 2021, ICAO became one of the few U.N. System organizations to adopt rules of procedure specifically for handling complaints of misconduct against its executive head.

If confirmed, I will continue this engagement to ensure that ICAO's transparency and accountability mechanisms meet U.N. System-wide best practices. I will also commit to working closely with the organization to ensure it is effectively implementing its whistleblower protection policy.

Question. How will you hold the body accountable for doing so given it has fallen way short in the past?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that ICAO is accountable and responsible for the U.S. taxpayer resources that they receive. This includes continuing the long-standing U.S. policy of promoting budget discipline, as well as continuing efforts to ensure that senior management is held to account for promoting ethical conduct throughout ICAO's ranks. I will also work to ensure that ICAO adheres to best management and oversight practices in the areas of protecting whistleblowers, addressing sexual exploitation and abuse, promoting zero tolerance for corruption, and ensuring financial and managerial transparency.

Question. Are you familiar with the whistleblower scandal at ICAO in recent years where the secretary general of ICAO, Fang Liu, was accused by a senior official-turned-whistleblower of "toxic and hostile" leadership marked by "cronyism" and "favoritism," and where no investigation place and the whistleblower was fired by ICAO?

Answer. Yes, I am familiar with the case. I share your determination to see that whistleblowers are supported and protected in appropriate ways. If confirmed, I will work through the Council to promote a culture at ICAO in which staff feel free to speak up and that processes are in place to protect against retaliation when they call attention to wrongdoing. I will work to ensure that cronyism and favoritism have no place at ICAO.

Aviation safety and security systems depend on the ability and willingness of crew and airport staff to report concerns that could lead to damage and/or loss of life. ICAO must lead by example through effective policies and practices for reporting and addressing misconduct and for preventing retaliation against whistleblowers.

Question. In brief, a breach of ICAO's servers by a Chinese state-sponsored hacker group which took place in 2019 and revealed in 2019. The hackers reportedly gained access to the agency's system through a compromised laptop belonging to the son of then-ICAO Council President Olumuyiwa Benard Aliu. The hackers compromised the laptop of an ICAO official was in Beijing. Leaked documents show that ICAO staff sought to cover up the incident, and Liu reportedly ignored internal recommendations to investigate further. Are you familiar with this case which has been widely reported on? What is your perspective and how would you direct your mission to prevent incidents like this from happening in the future?

Answer. I am familiar with the serious cyberattack at ICAO that was revealed in 2019, and the flawed response within the organization. If confirmed, I will support ICAO Secretary General Juan Carlos Salazar's efforts to modernize and reform the operations of the organization. Secretary General Salazar made several management changes in his first year, including taking steps to implement the ICAO Council's ethics reform package that the United States had spearheaded in 2020–2021. Salazar also initiated a "digital transformation" effort that would, among other things, enhance cyber security across the organization. If confirmed, I will press for continued implementation of those reforms to ensure enhanced transparency in the handling of these types of cases.

Question. On January 8, 2020, the Islamic Republic of Iran shot down Ukraine International Airlines Flight PS752, a civilian aircraft departing a Tehran airport. 176 innocent passengers and crew members were killed, including 138 people with ties to Canada. More than a year after the downing, the Governments of Canada and Ukraine have rejected Iran's handling of, and investigation into, the PS752 downing, pushing for Iran's full adherence to international conventions. The G7 Summit Communique reaffirmed the G7's commitment to addressing this case. If confirmed, will you commit to publicly and meaningfully supporting our allies and partners in Canada and Ukraine to pursue full accountability, transparency, and justice in this case and future cases, including at ICAO?

Answer. With respect to the shooting down of Ukraine International Airlines Flight PS752, I understand that United States participated in the investigation, including with an accredited representative on the investigation team. I understand that the ICAO Accident Investigation Panel formed a working group to explore some of the unique issues raised by this incident. If confirmed, I will work with our international partners to ensure the integrity of the accident investigation process and to hold those responsible for the shoot-down of Ukraine International Airlines Flight PS752 accountable. If confirmed, I will also call on Iran to uphold its responsibilities to the victims and families of this tragic incident.

Question. Since 2013, Taiwan has been systematically excluded from participating at ICAO, including during key discussions to stop the spread of COVID-19 in the early days of the pandemic. Taiwan operates one of the busiest airports by passenger and cargo traffic in the world. Can you commit to championing Taiwan's bid to attain observer status at ICAO?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to promote Taiwan's meaningful participation at ICAO, in line with longstanding U.S. policy. I would also continue to support Taiwan's membership in international organizations where statehood is not a requirement and encourage Taiwan's meaningful participation in organizations where membership is not possible. Taiwan's involvement helps the international community address global challenges.

Taiwan, with its major aviation sector, can both benefit from and contribute to technical discussions on aviation safety and security based on its own aviation experiences. Aviation security, safety, and environmental impacts are matters of global importance, and should involve all interested stakeholders, including Taiwan.

Question. How will the U.S. Mission to ICAO, in conjunction with the State Department, specifically work to assist Taiwan in its bid?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to demonstrate to ICAO members that Taiwan has important contributions to make in many areas of ICAO's work, including the safety and security of civil aviation. I will press ICAO leadership to provide meaningful participation for Taiwan at all appropriate levels and events, and work to build support with likeminded partners. If confirmed, I will make this a priority at ICAO and work with the State Department and other agencies to identify opportunities and events to support Taiwan's participation so that the international community can benefit from its contributions on this important issue.

Question. On May 23, 2021, Ryanair flight FR4978 was forcibly diverted by the Government of Belarus and a passenger was arrested. ICAO has taken up an investigation of this event. Can you commit to ensuring that the fact-finding investigation into Ryanair Flight FR4978 is completed with transparency?

Answer. Belarus' forced diversion of Ryanair Flight 4978 and subsequent arrest of an opposition journalist and a colleague was a flagrant disregard for international norms of aviation security and safety and undermined the critical trust between pilots and air traffic control. The ICAO Council launched an investigation of this matter that was performed by a Fact-Finding Investigation Team (FFIT) of experts from the ICAO Secretariat. The FFIT report was completed in June 2022. Based on that report, the ICAO Council and the 41st ICAO Assembly, which took place in September-October 2022, condemned Belarus' infractions of the Chicago Convention related to its forced landing of Ryanair flight 4978. If confirmed, I commit to working to ensure future investigations are conducted with full transparency.

Question. How will you work to combat malign Chinese influence at ICAO?

Answer. If confirmed, I will priorities working with allies and partners to strengthen ICAO's governance and its ability to fulfil its mandate of ensuring the safety, security, and sustainability of civil aviation. I will oppose efforts by states, including the PRC, that seek to make ICAO and other international organizations less transparent and accountable or to use the organizations to advance their own interests. If confirmed, I will also continue to support greater U.S. representation at ICAO, including by advocating for qualified and independent candidates.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work to recruit, install and retain qualified Americans for positions within the U.N.? How can you, alongside colleagues at U.S./U.N. New York and the Bureau of International Organizations (IO), promote such individuals in the U.N. system to better promote America's values and the shared interests of our partners?

Answer. If confirmed, increasing U.S. citizen employment at ICAO would be a top priority. Increasing the number of U.S. citizens in international organizations such as ICAO requires a multifaceted approach focused on all levels of employment. I would work with the IO Bureau and its missions to promote qualified U.S. citizens for senior leadership and mid-level appointment opportunities, as well as entry-level talent through programs such as the Junior Professional Officer (JPO) program.

Question. What is your understanding of morale throughout the U.S. Mission to ICAO?

Answer. My understanding is that morale is good at the U.S. Mission to ICAO. Having said that, establishing and maintaining high morale is always a work in progress. I understand that the current Chargé d'Affaires, Brent Christensen, has done a very good job of working with employees at Mission ICAO for a better atmosphere. If confirmed, I am absolutely committed to continuing and building on this effort.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at U.S. Mission to ICAO?

Answer. If confirmed, I would bring to the role a strong respect for the Mission and its employees. I would also bring a commitment to work in concert with the team to advance United States interests at this important multilateral agency.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at U.S. Mission to ICAO?

Answer. My intention would be to incorporate the insights of all the current employees at the U.S. Mission to ICAO. Then, to make sure that we are unified in our mission, to improve the U.S. standing at ICAO, and increase the number of U.S. citizen employees at ICAO.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for Chiefs of Mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I strive to lead by example. I commit myself to serve with integrity and mutual respect. I am guided by the principles of decency and kindness and valuing each and every employee for the insights they have to offer.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or private?

Answer. I do not believe it is ever acceptable to berate subordinates either in public or private. I believe in honesty and decency, which my record in public service bears out. If confirmed, I commit to these guiding principles in all of my interactions with staff, and I will encourage the same from them with me and among one another.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with the Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I would view the relationship with the Deputy Chief of Mission as one of mutual respect and built upon trust. I believe it is very important for the Deputy Chief of Mission, as well as the Ambassador, to work together in a strong partnership for the best interests of the United States of America.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. I have deep respect for the career officers of the State Department, and the tradecraft, abilities, and commitment they bring to public service. If confirmed, I would intend to entrust to the Deputy Chief of Mission the traditional roles and responsibilities assigned to DCMs at U.S. Missions around the world. I would work closely with this key officer of the U.S. mission to build trust and a cooperative relationship that prioritizes the pursuit of U.S. interests and the care of our staff.

Question. In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performances in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeeded in their roles?

Answer. I do believe it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback for their performance in their jobs. I would provide this feedback in a clear, honest, straightforward, and respectful manner in order to encourage improvement in areas that are identified.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. If confirmed, I would certainly encourage clear, accurate and direct feedback to employees. I think it is important to be honest, and to be appropriately direct in order to create an environment that encourages trust and improvement based upon that honesty.

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and local citizens. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our Embassy walls enough to accomplish fully their missions?

Answer. Through my experience as a former Governor, I understand the importance of getting outside your comfort zone, and being in contact with those who are leaders in the country you are visiting. I was able to do this during trade missions to Europe, South America, and Israel. Based on that experience, I do believe it is important to get outside the mission's confines and interact with local officials, both in business and government.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work to ensure the small staff of the Mission is fully engaged with member states of the International Civil Aviation Organization, and actively engaged with government, civic, and business organizations of the host country, where appropriate, by making sure that their schedules allow them this opportunity.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. CHARLIE CRIST BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People's Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China (PRC) and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the CCP a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagements, public diplomacy, and commercial advocacy to bolster U.S. standing at ICAO.

Question. Does the CCP undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests? If so, please explain.

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad. According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system."

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the CCP that would constructively work with the United States in good faith, knowing that at any moment Chinese interlocutors with U.S. representatives could be disappeared at a moment's notice? If so, please explain.

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States manages this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States will work with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate change, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because it is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work with the Department of State's Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC and other actors in ICAO.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the PRC in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests at ICAO and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will work closely with Department of State and interagency colleagues and Congress to address China's efforts to expand its influence in ICAO.

Question. Along with other standard-setting UN agencies, concern has been growing that the CCP is actively working to increase its influence at the ICAO in order to ensure that its preferred rules are imposed on the rest of the world. For example, in 2020, the Trump Administration criticized the ICAO's decision to block the twitter accounts of world leaders who called for Taiwan to be include in the ICAO. There have also been Chinese attempts to steer ICAO regulations for passports to favor formats that would benefit Chinese manufacturers. If confirmed, in what areas can we work with the CCP regarding international aviation?

Answer. One area is reducing emissions. While ICAO Resolutions are not legally binding, the Assembly Resolution on the Carbon Offsetting and Reduction Scheme for International Aviation (CORSIA) asked ICAO to develop standards and recommended practices (SARPs) ensuring its uniform implementation. Those standards cover all requirements necessary for ensuring a level playing field for U.S. airlines. If confirmed, I commit to working for early participation of countries with significant aviation activity, such as the PRC.

The United States and China have a history of cooperating on civil aviation, including an active program to support the certifying of aircraft components manufactured in China. If confirmed, I will continue to support where those efforts continue to serve United States interests.

Question. Do you commit to voting against proposals, put forward by CCP representatives to the ICAO, which are not to the U.S.' interests?

Answer. Standard-setting bodies are essential to the national security and economic security of the United States and our partners, friends, and allies. Organizations such as ICAO must remain transparent and accountable to membership, focused on mandates and core competencies, and led by independent, qualified individuals. If confirmed, I will prioritize working with allies and partners to strengthen ICAO's governance and its ability to fulfil its mandate: the safety, security, and sustainability of civil aviation. If confirmed, I will oppose efforts by states, including the PRC, that seek to make ICAO and other international organizations less transparent and accountable or to use the organizations to advance their own narrow interests rather than those of all U.N. member states.

Question. ICAO additionally regulates international balloon and airship flights. Will you commit to voting against any airship or balloon proposals put forward by the CCP?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make clear our Nation's firm resolve to counter efforts by states that may seek to advance initiatives that are harmful to U.S. interests or seek to use ICAO to advance their own narrow interests rather than those of all UN member states.

Question. Do you support Taiwan's participation at the ICAO?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to supporting Taiwan's meaningful participation in ICAO, in line with longstanding U.S. policy. The United States will continue to support Taiwan's membership in international organizations where statehood is not a requirement and encourage Taiwan's meaningful participation in organizations where membership is not possible.

Aviation security, safety, and environmental impacts are matters of global importance, and should involve all interested stakeholders, including Taiwan, which has a major aviation sector and can both benefit from and contribute to technical discussions on aviation safety and security based on its own aviation experiences.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. CHARLIE CRIST BY SENATOR TED CRUZ

As you know, members of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) work to adopt consensus standards to maintain safe and efficient airspace systems. In 2006, ICAO increased the mandatory pilot retirement age for commercial pilots from 60 to 65, after analysis from ICAO's aviation chief medical determined that any aviation risk due to the pilot's age was less than 0.84 percent—a rapidly diminished percentage since the original analysis, due to significant technological advancements in aircraft automation.

Every year, thousands of U.S. commercial pilots are forced into mandatory retirement at age 65, without a stable income and still being healthy enough to fly and educate younger pilots. The 65-year-old pilot community does not want to leave their job. These pilots are committed to serving our Nation's skies and ensuring safety remains the gold standard in aviation.

Question. Would you support a two-year increase in the U.S. pilot retirement age requirement for commercial pilots, from age 65 to 67? Further, how would you advocate for its adoption at the international level?

Answer. As I understand it, the FAA would need to conduct additional research to ensure that any changes do not impact safe operations in the National Airspace System. After having the opportunity to discuss with your office, I recognize this is an important issue for ICAO, the FAA, and the Senate. If confirmed, should the U.S. Government pursue increasing the maximum pilot age following completion of additional research, I would work with your office, and with our international partners, to ensure harmonization, including at ICAO.

Ukraine Oversight Efforts

I understand that the State Department OIG has a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with the National Anti-Corruption Bureau of Ukraine, which includes informal information-sharing agreements and investigative collaboration, signaling significant Ukrainian buy-in to our efforts to prevent waste of U.S. tax dollars. State OIG also has personnel on the ground in Kyiv that facilitates engagement with Ukrainian authorities.

Question. Do you agree that partnering with Ukraine is important to ongoing oversight efforts? How do you plan to ensure that Ukraine is engaged in accountability of funds?

Answer. Partnering with Ukraine officials is essential in the ongoing oversight of assistance to Ukraine. The accountability of funds has to be a collaborative effort between the USG and Ukraine officials. If confirmed, to ensure accountability of funds, I will partner with Inspectors General from the Department of Defense (DOD) and the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to ensure programmatic audits and evaluations of Ukraine assistance as reflected in the Joint Strategic Oversight Plan for Operation Atlantic Resolve (OAR) are executed in a timely manner. These projects will reveal whether or not the proper processes and internal controls are in place, and being followed. The intent is to be proactive in preventing fraud, waste, abuse or gross mismanagement; and to expose flags or fraud indicators, and investigate as appropriate. The process will require a positive relationship with Ukraine officials to ensure access to files, processes and data. If confirmed I will travel to Ukraine, along with IGs from DOD and USAID and meet with Ukraine officials to develop the necessary relationships to ensure OIG has ample access to conduct the requisite scopes of analysis to ensure full accountability of funds. Currently there is a trip to Ukraine planned for the January-February 2024 timeframe to meet with stakeholder officials from the National Anticorruption Bureau of Ukraine (NABU), the Special Anticorruption Prosecutor's Office (SAPO) and the High Anti-Corruption Court (HACC). If confirmed I will meet and work with these Ukraine officials to ensure that OIG has the cooperation necessary to perform the required oversight of U.S. assistance to Ukraine.

Question. How do you plan to balance the pressing need to conduct scrupulous oversight of U.S. assistance to Ukraine with other pressing priorities?

Answer. Oversight is multifaceted. Recognizing that resources are finite, while requirements tend to be infinite; I will assess the situation and prioritize accordingly, since all priorities are not equal. I will align the available resources to the highest priorities. I will conduct a risk assessment and gap analysis, then adjust accordingly and act deliberately. If the risk analysis suggests that more, or different resources are needed to support the oversight requirements, I will make an informed case, and request additional resources necessary to carry out the oversight mission fully and accurately.

Independence

Above all, the most critical trait that an Inspector General must have is independence. Unfortunately, there have been attempts in recent memory to influence Inspector Generals and impugn their integrity.

Question. Do you commit to us that you will serve as a fully independent Inspector General, free from influence, political or otherwise?

Answer. Yes, absolutely.

State Action on Recommendations

State OIG reports can result in recommendations that may be unwelcome for the Department. The OIG works to follow up on outstanding recommendations, but there are often open recommendations that have not been fully implemented.

Question. How will you ensure that recommendations are acted upon by the Department, and more importantly, result in actionable changes?

Answer. While IGs are authorized by statute to develop recommendations to improve government programs and operations; IGs are not authorized to enforce the implementation of these value-added recommendations. Rather, agencies possess the authority to ensure the implementation of IG recommendations. IG recommendations would be far more effective if agency leaders were compelled by statute, executive order or policy, to address all IG recommendations within some specified period of time. I will ensure that State open recommendations are tracked, reported to the Secretary of State for management action and included in State OIG semiannual reports to Congress for transparency.

Chemical Weapons Incidents

The increasing number of incidents of chemical weapons use is a growing international concern. The international community turns to the OPCW, which was originally designed to oversee the destruction of chemical weapons stockpiles, for this mission.

Question. How adequate are the OPCW's resources for its role as a non-proliferation agency? How do you assess the United States' response to recent cases of use?

Answer. The Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) continues to require additional voluntary funding from States Parties—including the United States—to be fit for purpose and hold Russia, Syria, and others to account in an ever-changing security environment. The Organization's workload over the past ten years has significantly increased, including on Syria accountability, and Russia and its allies have increasingly pushed back against fiscal support to the OPCW. Without our support, the Organization will likely cut back on its capabilities to investigate and attribute future uses of chemical weapons (CW) by either state or non-state actors, let alone build capabilities to test novel agents, for example.

On Syria's use of CW, the United States' response has been comprehensive. The United States worked with allies, partners, and the international community to condemn Syria's use of CW and, in an unprecedented step, secure a decision from the Conference of the States Parties of the OPCW to suspend certain rights and privileges of Syria under the Chemical Weapons Convention. Moreover, the United States supports the U.N.'s International, Impartial and Independent Mechanism work to document and build case files on the most serious crimes under international law committed in Syria, including the use of chemical weapons, and we continue to work with responsible countries and through organizations and initiatives such as the Partnership against Impunity for the Use of Chemical Weapons, the U.N. Human Rights Council, and the UNSC to hold the Assad regime accountable. The actions at the OPCW and other institutions demonstrate the world is concerned by and condemns the Assad regime's use of CW. Such a response has been essential to demonstrating that the norm against CW use remains strong, and U.S. leadership has been instrumental in this regard.

On Russia's multiple assassination attempts using chemical weapons, the United States continues to challenge Russia's disinformation campaign and press the Kremlin for answers. We have also taken more tangible steps in coordination with allies and partners. In October 2018, the United States, along with Canada and the Netherlands, submitted a Technical Change Proposal to add two families of novichoks, including one of the chemicals used to poison the Skripals, to the CWC's Annex on Chemicals. In November 2019, this technical change was adopted by consensus at the Twenty-Fourth Session of the Conference of States Parties to the OPCW. Additionally, forty-five States Parties—including the United States—have pressed Russia to answer questions under Article IX, paragraph 2 of the CWC on the poisoning of Mr. Navalny on Russian soil; Russia has not provided sufficient responses to those questions.

If confirmed, I will work with partners to support the OPCW's robust implementation of the Convention, seek every opportunity to strengthen its capabilities in the interest of U.S. national security, and continue to press to hold Russia and Syria to account.

Disinformation About Chemical Weapons

The current U.S. Representative to the OPCW has said that Russia has spread disinformation about chemical weapons use by Ukraine.

Question. What can the United States do in the OPCW context to respond to disinformation about chemical attacks?

Answer. It is essential to counter Russia's disinformation on CW issues. Russia has sought to distract from its brutal conduct in its war of aggression against Ukraine by alleging Ukraine's prospective use of CW. To combat the Russian Federation's disinformation campaign, the United States and partners repeatedly refuted the allegations, including at the highest levels of government but also at the grassroots level, across the globe. For example, on February 17, 2022, Secretary Blinken warned the U.N. Security Council that Russian officials were potentially creating a false flag chemical weapons event as a pretext for Russia's full-scale invasion of Ukraine. In April 2022, the United States also supported the use of $250,000 for the OPCW's Trust Fund for the Implementation of Article X in support of the provision of assistance and protection to Ukraine in the event of the use or threat of use of chemical weapons, and the United States has encouraged other countries to provide support to Ukraine directly and through additional support to the OPCW so the Organization could further support Ukraine by providing important training and equipment.

If confirmed, I would look forward to continuing to work with willing CWC States Parties to identify and take appropriate steps at the OPCW to highlight and hold Russia to account for its use of chemical weapons and noncompliance with the CWC as well as to counter the Kremlin's disinformation.

Challenges in Multilateral Diplomacy

Question. What are the central challenges in conducting multilateral diplomacy in an era of more intense strategic competition with Russia and China? Can organization like the OPCW function effectively if Russia and China are seeking to impede their activities?

Answer. While the Russian Federation and the People's Republic of China are active in multilateral forums, their influence at the OPCW is limited to a core group of about a dozen countries that systematically oppose sensible OPCW actions in line with the CWC's purpose to eliminate chemical weapons permanently and verifiably and to consequently prevent their use. In response, the United States continues to diligently work with other States Parties to strengthen the Convention—and the OPCW—to ensure the norm against the use of CW remains strong and to counter Russia's and the PRC's attempts to revise, weaken, or dismantle disarmament and arms control mechanisms that promote stability and predictability in international security. Unlike in some multilateral fora, there is no veto at the OPCW and decisions can be taken by vote; Russia, the PRC, and others are therefore unable to block decisions where there is widespread support. The United States also strengthens the functioning of the OPCW by assisting States Parties with their national implementation of the CWC, such as by assisting in the formulation of CWC implementing legislation.

What the United States has accomplished with our partners at the OPCW is extraordinary and shows that the United States can effectively work with likeminded and responsible States Parties to counter Russian and PRC obstructionism. It is critical for the United States to remain actively engaged at the OPCW to ensure our partners have the benefit of our perspective as we continue to build a broad coalition in support of the norm against chemical weapons use. If confirmed, I will work to maintain strong support among States Parties for the OPCW's effective operation and ensure the United States continues to respond to attempts by Russia and the PRC to impede the good work of the OPCW.

Question. In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the People’s Republic of China is the “only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it.” The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People’s Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that “the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally.” Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests and push back against PRC efforts to expand its problematic influence, through robust and forthright diplomatic engagement and public diplomacy, to advance the Administration’s policies and goals and strengthen the capabilities of the OPCW.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests?

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party’s (CCP) activities in the context of the fact that, as Secretary Blinken has said, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad.

According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence’s 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to “undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system.”

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party would constructively work with the United States in good faith?

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the PRC in the countries or areas in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, in the context of my work with the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, I will make sure that any activity in which the United States is involved is in the national security interest of the United States.

Question. As you may be aware, a group of federal employees penned an open letter to President Biden criticizing U.S. support for Israel in the aftermath of Hamas’ brutal terrorist attack on October 7, 2023. Efforts like these directly undermine the duty of our diplomats to advance the policies of the President of the United States. Yes or no, did you sign the open letter to the President expressing opposition to the President’s Israel policy?

Answer. No, I did not sign the letter.

Question. Have you ever expressed support for an Israeli ceasefire in Gaza?

Answer. No, I have not expressed support for an Israeli ceasefire in Gaza.

Question. Do you agree that Hamas is an antisemitic entity and that a ceasefire would allow these groups to reconstitute and attack Israel, and Americans, in the future?

Answer. Yes, Hamas is a terrorist group that seeks to eliminate the State of Israel and whose founding charter calls for the killing of Jewish people. A ceasefire right now could give Hamas time to regroup and fail to prevent Hamas from continuing terror attacks and firing rockets at Israel.

Question. Do you agree that calling for a ceasefire in Gaza means calling for Israel to stop its pursuit of Hamas, a designated foreign terrorist organization, that orchestrated the October 7 attacks and still refuses to release Israeli and American hostages?

Answer. It is the policy of the Administration to support temporary humanitarian pauses to enable a sustained flow of aid and to allow the voluntary movement of civilians who are seeking to move to safer locations. The U.S. Government is actively working with partners to secure the release of all hostages held by Hamas.

Question. Do you believe that Israel, in its operation against Hamas, which is known to use civilians as human shields, is taking all necessary steps to minimize civilian casualties?

Answer. I believe that Israel has the right to protect itself, consistent with international law. The United States has urged Israel to differentiate between civilians and Hamas terrorists and do everything possible to avoid civilian casualties. Hamas's use of civilians as human shields, a blatant violation of international law, does not lessen Israel's obligations under international humanitarian law.

Question. If confirmed, would you define one of your employees or contractors signing an open letter criticizing you, or policies you undertake at the instruction of the President, as insubordination as defined by the Government Accountability Office?

Answer. Throughout my career I have always refrained from criticizing Department policies publicly. As a leader, I have always encouraged robust internal discussion, debate, and respect for different opinions, while discouraging the airing of disagreement with U.S. policy in public. According to the Government Accountability Office's definition of insubordination, however, expression of concerns in public is not classified as insubordination.

Question. If confirmed, how will you address discipline issues, such as insubordination, that do not take established dissent channels?

Answer. If confirmed, I would make sure anyone not availing themselves of internal dissent channels to express their concerns was made aware of the fact that such channels not only exist but are taken seriously by Department leadership and I would strongly encourage them to avail themselves of these opportunities to make their views and voices heard.

Question. In your view, are the actions these federal employees took, by anonymously signing a letter to the President of the United States, covered as "whistleblowing?"

Answer. I am not in favor of public expressions of dissent by Department employees. Having said this, I also believe employees should be allowed to express disagreement without fear of reprisal. If confirmed, I will uphold all relevant laws and policies pertaining to the protection of whistleblowers, including the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b)(8).

Question. Since the expiration of the Chemical Weapons Convention in 1997, the world has seen increased use of Chemical Weapons (CW) by malign actors, including Russia and North Korea to assassinate opposition voices, Syrian forces to support military operations on their own people, and by terrorist actors such as ISIS in northern Iraq to commit atrocities. The Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons' (OPCW) original mandate to oversee destruction of CW stockpiles was adjusted after 1997 to one more of an investigative body. In your view, how should the U.S. best respond to the use of CWs by State and non-state actors for non-military purposes?

Answer. Since its entry into force in 1997, the OPCW has done significant work to verify the destruction of States Parties declared chemical weapons stockpiles. This year, when the U.S. Government completed destruction of the U.S. chemical weapons stockpile, the OPCW verified the destruction of the last chemical munition of those declared by State Parties.

In addition to its mandate to oversee the destruction of chemical weapons stockpiles, the OPCW's role also includes investigating and addressing alleged instances of chemical weapons use. And with increased use of chemical weapons in recent years by CWC State Parties—both in assassination attempts by Russia and in larger-scale use by Syria—and by non-state actors, the OPCW has used and further developed tools to enable it to carry out its mandate. This includes the establishment of investigative efforts related to Syria's use of chemical weapons, as well as the provision of technical assistance to the United Kingdom and Germany to assist in evaluating samples in connection with the attempted assassination of Sergei Skripal, Yulia Skripal, and Aleksey Navalny. When it comes to non-state actors, the OPCW works to ensure States Parties are actively involved in preventing the transfer of chemicals to such organizations.

The work of the OPCW enjoys the strong backing of the United States and our partners. The United States should continue to ensure the OPCW is fit for purpose given increased threats. In addition, the United States should continue to pursue efforts outside of the OPCW to hold those responsible for chemical weapons use accountable for their actions. This includes, for example, continuing to support the U.N.'s International, Impartial and Independent Mechanism which is working to document and build case files on the most serious crimes under international law committed in Syria, including the use of chemical weapons. If confirmed, I will work to make sure the OPCW remains equipped to address and investigate alleged uses of chemical weapons and will work with partner countries to hold Syria and Russia to account for their multiple uses of CW.

Question. Does the OPCW have adequate resources for investigations and counter-proliferation efforts?

Answer. The Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) continues to require additional voluntary funding from States Parties—including the United States—to be fit for purpose and hold Russia, Syria, and others to account in an ever-changing security environment. The Organization's workload over the past ten years has significantly increased, including on Syria accountability, and Russia and its allies have increasingly pushed back against fiscal support to the OPCW. Without our support, the Organization will likely cut back on its capabilities to investigate and attribute future uses of chemical weapons (CW) by either state or non-state actors, let alone build capabilities to test novel agents, for example.

Question. While you have a history of challenging assignments in the Foreign Service, if confirmed, how will you leverage what appears to be a lack of Chemical Weapons expertise to lead this complex and specific issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I am confident the diplomatic skills and expertise I have developed throughout my career in the Foreign Service will serve me well as the U.S. Ambassador to the OPCW. Over the course of my career, I have served in a variety of assignments handling complex multilateral and bilateral matters, including at the U.S. Mission to International Organizations in Vienna where I worked on non-proliferation issues, among other matters. I have also worked on counterterrorism at the National Security Council. In my work in these varied assignments, I have continually demonstrated the ability to master a broad range of subject matters by working closely with technical experts across the U.S. Government and to develop and implement diplomatic strategies to advance U.S. positions on challenging and technical topics.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOANN M. LOCKARD BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. Is there any effort underway to review and revise the Sahel strategy and its implementation in light of recent events? How will this impact your priorities if confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. The situation in the Sahel is fluid, and we constantly revisit our strategy considering changing dynamics. Our principles have not changed. We remain focused on working with our African partners and the people to address challenges and support democracy, which is the best foundation for development, social cohesion, prosperity, and stability across the Sahel and the African continent. If confirmed, my priorities will be to strengthen democracy and governance, promote respect for human rights, advance peace and security, and foster economic opportunity and social development.

Question. Do you believe that visa restrictions or financial sanctions against coup leaders responsible for gross violations of human rights, serious corruption, or undermining basic democratic principles is "incongruent" with U.S. efforts to restore democracy and respect for the rule of law in Burkina Faso?

Answer. Sanctions are one tool in our toolkit. Above all, sanctions and visa restrictions are designed to advance policy priorities and promote accountability. They are a means to bring actors to the negotiating table, compel changes in behavior, promote accountability, and convey U.S. values. Our policy and programmatic objectives have been to support citizens and work with the transition government to get Burkina Faso back on the path to democracy. If confirmed, I commit to review all tools available to us, including economic sanctions and visa restrictions, and to recommend the best combination of tools to advance U.S. foreign policy goals.

Question. Do you believe the junta is capable of undertaking reforms that are to form the foundation of a more democratic system?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press the Transition Authorities to hold free and fair elections to usher in a return to democracy. I am concerned by the continued shrinking of civic space in Burkina Faso. Burkina Faso's best path to long-term stability lies in free and fair elections that reflect the will of the people and a return to democratic governance that strives to deliver the public services that address root causes of instability.

Question. If confirmed, will you develop a sanctions strategy for junta leaders and those who undermine a return to civilian rule in Burkina Faso?

Answer. If confirmed, I will develop a strategy to encourage the transition government's return to democracy. I will consider the full range of tools available to me to advance our policy priorities and promote accountability, including sanctions and visa restrictions.

Question. What steps will you take to support accountability for the ongoing human rights abuses happening in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the Embassy's ongoing work to strengthen the ability of law enforcement to operate consistent with rule of law. I will urge the Government to open transparent investigations into all allegations of human rights abuses and violations and to hold those found responsible to account. I will implement an aggressive diplomatic strategy to advocate for the respect for human rights by Burkinabe security forces, state-sponsored militias, and other actors. I will emphasize the requirement that Transition Authorities abide by international human rights law and international humanitarian law, including the distinction between civilians and combatants in warfare, emphasizing the prohibition on attacking those not directly engaged in hostilities.

Question. What steps will you take - if confirmed - to support democracy in Burkina Faso? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. U.S. Government efforts, through foreign assistance programming and diplomatic engagement, focus on enabling and supporting free and fair elections and electoral processes that are peaceful and inclusive. I will support capacity-building for key actors and civil society, training for national elections commissions, promotion of marginalized groups' representation in government, a free press, and voter education and election observation programs. I will encourage policies that increase women's and youth political participation as voters, civil society members and leaders, and office holders at all levels of government. The effect of closing civic space on free and open debate is an obstacle to a free and fair electoral process.

Question. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support investment and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. U.S. Government efforts, through foreign assistance programming and diplomatic engagement, focus on enabling and supporting free and fair elections and electoral processes, including dialogue and roundtables, that are peaceful and inclusive. I will support capacity-building for key actors and civil society, training for national elections commissions, promotion of marginalized groups' representation in government and transition processes, a free press, and voter education and election observation programs. I will encourage policies that increase women's and youth political participation as voters, civil society members and leaders, and office holders at all levels of government. A foundation of transparent, efficient, and accountable governance is essential to building citizen confidence in Burkina Faso's future.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Burkina Faso?

What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Will you and your Embassy team actively engage with Burkina Faso on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory, or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Burkina Faso?

Answer. Civil society are some of most important partners on fighting corruption; countering insecurity; working toward free and fair elections; and promoting respect for human rights, especially of women and children. If confirmed, I commit to engaging robustly with Burkinabe civil society on many issues. In my prior role in Ouagadougou from 2006–09, I invested in training journalists to strengthen Burkina Faso's democracy. This is an issue that is particularly important to me. As such, I will advocate for press freedom and work to ensure actions by the transition government do not undermine fundamental freedoms for the Burkinabe people, including press freedom and freedom of assembly. If confirmed, I will meet regularly with press in Burkina Faso to understand their perspectives on the media environment and ensure they understand U.S. policy in Burkina Faso.

Question. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff each time you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Burkina Faso?

Answer. Yes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO JOANN M. LOCKARD BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

The Bilateral Relationship

Question. In your view, what are the top three priorities for the U.S. bilateral relationship with Burkina Faso that you will advance or maintain as U.S. Ambassador, if confirmed?

Answer. In my view, the top three policy priorities in Burkina Faso are: strengthen democracy and governance, advance peace and security with a respect for human rights, and foster economic opportunity and social development.

The United States is committed to advancing these priorities while countering harmful activities by the People's Republic of China (PRC), Russia, violent extremist groups, and other foreign actors. Embassy engagement focuses on urging the Transition Authorities to organize free and fair elections to usher in a return to democracy.

Question. Please describe your approach, if confirmed, to engaging with the junta in Burkina Faso.

Answer. Sustained U.S. engagement in Burkina Faso is more critical than ever, as a stable Burkina Faso is essential to the region. Burkinabe officials continue to express a desire to partner with the United States. If confirmed, I will continue to engage with the Transition Authorities (TA) to implement our policy priorities. The TA are primarily focused on the security situation. We will continue to promote respect for human rights, the rule of law, good governance, and free movement for humanitarian workers as smart security policy.

Question. Junta leader Captain Ibrahim Traoré recently suggested that he will no longer adhere to the ECOWAS-negotiated July 2024 deadline to complete the post-coup political transition process and hold elections, citing concerns about security and territorial control. What can the United States do to encourage timely and credible elections in Burkina Faso, in your view?

Answer. If confirmed, I will press the TA to hold free and fair elections as soon as possible to usher in a return to democracy. Recent statements from Transition President Traoré that elections are not a priority for Burkina Faso were disappointing. The TA's expressed intent to extend the originally declared transition timeline could bring increased tension with ECOWAS, in addition to damaging trust with the Burkinabe public and the international community. If confirmed, I will continue to press for a return to democratic elections in line with a publicly declared transitional timeline.

U.S. Government efforts, through foreign assistance programming and diplomatic engagement, focus on enabling and supporting free and fair elections and electoral processes that are peaceful and inclusive. I will support capacity-building for key actors and civil society, including to counter disinformation, training for national elections commissions, promotion of representation of marginalized groups in government, a free press, and voter education and election observation programs. I will encourage policies that increase women's and youth political participation as voters, civil society members and leaders, and office holders at all levels of government.

I recognize that security from terrorist threats is a vital component of Burkina Faso's ability to hold free and fair elections but believe insecurity cannot be used to delay the timeline agreed upon with ECOWAS and prolong the transition to democracy.

Question. What U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities remain ongoing in Burkina Faso, either because they are not directly affected by coup-related restrictions under Section 7008, or pursuant to "notwithstanding" authorities? Please include information on legal authorities under which these activities are being conducted, and funding levels where applicable.

Answer. In FY 2022, the Department of State's CT Bureau obligated more than $16 million in foreign assistance funds to strengthen civilian security forces and judicial sectors in Burkina Faso to identify, interdict, investigate, respond to, and prosecute known or suspected terrorist actors and activities. CT programming aims to improve border security and management through increased law enforcement capacity building to prevent, detect, respond to, and disrupt terrorist activities and conduct civilian-led investigations and prosecutions of terrorism cases in accordance with international standards. The Department of State also continues to support Burkinabe security forces with conventional weapons and ammunition security and stockpile management capacity.

Question. Under what conditions, and for what type(s) of program, if at all, would you support a waiver under Section 7008 to permit U.S. military aid for Burkina Faso?

Answer. If confirmed, in considering whether to pursue a waiver of the restriction under section 7008 to permit U.S. military assistance for Burkina Faso, I would work with the interagency to consider relevant conditions, including whether the transition government has demonstrated its commitment to a counterterrorism strategy that prioritizes the safety of civilians and respect for human rights, a return to democracy, and not pursuing a relationship with the Wagner Group.

Question. Are there ways, in your view, for the United States to support greater military professionalism and more effective counterinsurgency tactics on the part of state security forces in Burkina Faso given the current circumstances?

Answer. Through our limited security cooperation, we continue to advocate for respect of international human rights law and international humanitarian law. The Department of Defense continues to collaborate with the transition government in connection with certain military exercises, such as Flintlock, that advance U.S. policy objectives. Our U.S. military personnel at the Embassy can also engage their counterparts on the need for counterinsurgency tactics that prioritize safety of civilians. Most U.S. military training for Burkina Faso is subject to the restriction under section 7008.

Question. If confirmed, what measures will you put in place to ensure that all U.S. foreign assistance provided by agencies under Chief of Mission authority in Burkina Faso, including the Department of State and United States Agency for International Development, are in full compliance with current law, which strictly prohibits the use of U.S. foreign assistance to perform or promote abortion, support involuntary sterilizations, or lobby for or against the legalization of abortion overseas?

Answer. If confirmed, I will take all legislative restrictions, including restrictions related to abortion, very seriously and work with partners to ensure compliance.

Question. Do you acknowledge that pressuring countries to withdraw from the Geneva Consensus Declaration on Promoting Women's Health and Strengthening the Family crosses the line established by the Siljander amendment, which prohibits lobbying for or against the legalization of abortion overseas?

Answer. The Biden-Harris Administration's position on the Geneva Consensus Declaration relates neither to abortion nor to the legalization of abortion. Our concerns relate in part to the opaqueness of process regarding origins and intent. While the GCD quotes from various UN instruments on women, family, and life, including instruments the United States has not ratified, the GCD is not a UN document and does not reflect consensus successfully achieved at the UN, including in Geneva.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to disavowing point four in the U.S. Statement at the Universal Period Review of Burkina Faso, as delivered by Mr. Jesse Lynch on November 6, 2023, which recommends Burkina Faso's withdrawal from the Geneva Consensus Declaration?

Answer. The United States withdrew from the Geneva Consensus Declaration (GCD) in January 2021 and immediately notified GCD members. In the ensuing period, we have become alarmed countries like the Russian Federation have allegedly joined the Geneva Consensus Declaration.

Transparency issues and confusion persist regarding the authority of government officials to accede to the declaration. Bearing in mind the UPR process for Burkina Faso will not be repeated for another five years, the United States' recommendation related to Burkina Faso reaffirming its existing political commitments and clarifying its continuing support for multilateral efforts to advance human rights, gender equality, and global health remains firm.

Foreign Malign Actors

Recent reports suggest that the military Government in Burkina Faso is increasingly collaborating with Russia. The U.S. Government's strategy has been to prevent Burkina Faso's military Government from fully aligning with Russia, notably securing the services of the Wagner Group.

Question. Can you describe the Biden Administration's strategy to counter Russian malign influence, specifically preventing them from drifting toward Wagner for security assistance? Do you believe the strategy has been effective or not?

Answer. We understand the threat of the Wagner Group in Africa, and the Administration is working closely with U.S., African, and allied defense, intelligence, and law enforcement partners to identify all the elements of their network and limit the Wagner Group's (and its remnants or successors') ability to operate in Africa. The Administration's sanctions and interdiction efforts have had a significant impact on Russia and the Wagner Group's ability to continue exploiting African resources and abusing human rights. If confirmed, I will continue those efforts.

Question. Should the military Government in Burkina Faso continue to strengthen its security ties with Russia, what should the U.S. policy response be to bring them back to the table?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize activities—including in support of the AU and African regional institutions—that strengthen democratic institutions, counter disinformation, support the return to democracy, slow the spread of violent extremist organizations, push the Wagner Group from the region, and prevent successor organizations from taking hold.

Wagner and Russia thrive where options are few. If confirmed, I would explore how vital bilateral U.S. foreign assistance could be used both to provide a credible alternative to Wagner and to build civilian institutions to be more resilient to foreign interference, while complying with the restriction under Section 7008 of the annual appropriations act on providing U.S. foreign assistance to countries where a coup d'état has occurred.

I will also continue collaborating with interagency and international partners, in Africa and around the world, to reduce Russia's destabilizing influence, including its use of Wagner. In addition to sustaining cooperation with our traditional likeminded European partners, African partners see Russia's destabilizing influence themselves and are asking for help to address the threat. If confirmed, I will share information on the deleterious effects of the Wagner Group with our partners, reminding them that countries that partner with Wagner become weaker, poorer, more volatile, and less secure. I will continue our work on campaigns to counter disinformation so the Burkinabe people know what Wagner truly represents.

Question. Given the apparent deepening of Russian engagement in Burkina Faso, how will you safeguard U.S. interests, especially in counterterrorism, and support the country's transition back to civilian government?

Answer. Our counterterrorism efforts in Burkina Faso center on training and equipping civilian law enforcement units to respond to threats from violent extremist organizations and protect the population, as well as supporting judicial processes that are in accordance with human rights and international law. We believe—and our Burkinabe partners recognize—that these efforts are valuable. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts.

We know that Wagner is an ineffective counterterrorism partner.

Attacks against civilians in Mali have more than doubled since its arrival in late 2021; Wagner's tactics are creating more recruitment opportunities for terrorists. If confirmed, I will do everything in my power to prevent the Wagner Group from funding Russia's war in Ukraine at the expense of the Burkinabe people.

French media outlets reported the arrival in Ouagadougou of a Russian security detachment in mid-November 2023.

Question. To what extent does this development change the assessment by then-Under Secretary of State Victoria Nuland, after her trip to Burkina Faso in October 2022, that Capt. Traore had “no intention of inviting Wagner” into the country?

Answer. We are aware of the reports, but there has been no confirmation that the detachment was part of the Wagner Group.

Question. If reports are confirmed, how would a Russian security deployment in Burkina Faso affect U.S. engagement with the transitional government? Would you advocate any changes to ongoing U.S. security assistance programs as a result?

Answer. We stand with the people of Burkina Faso in their aspirations for security and stability, which Wagner has shown in Mali they will not and cannot bring. As Secretary Blinken has said, “Every place that the Wagner Group has gone, death, destruction and exploitation have followed.” In Mali, more civilians were killed in 2022 after the Wagner Group’s arrival than in any other year since the conflict broke out in 2012. This outcome must be prevented in Burkina Faso.

We recognize the daunting security challenges Burkina Faso faces and seek to support its security efforts within the constraints of our law and policy.

Question. As Burkina Faso engages in a brutal fight with jihadist insurgents, what steps can the U.S. and international community take to protect better civilians, especially women and children who bear the brunt of this fight?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with civil society to help promote women’s rights and women’s full, equal, and meaningful participation in economic, political, and social life. I will encourage the transition government to enforce laws to counter gender-based violence, to increase women’s participation in all levels of governance, and to take steps to help women and children gain access to health care. If confirmed, I will take steps to ensure women’s meaningful participation in programs organized by the U.S. Government. Engaging directly with women and women-led civil society organizations will be a core component of my efforts.

Question. Are state security forces in Burkina Faso responsible for gross violations of internationally-recognized human rights, in your assessment?

Answer. There have been numerous reports that government security forces and government-sponsored militias, known as the Volunteers for the Defense of the Fatherland (Volontaires pour la defense de la Patrie), committed extrajudicial killings during the year.

Question. If confirmed, how would you seek to promote and protect space for peaceful debate, dissent, civic activism, and political competition in Burkina Faso—especially in light of apparent increases in media censorship, intimidation including death threats against local journalists and activists, and “forced conscription” allegedly targeting critics of the junta?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support capacity-building for key actors and civil society, training for national elections commissions, promotion of marginalized groups’ representation in government and transition process, a free press, and voter education and election observation programs. Our efforts to advance good governance and democracy are facilitated by a population that already strongly values freedom of expression and freedom of religion, as well as a vibrant civil society that seeks to advance good governance and anti-corruption efforts. I will continue to support the Burkinabe in their efforts to express their rights.

Question. Under what conditions, if at all, would you advocate using sanctions authorities under EO13818 (Global Magnitsky) to designate Burkinabe state officials, including military commanders, on human rights grounds? If not, why not?

Answer. U.S. sanctions policy is one tool in our toolkit. Above all, sanctions and visa restrictions are designed to advance policy priorities and promote accountability. They are a means to bring actors to the negotiating table, compel changes in behavior, promote accountability, and convey U.S. values. If confirmed, I commit to review all tools available to us, including economic sanctions and visa restrictions, and to recommend the best combination of tools to advance foreign policy goals.

State Management and Oversight

Question. How do you intend to work with senior leadership at the State Department to address acute staffing challenges at Mission Ouagadougou?

Answer. Due in part to the historically difficult-to-staff situation in Ouagadougou, the Department has changed the staffing pattern to include additional incentives, such as new allowances and R&Rs, for service at the Embassy. As a result, the Embassy expects most positions to be filled by next summer. If confirmed, I will work with the Department to identify additional effective recruitment tools to encourage qualified bidders to serve at Embassy Ouagadougou. Tools I have used successfully in prior assignments include Ambassador and DCM engagement in the bid cycle, such as reaching out directly to interested bidders and participating in recruiting videos and webinars.

Question. Many U.S. missions have been under enormous stress over the last several years, in large part due to COVID. What is your understanding of morale throughout Mission Ouagadougou?

Answer. I understand that despite the current staffing challenges in Ouagadougou, morale is relatively high at Post. The people who serve in Ouagadougou do so because they believe in the mission.

Question. How do you intend to improve morale at Mission Ouagadougou?

Answer. If confirmed, my goal as Chief of Mission will be to maintain the high morale and focus on supporting a cohesive, inclusive team environment for all Embassy staff members, including our Locally Employed staff. I will ensure that my DCM and I are accessible to all employees and intend to use tools, such as regular meetings with the LE staff committee, town halls, and hosting staff at the Chief of Mission Residence for team building events. I will encourage every member of Embassy staff to communicate their ideas and concerns in order to improve our team environment throughout my tenure.

Question. How do you intend to create a unified mission and vision at Mission Ouagadougou?

Answer. I understand that the Embassy team is currently reviewing the strategic goals for Embassy Ouagadougou given the fluid situation in Burkina Faso. If confirmed, I intend to continue that process on an ongoing basis to ensure that the team is working on the most important and current priorities to achieve U.S. policy objectives. I will convene the senior leadership team at least twice a year to review our progress and ensure that all agencies and offices share one unified vision.

In the past, I have also used town halls, team offsites, and cards clipped to lanyards outlining Embassy objectives in both English and local languages to ensure that every member of our Mission team understands and is committed to the success of our policy vision. If confirmed, I will work with the team to find the most effective tools to do this in Burkina Faso.

Question. Management is a key responsibility for chiefs of Mission. How would you describe your management style?

Answer. I have an inclusive and empathetic management style. I encourage every team member to participate in policy discussions and present their ideas. Sometimes the best opportunities to move the needle forward on goals come from ideas on the ground, and I want to make sure all staff have the opportunity to make a difference and contribute to achieving our objectives.

Question. Do you believe it is ever acceptable or constructive to berate subordinates, either in public or in private?

Answer. It is never acceptable to berate subordinates.

Question. How do you envision your relationship with the Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. As a former Deputy Chief of Mission, I know how critical this relationship is for the success of our embassies around the globe. In Ouagadougou, if confirmed, I envision a strong, open, and trusting relationship with the current DCM, who has been at post for almost 18 months, and the incoming DCM, who will arrive in summer 2024. Both have strong backgrounds in Africa policy and French language skills, which compliment mine. I very much look forward to working closely with them to create a unified leadership team for Embassy Ouagadougou.

Question. If confirmed, what leadership responsibilities do you intend to entrust to your Deputy Chief of Mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I envision a unified leadership team in the Embassy Ouagadougou Front Office. Typically, the DCM manages most of the internal coordination and operations for the Embassy, and the Chief of Mission is the public face of the United States to both the government and public. The DCM also needs to be included occasionally in external activities to be able to step into the role of Chargé d'affaires in the absence of the Ambassador. If confirmed, I will work with my DCM to maximize their strengths and identify the most effective areas where they can help me to lead the Mission team.

Question. In order to create and continue employee excellence at the Department, accurate and direct employee evaluation reports (EERs) for Foreign Service Officers are imperative, though often lacking. Do you believe that it is important to provide employees with accurate, constructive feedback on their performance in order to encourage improvement and reward those who most succeed in their roles?

Question. Yes, I believe it is important to provide employees with accurate annual employee evaluation reports. Throughout my Foreign Service career, I have met with each of my direct reports regularly to provide feedback on their ongoing tasks and set aside several times a year to review their overall progress. I also met at least a couple times a year with employees supervised by my direct reports. Finally, I was always available for additional feedback if requested by the employee. I intend to continue this practice if confirmed.

Question. If confirmed, would you support and encourage clear, accurate, and direct feedback to employees in order to improve performance and reward high achievers?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will encourage each supervisor at Embassy Ouagadougou to meet regularly with their employees to provide both positive and constructive feedback on performance. I will also encourage all employees to draft meaningful award nominations for any deserving colleague or subordinate.

Question. It is imperative that U.S. diplomats get outside of posts abroad to meet with local actors, including host government officials, non-government organizations, and local citizens. In your experience, do U.S. diplomats get outside of our Embassy walls enough to fully accomplish their missions?

Answer. It has always been my experience that our diplomats and local staff make every effort, within security allowances, to get out as much as possible. For example, I encourage Consular and Management colleagues to participate in public outreach, such as meeting with students or explaining our travel and contracting regulations to appropriate audiences.

Question. How do you intend to improve the ability of U.S. diplomats to better access all local populations?

Answer. In Burkina Faso, the security situation has limited our diplomats' ability to get out of Ouagadougou. However, recently the Public Diplomacy team organized an event in Koudougou that received tremendous local feedback. If confirmed, I will work with our team to find additional opportunities to ensure that the United States is visible beyond the capital as security conditions allow. In addition, I will encourage the entire team to use every tool at our disposal, including our American corners and social media platforms, to be present and visible with the Burkinabe people even when security conditions do not allow us to be physically together.

LETTER ENDORSING JEFFREY PRESCOTT
SUBMITTED FOR THE RECORD BY SENATOR BRIAN SCHATZ

November 15, 2023

Dear Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member,

On behalf of the White House Fellows Class of 2010-2011, we would like to express our full endorsement of our fellow colleague, Mr. Jeffrey Prescott, as Nominee for U.S. Representative to the United Nations Agencies for Food and Agriculture, with the rank of Ambassador.

Serving in a nonpartisan capacity as White House Fellows together was an unforgettable experience that has continued to be a hallmark for all our careers. We grew together a lot during that one year and our commitment to our government, democracy, and each other remains stronger than ever before.

Over the past decade, we have been proud to watch Jeff demonstrate leadership through some of the most challenging times, including over the past three years of service as Deputy to Ambassador Thomas-Greenfield. Starting as a White House Fellow with us, he has served in senior White House, National Security Council, and State Department roles. In his current role, we've seen Jeff help advance U.S. leadership at the UN where he has helped lead the U.S. response on critical food security and humanitarian crises, which in our experience is where his heart and mind have always been. Having started his career as a human rights lawyer and academic and with deep experience on China, Jeff understands the importance of America's global leadership and the stakes of the competition with China. We've benefitted from his wisdom, knowledge, measured approach, and experience on these issues during our fellowship together and beyond.

We hope you'll get to know Jeff personally, as we have. Raised in Wichita, Kansas, Jeff is widely respected among his colleagues for his relentless work ethic, sharp mind, warm spirit, management style, and for inspiring those that work with him — including us. If confirmed, we are certain that Jeff would be prepared in this new role to advance U.S. priorities and ensure accountability across the food security, agriculture, and humanitarian issues that matter most to the American people.

Samar Ali

INFORMATION REGARDING ROBERT MALLEY,
FORMER SPECIAL ENVOY TO IRAN

SUBMITTED FOR THE RECORD BY SENATOR BILL HAGERTY

11/15/23, 3:57 PM Final Say - Tehran Times

Exclusive: The Letter that Brought Rob Malley Down

Final Say

August 27, 2023 - 22:48 Politics

TEHRAN – In Last July, the Tehran Times exclusively reported that former U.S. envoy for Iran Rob Malley got his security clearance suspended on April 21. The Tehran Times now can reveal that Malley breached three U.S. national security rules.

Despite all the kerfuffle over his dismissal, Malley's episode is one of ambiguity and equivocality, with only a few people in the know about its full dimensions. This has greatly enraged many on the Capitol Hill and prompted them to demand clear answers from the Biden administration regarding the suspension of Malley's security clearance. House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Michael McCaul sent a letter to U.S. Secretary of State Antony Blinken demanding answers on Malley.

"Media reports indicate that Special Envoy for Iran, Robert Malley, was placed on unpaid leave after his security clearance was suspended earlier this year amidst an investigation into potential mishandling of classified documents," the chairman wrote. "These reports raise serious concerns both regarding Malley's conduct and whether the State Department misled Congress and the American public."

McCaul also lashed out at the State Department for failing to inform Congress of the full details on Malley's case.

Despite pressing demands from Congress, the Biden administration remained tight-lipped about Malley.

This is while the story of Malley is full of details showing that he endangered U.S. national security, according to a Memorandum obtained by the Tehran Times.

On April 21, Malley received a Memorandum from Erin Smart, the director of the Bureau of Diplomatic Security, Office of Personnel Security and Suitability, informing him of the reasons why his security clearance was withdrawn.

In this letter, Smart determined that Malley's "continued national security eligibility is not clearly consistent with the interests of national security," according to the document seen by the Tehran Times.

The Memorandum enumerates three reasons for the suspension of Malley's security clearance that includes actions that have to do with personal conduct, handling of protected information, and use of information technology.

"The DS Office of Personnel Security (DS/SI/PSS) has received information regarding you that raises serious security concerns and can be disqualifying under National Security Adjudicative Guidelines E (Personal Conduct), K (Handling of Protected Information), and M (Use of Information Technology)," Smart tersely told Malley.

After explaining the next steps, Smart then asks Malley to turn in his building ID card, any government-issued credentials, and his diplomatic passport.

11/15/23, 3:57 PM

Final Say - Tehran Times

The full details of the suspension of Malley's security clearance are not previously reported.

The Memorandum does not mention examples of how Malley's personal conduct endangered U.S. national security or how he mishandled protected information. But the Tehran Times previously reported that Malley's suspicious contact with his aides of Iranian descent has contributed to his downfall.

Malley had extensive contact with a web of Iranian-American figures, ranging from Ali Vaez and Vali Nasr to Trita Parsi, before assuming office. And his son is still working with Parsi at the Quincy Institute.

During his tenure as Iran envoy, Malley has been in close contact with at least Vaez, according to a previous report by the Tehran Times.

Earlier this month, the Tehran Times revealed a secret document outlining behind-the-scenes efforts by Malley and Vaez to stage what can be called a diplomatic coup in Iran during the 2022 Mahsa Amini unrest.

According to this document, Vaez prepared a list of 14 Iranian figures as part of a broader effort by the State Department to turn up the heat on Iran. The list included many opposition figures along with lesser-known individuals.

The majority of those on the list are not known to the public. Some of them expressed awe after the publication of their names in the Tehran Times, indicating that Vaez had either included their names without their knowledge or they didn't expect Vaez would spill the beans.

The exposition of the list could well be an example of Malley's improper personal conduct or mishandling of protected information. Of course, this remains a speculation given that the Memorandum is cagy about the examples of Malley's infractions.

MEMORANDUM

TO: S/IAG – Robert Malley (ES-00, Special Envoy to Iran)
FROM: DS/SI/PSS – Erin E. Smart, Director
SUBJECT: National Security Eligibility Suspension

This memorandum is to notify you that, in accordance with U.S. government standards set forth in Executive Orders 12968 and 13467, as amended, National Security Adjudicative Guidelines, and Department of State regulations, I, as the Director of the Bureau of Diplomatic Security, Office of Personnel Security and Suitability (DS/SI/PSS), have determined that your continued national security eligibility is not clearly consistent with the interests of national security. Your national security eligibility, including your Top Secret security clearance, is suspended pending an ongoing investigation.

The DS Office of Personnel Security (DS/SI/PSS) has received information regarding you that raises serious security concerns and can be disqualifying under National Security Adjudicative Guidelines E (Personal Conduct), K (Handling Protected Information), and M (Use of Information Technology). The suspension of your security clearance does not constitute a formal revocation and does not indicate that such action is planned.

If, after further investigation and review, I revoke your national security eligibility, including your Top Secret security clearance, you will be given an opportunity to reply in writing and request a review of that determination by the Senior Coordinator for the DS Security Infrastructure Directorate (DS/SI). If the DS/SI Senior Coordinator sustains the revocation of your national security eligibility, you will then be afforded the opportunity to appeal that decision to the Department's Security Appeals Panel.

Pursuant to 12 FAM 233.4, you are required to turn in your building ID card, any government-issued credentials, and your diplomatic passport to DS/SI/PSS.

Ms. Diana Shaw
Deputy Inspector General
Office of the Inspector General
Department of State
2201 C St. NW
Washington, D.C. 20520

Dear Ms. Shaw:

Given the role and responsibilities of the Special Envoy for Iran and the position's importance to securing U.S. national security interests, we were alarmed to learn that the U.S. Department of State has suspended Special Envoy for Iran Robert Malley's clearance, is conducting an investigation into Malley's handling of classified information, and only recently placed Malley on leave without pay. We write to request that the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) conduct an independent investigation into whether State Department officials complied with all appropriate laws and regulations—including policies and procedures described in the State Department's Foreign Affairs Manual (FAM)—with regard to the suspension of Special Envoy for Iran Malley's access to classified information.

On Thursday, June 29, 2023, it was reported that the State Department had placed Special Envoy Malley "on leave without pay, which occurred after his security clearance was suspended earlier this year amid an investigation into his handling of classified material." As one news report added: "A U.S. official said that Malley's clearance was suspended amid a State Department diplomatic security investigation into the possible mishandling of classified information. Another source familiar with the matter said he was placed on unpaid leave on Thursday afternoon." Special Envoy Malley is quoted by news organizations as confirming the suspension: "I have been informed that my security clearance is under review." In addition, it was reported this week that the "FBI is now looking into President Biden's Iran envoy, Rob Malley," including "Malley's handling of classified material."

In light of relevant laws and regulations, including policies and procedures described in the Foreign Affairs Manual, we request answers to the following questions no later than Friday, July 21, 2023:

- (1) On what date was Special Envoy Malley notified in writing, as required by 12 FAM 233, that his security clearance had been suspended? On what date(s) did the alleged event(s) occur that precipitated this review and suspension?
- (2) Did Special Envoy Malley, as required by 12 FAM 233, subsequently turn in all "Department-issued credentials that provide logical or physical access to classified systems or designated classified spaces/facilities and any and all Special Issuance Agency-issued passport(s) to the Office of Personnel Security and Suitability (DS/SI/PSS)"?

- (a) Is yes, on what date?
 - (b) If no, when will this requirement under 12 FAM 233 be fulfilled?
- (3) Was Special Envoy Malley's physical access to "Mahogany Row"—the highly-secured area of the State Department's 7th Floor that includes the offices of the Secretary of State and other top diplomatic officials—restricted?
- (a) If yes, on what date and to what extent?
- (4) Given that the Special Envoy for Iran leads the State Department's Iran Action Group (IAG), was Special Envoy Malley restricted from physically accessing IAG's classified spaces?
- (a) If yes, on what date and to what extent?
- (5) Did Special Envoy Malley, as required by 12 FAM 233, return all classified devices issued to him to the State Department?
- (a) If yes, on what date?
- (6) Given that the Special Envoy for Iran leads the State Department's Iran Action Group, when and how were IAG members informed that Special Envoy Malley's clearance was suspended?
- (7) After the State Department suspended Special Envoy Malley's clearance, when and how were members of the Iran Action Group expressly directed not discuss or otherwise share any classified information with Malley? Please clarify the extent and depth of restrictions conveyed to IAG members and other State Department employees.
- (8) On what date did the State Department place Special Envoy Malley on leave without pay? Why did the State Department make the decision to do so on this date rather than on the date on which Malley's clearance was suspended?
- (9) In the time that passed between the State Department's suspension of Special Envoy Malley's clearance and the State Department's decision to place Malley on leave without pay, what roles, responsibilities, and duties did Malley continue to have with respect to the Iran Action Group?
- (10) On what date did Abram Paley begin serving as acting Special Envoy for Iran?
- (11) Is Abram Paley, in his current capacity as acting Special Envoy for Iran, exercising significant authority pursuant to the laws of the United States?
- (a) If no, did the President or Secretary of State submit, as required by Section 5105 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2022 (Public Law 117-81), a waiver, which would allow Paley to operate in the role for 180 days without Senate confirmation, to appropriate congressional committees not later than 15 days before Paley's appointment?

(b) If yes, did the Secretary of State submit, as required by Section 5105 of the FY2022 NDAA, a notification for temporary appointments exercising significant authority to appropriate congressional committees not later than 15 days after Paley's appointment?

We thank you for your attention to this important matter. We look forward to your response by Friday, July 21, 2023.

NOMINATIONS

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 2023

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 11:05 a.m., in Room 419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Benjamin L. Cardin, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Cardin [presiding], Menendez, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Merkley, Booker, Schatz, Van Hollen, Duckworth, Risch, Romney, Ricketts, Young, Barrasso, and Hagerty.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN, U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

The CHAIRMAN. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will come to order. The Deputy Secretary of State is one of the most critical posts in the Department.

As we advance the United States leadership and address multiple challenges and crises around the world, the State Department's role is more important than ever. We must elevate our ability to compete with China, while establishing strategic lines of coordination.

Ukraine remains under assault almost two years after Putin's illegal invasion. And exactly two months ago, Hamas terrorists launched a brutal attack on Israel. This conflict endangers the security of the entire region and has made an already acute humanitarian situation in Gaza much worse.

These and other challenges require strategic, consistent, and creative diplomacy. That is why it is critical that we fill this role as quickly as we can. I believe that for America's foreign policy to serve our national interests, it must be driven by our values, promoting democracy and good governance, fighting corruption, defending human rights.

These must be at the core of our agenda as we engage in the global stage. Mr. Campbell, if confirmed, I hope you will work to make sure that these values are front and center. I have enormous respect for the work of our diplomats and civil servants do every day.

We must make sure the Department has the support and resources it needs to advance U.S. interests and keep crises from expanding. Food insecurity, severe natural disasters, and extreme heat, made worse by climate crisis, multiply the threats facing the globe. Humanitarian crises have devastated Haiti, Burma, Syria, Yemen, and Sudan.

In Africa, there have been seven coups in the Sahel and West Africa in the past three years, in addition to coups in Sudan and Gambia. Instability now stretches across the continent from the Red Sea to the Atlantic. In our hemisphere, illicit fentanyl trafficking and irregular migration affect cities and communities in nearly every state in America.

The demise of democratic governance and widespread human rights abuses in Venezuela and Haiti require increased attention. At the same time, the United States must not only respond to global crises, but must lead with a proactive agenda, whether it is nurturing our alliance with our NATO and G7 partners, promoting an agenda for economic growth, advancing solutions to climate change, or improving global health.

The Department of State must be operating at full capacity to tackle these challenges. That means keeping morale up while upholding the traditions of providing space for constructive dissent within the Department.

It means fully staffing our mission in Africa and making sure ambassadorial nominees have the relevant regional experience to lead effectively. It means being ambitious and consistent with our resourcing. And it means making sure the Department makes notable progress on diversity, equity, and inclusion from every bureau to every post.

It means getting our diplomats and civil servants the training and skills to address climate, global health, cyber, economic, and the 21st century security challenges. Mr. Campbell, there is no shortage of challenges awaiting you in this post.

So, I want to thank you for your willingness to serve. I want to thank your family for supporting you in this challenge, and I look forward to hearing your plans for carrying out this role if confirmed and helping lead the Department to confront the challenges ahead.

With that, I yield to the distinguished Ranking Member, Senator Risch.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator RISCH. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. And, Dr. Campbell, good to have you here today and thanks for being willing to do this job.

Over the past last few years, the geostrategic landscape has shifted, and the United States has lacked the policies necessary to respond to the emerging threats and challenges.

We need strong leadership that addresses these global challenges rather than focus on promoting policies that appeal to certain domestic audiences. Between Russia's ongoing invasion of Ukraine, China's bid to dominate the Indo-Pacific and exert malign influence, and efforts to undermine the very existence of our close ally Israel, the threats to the U.S. interests and our credibility are dangerously high.

I have been particularly concerned by State's lack of focus on China, its disorganized efforts to stand up new embassies in the Pacific, and lack of a robust support for our allies in the region. With almost 30 years of experience in Indo-Pacific, I want to hear from you how you plan to address our greatest challenge, China.

I believe the President's current policy is headed in the wrong direction.

The Administration assures us it is not falling into the traps of the past, but the economic relationships cannot stabilize all of U.S., China relations. Meanwhile, China continues to expand its influence throughout the global South, including in our own hemisphere.

The recent focus at the APEC summit on establishing working groups with China allows them to weaponize against us. Beijing wants to tie us up in these mechanisms and use them to constrain our policies. As we have seen time and time again on the military to military front, the Administration claims and maybe even believes talks will help avoid miscalculation.

If we were dealing with a good faith actor, that should be true, but we are not. Just days after China agreed to these talks and everybody happily shook hands, it conducted aggressive acts at sea and in the air, risking the lives of U.S. and allied sailors.

This effort is off to a bad start, and I am concerned that China has no interest in doing what should be done. Treatment of U.S. diplomats in China should be another warning sign.

During COVID, China exposed U.S. personnel and their families to extreme, unsafe, and degrading testing and treatment protocols, and senior department leadership allowed such treatment to persist.

That is unacceptable. I want your commitment that you will work with other Department leaders to investigate what happened and pursue accountability. And after the most recent climate summit, I am worried the Department will now support Chinese cooperation, so-called cooperation on climate at the sub-national level.

This is really dangerous. The Administration is giving China a legitimate entry point to peddle its influence in U.S. cities in ways that undermine our national policy. Why would the Department support Chinese efforts to undermine our system of governance?

While you are an Asia an expert, you must also provide leadership on other policy matters in the world.

In Europe, we need to maintain support for Ukraine while ensuring proper and strict oversight of taxpayer dollars. We have been doing that, but vigilance is promised—is most important. Ukraine is fully capable of achieving victory. But until the Administration gets over its fear of giving them what they need to win, its future and that of Europe will remain at risk. U.S. credibility among our allies in Asia is dependent on our success in Europe.

Secretary Blinken's comments about China playing a role in peace discussions in Ukraine are very troubling. China must not and should not be allowed to use Ukraine as a way to anchor itself in European security issues because of some misguided belief that it can calm Russia down.

The United States also needs to ensure there is a well thought out plan for Ukraine's reconstruction and support for its path to self-sufficiency that protects its economy from foreign influence. I support the Secretary's comment in October stating that the U.S. needs legal authorities to seize other sovereign Russian assets in the U.S. for Ukraine reconstruction.

My bill, the Bipartisan, Bicameral Repo Act will provide these authorities. I hope to work with you and with the Chairman to get this bill passed quickly and get these authorities in place.

In the Middle East, the Hamas attacks against Israel and Iran's undeterred attacks against our troops are a clear signal that this Administration's Iran policy continues to fail. The Administration's fruitless nuclear negotiations, unfreezing of funds, weak oil sanctions enforcement, and failure to maintain regional deterrence have emboldened Iran and Iran's terror proxies.

U.S. credibility is weakened. It is a time for the U.S. to dramatically change course and firmly respond to restore deterrence. We must return to a policy of economic isolation for Iran, and deny the regime resources to support regional terrorism, especially Chinese purchases of Iranian oil.

I have been deeply troubled by the efforts by the Administration to provide billions of dollars of fresh cash to the Iranians. I look forward to hearing your thoughts on all of these important issues. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Risch. Our guest today is the—is Kurt Campbell, who is the President's nominee for Deputy Secretary of State. Kurt Campbell currently serves as Deputy Assistant to the President and Coordinator for the Indo-Pacific Affairs on the National Security Council.

From 2009 to 2013, Mr. Campbell served as the Assistant Secretary of State for East Asia and Pacific Affairs. Earlier, he was CEO and Co-Founder of the Center for a New American Security and concurrently served as the Director of the Aspen Strategy Group and Chairman of the Editorial Board of the Washington Quarterly.

Among the other positions he has held during his distinguished career, Mr. Campbell served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Asia and Pacific Affairs. Served both Defense and State Department in similar roles. White House Fellow at the Treasury Department and as Director of the Democracy Office at the National Security Council during the Clinton Administration.

Mr. Campbell was an Assistant Associate Professor of Public Policy at the Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government and served in the U.S. Navy Reserves. Once again, we thank you for your willingness to serve.

Your entire statement will be made part of the record. We ask that you try to summarize your record in about five minutes so we can have a dialog with the members of the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is great. Thank you very much, Chairman Cardin, Ranking Minority Member Risch. I appreciate your comments. I took careful note. I would submit my full statement for the record today. I do want to just begin with a few thank you's, if I might.

During this process, some of this was new to me. I had a chance to spend quite a bit of time with the committees, both the majority and minority committee. I want to thank Damien Murphy. I want to thank Chris Socha. Not only were these important for me, I actually learned a lot. I found it incredibly valuable to hear their perspectives.

I do want to promise that not only will I commit to work closely with you, but I am going to work closely with the committees. I know their role, I know what they have done, and I appreciated the time they have taken with me over the course of the last couple of weeks.

I also just want to say, you have to say thank you to folks who helped you get here. The number of hours the people behind me spent supporting me is incredible.

I just want to say thanks to Nas and to Roy, our two wonderful colleagues at the State Department who helped me with this, and also on my team at the White House, Pat Shilo, Hannah Suh, and Nick DeParle, all of whom put enormous efforts in trying to make me prepared for today, and that is no small task.

The CHAIRMAN. Before you start your testimony, I know two of our colleagues wanted to give some introductory remarks, but first let me recognize, Senator Duckworth.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, thank you for this opportunity to introduce Dr. Kurt Campbell, President Biden's nominee to serve as Deputy Secretary of State.

In the words of Secretary Blinken, Kurt—and I quote, “Kurt is one of our Nation's leading diplomats and strategists, a visionary policymaker, and a renowned leader whose nomination comes at a critical inflection point for our world and America's role in it.” Kurt is no stranger to public service.

For the past two years, he has served as Senior Advisor to the President and Coordinator for Indo-Pacific Affairs at the National Security Council and as Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian Affairs in the Obama-Biden Administration.

He focused America's strategic attention and investment towards the Indo-Pacific, a region increasingly vital for our National Security and prosperity. I am here today introducing him because I have full confidence in his ability to steer the Department of State through a time of significant global challenges and opportunities with creativity, commitment, and dedication to serving our country and one of its most important institutions.

In his current role, Kurt has had the pleasure, and I am sure he would describe it that way in his most gracious and diplomatic terms, of hearing my many opinions and ideas. In our numerous conversations, I have been frank in my assessment of our policy in the Indo-Pacific. Like when I have told him that the United States had neglected too many Southeast Asian partnerships that should be among our closest.

He has listened, even when my feedback has been critical. He has been open to learn and try new things, and he has been creative in his problem solving. And more than that, he has brought energy to his role in the NSC with incredibly impactful actions from AUKUS to our enhanced relationships with the Pacific Islands, making grueling, multiday journeys only to be on the ground for a few hours and far flung island hopping locations that produce immediate results for our National Security.

That makes a real, lasting difference for the security of our Nation. Dr. Campbell has had deep experience outside of government as well. He has served as CEO and co-founder of the Center for a New American Security.

As has been mentioned, Director of the Aspen Strategy Group, Chairman of the Editorial Board of the Washington Quarterly, in addition to his time as Founding Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Asia Group. Somehow, on top of all of this, he has found time to author or edit ten books. All I can say is he must have an enormously patient family putting up with his schedule.

And I want to thank his family, who are here today, for their service to our Nation as well. And finally, Kurt is a veteran of the United States Navy. I could not be more proud as a fellow vet to have him and his service to our government.

I am confident that Dr. Campbell will bring these mirrored experiences to bear as Deputy Secretary of State, along with his many relationships, formidable intellect, and considerable drive, all for the good of the Department and our Nation.

I look forward to supporting his nomination, which comes at a critical time and could not be more well deserved and much needed. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Hagerty.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe that the Chairman and Ranking Member did an excellent job of conveying the many challenges that confront us from a diplomatic standpoint as a nation.

And for that reason, I could not be more pleased than to see Dr. Campbell sitting at this chair as our nominee for this critical post. Dr. Campbell is someone that I have known for more than 30 years. We are both alumni of a program called White House Fellowship, as is his lovely wife, Lael.

Obviously, that program has had an incredible impact on their lives and careers as it has on mine, and it has been a great benefit for me to have had the opportunity to see Kurt's career evolve over the past 30 years' time. We both have a shared interest and love for the Indo-Pacific region.

When I served as U.S. Ambassador to Japan, I called on Kurt many times. I found our conversations when I was in that role to be most helpful, most insightful. And again, I am delighted to see Kurt here in this position, because the Indo-Pacific region is going to play a critical role in our world future.

It is home to 60 percent of the world's population, 50 percent of the world's GDP. And having someone with Kurt's unique insight and capability and expertise in that region I think is going to prove invaluable to us. Something even more important, though, are his character traits and skills. Kurt has a military background, as Senator Duckworth mentioned.

His leadership skills are going to be critical, take in the managerial and operational challenges that he has, running a 70,000 person operation scattered to all ends of the planet. So, I am pleased to see someone with your background, Kurt, who has real experience in the State Department, real experience at the National Security Council and the Department of Defense, and in the private sector.

You also have demonstrated your diplomatic skills here today by having two members of this committee introduce you. My hat is off—it is the first time I have seen that. My hat is off to you there.

I am looking forward to your readiness on day one to be able to do this job. And I think my colleagues will see during the course of this hearing we have a very competent and qualified person today. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. I thank Senator Duckworth and Senator Hagerty for their introductions. Dr. Campbell, you now may proceed. You got an extra minute of time because we have to start the clock over again to five minutes.

STATEMENT OF HON. KURT CAMPBELL, NOMINATED TO BE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. CAMPBELL. Thank you. I always like that extra minute. Thanks to both Senators. That was very gracious and much appreciated. So, I really said thank you to our teams.

I need to say a word of thanks to my wife. I love Brainard, and my wonderful daughter, Coco Campbell. Coco is a sophomore in high school that is missing a test today, so she is pretending like it is a big hardship, but she is actually pretty happy to be here. My wife was in this chair not long ago as she was being confirmed for Vice Chairman of the Federal Reserve. I was back there.

At that time, I actually thought that was the hardest chair. It is incredibly nervous and anxious, but it is actually harder sitting here, so I am here. Anyway, I want to thank them both. They are patient. They are wonderful. I have the best wife in the world. I admire her enormously.

So, let me just say a few things as we get started. It is not lost on me the day that we are meeting. This is December 7th, a day that will forever live in infamy, and it is a reminder of things that we must keep in mind critically in foreign policy and diplomacy.

One is the—is to be constantly vigilant about the potential for strategic surprise. I think it would be fair to say that the United States is exerting itself intensively in the Middle East and Ukraine. I believe those pursuits are necessary. They are critically important.

But it is also the case, I also believe that fundamentally our long term interests over the remainder of the century will play out largely in the Indo-Pacific, and there is the real risk of strategic surprise. And there are countries that are testing us, looking to see if we are preoccupied.

And I want to just commit to you today, if confirmed, I will do everything possible working within the United States Government to make sure that we are not tested and that we stand ready to respond to any challenges to our power, to our allies in the Indo-Pacific more directly.

But I will also say December 7th teaches us other things as well, and that is the redemptive power of democracy. So, Senator Hagerty talked about the Indo-Pacific. We also share a deep love of Japan. I would contend with you that our most important ally and partner on the global stage might be Japan.

We have done a remarkable amount of things from the rubble of that. That has got to give us hope as we persevere in a variety of places around the globe. I would simply say that the thing I am proudest of over the last several years is working with partners on this committee and elsewhere, building resolute, innovative partnerships in the Pacific.

I am sure we are going to talk about AUKUS. I am very proud of AUKUS. I am proud of taking the Quad to the leader level, bringing the maritime democracies of Asia together. I am proud of helping forge a stronger partnership between Japan and South Korea after decades of difficulty and challenge. I am proud of the work I did in Vietnam and India, countries that strategically are more aligned with us. Difficult undeniably, but critically important.

I am also proud of the fact that some of the countries that are the strongest supporters of the United States in Europe today are from the Indo-Pacific. Japan, South Korea, Australia, others have stood with us to support Ukraine in its difficult time.

So, I just want to underscore that I think one of the reasons I was asked to take on these responsibilities is to remind all of us of the importance of the Indo-Pacific more directly. Last couple of things and I will just conclude. I honestly, I approached this with today and just in general with enormous humility.

You have noted, Senator Risch, this is not a job just about the Indo-Pacific. There is an enormous canvas, a massive undertaking at the State Department. I think all of you have worked on the State Department's details, have authored its programs. So, in many respects, I have just an enormous amount to learn.

I will commit to you I will be as honest and straightforward as I possibly can today and in the future. But if I do not know something, I am going to tell you I am going to get back to you. And so, I will do my best to answer your questions today, and I look forward to that conversation.

And then just lastly, I will say, if confirmed, I am going to work closely with the committee and also with the staff. And the reason that I can say this with high confidence is I have already done this. I have spent an enormous amount of time with people on the Hill and on both sides of the aisle.

Our best foreign policy initiatives are bipartisan, and they match the resolve of the Executive and Legislative Branches. I have committed my career to those goals, and if I am committed for this job, I promise to take that forth. Over to you, Senator. Thank you.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Campbell follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. KURT CAMPBELL

Chairman Cardin, Ranking Member Risch, distinguished Senators, it's an honor to appear before you today.

I'm profoundly grateful to President Biden, Vice President Harris, Secretary Blinken, and National Security Advisor Sullivan for placing their trust in me to serve as our next Deputy Secretary of State.

Above all, I'm eternally grateful for the unconditional love and support of my wife, Lael Brainard, our loving family, and our three incredible daughters: Caelen, Ciara, and Coco. These young women are the reason I have dedicated my life to public service. It is for them that I have worked to help build a better world.

If confirmed, serving in this post will be a culmination of a long road of service—a journey that's taken me from the Navy to the Treasury Department, from the Pentagon to the NSC, from the State Department to my appointment as the first-ever Indo-Pacific Coordinator under President Biden.

Outside government, I returned to academia, working primarily on Asia-Pacific issues in the think tank community and the private sector. Through everything, I have seen the importance of America's global leadership.

As the President has said, we stand at an inflection point, when the decisions we make today will shape our planet long into the future.

If confirmed, I will dedicate my time and energy to ensuring that our choices lead toward a world that is more free, open, prosperous, just, and secure.

This is a critical time for international security—and for American diplomacy. There's no shortage of challenges before us: Russia's horrific war in Ukraine; the conflict in Israel and Gaza; the aftermath of COVID-19; the evolution of emerging technologies; the climate crisis; and more.

These challenges circumnavigate the globe, and we are working with partners on every continent to tackle everything from infrastructure and supply chains to migration and security, to the promotion of democracy and the protection of international norms.

Still, the dominant factors animating this era reside in the Indo-Pacific. The centrality of that region and its economic dynamism—not to mention our intensifying competition with China—is why I'm sitting before you as the nominee for Deputy Secretary.

The Biden-Harris Administration is determined to stay laser-focused on the Indo-Pacific, where so much of the story of the 21st century will be written. We must ensure that U.S. leadership remains indispensable in this region and beyond.

We also know that today's challenges are truly global. What happens in one region affects the others. Our competitors are collaborating—just look at China, Iran, and North Korea's support for Russia's war of aggression. We are stronger across-the-board due to our alliances and partnerships, and we will keep growing the connective tissue between them.

If I earn your support, my commitments will be clear:

- First, cooperation and communication between the State Department and Congress will be paramount. This tradition is rich and bipartisan, and I want to thank you and your staff for great conversations leading up to this hearing.
- Second, I will build on the successful initiatives advanced by the Biden-Harris Administration so far—and ensure they are properly resourced and institutionalized—whether it's the Indo-Pacific Quad, AUKUS, trilateral cooperation with Japan and South Korea, NATO enlargement, or deeper ties with India, Vietnam, and Pacific Island nations.
- Third, I will engage in clear and transparent communication with our partners. This is particularly vital in the Indo-Pacific, where discussions are typically more subtle. Recent experience teaches us that direct dialogue is essential.
- Fourth, I will be a strong supporter of Ukraine because its success is crucial to the future of the international order. We must keep working with our allies and partners to equip Ukraine with the means to defend itself and emerge independent, sovereign, democratic, and free.
- Finally, I believe in the value of being present. Of showing up to deepen relationships; deliver messages of deterrence to our adversaries and reassurance to our friends; and conduct the persistent diplomacy required in a world often defined by the unexpected.

I sit before you on December 7th, a date which will forever live in infamy—the anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor. This marker is a reminder of how, even after a horrific assault on our security and freedom, we could summon the strength to endure. How, even out of the ashes of war, we could forge bonds of friendship with Japan and emerge as strong partners in democracy, diplomacy, and peace.

Led by the State Department and its workforce, we can pursue that same path today—of vigilance, resilience, stronger alliances, and a safer future.

I look forward to working with you toward our common goals.

The CHAIRMAN. Well done. Thank you very much for your comments. We are going to start five minute rounds. Let me just point out to the members of our committee that this committee reported out the AUKUS both pillar one and two.

There are now included in the National Defense Authorization Act, so we are very optimistic that we are going to be moving forward with the response that we needed to do to make sure we move forward with the agreements between Australia and UK.

We have questions that we ask you to respond to either yes or no to for the committee. Do you agree to appear before this committee and make official—from your office available to the committee and designated staff when invited?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to keep this committee fully and currently informed about the activities under your purview?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to engaging in meaningful consultation while policies are being developed, not just providing notification after the fact?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you commit to promptly responding to requests for briefings and information requested by the committee and its designated staff?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, I do, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Four for four. That was a good start. Now, we will start the five minute around. So, let me ask you, I want to ask you one question about the normalization talks between Israel and its neighbors.

I joined a group of ten Senators that visited the Middle East shortly after Hamas's horrific attacks on October 7th. We were there to show our support for Israel, but we stopped at Saudi Arabia to try to keep on track the normalization conversations that were taking place between the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and Israel and the United States.

Since that time and during that time, it became very clear to us that one of Hamas's goals in its attack against Israel was to derail the normalization talks between Israel and its neighbors.

So, my question to you, if confirmed, how will you work to make sure that those talks are kept on track and not derailed as a result of the conflict that is taking place in the Middle East?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, thank you, Chairman. Let me just say that I think the initiatives that began in the Trump Administration to help bridge the diplomatic isolation that Israel has experienced are very important, and I think the Biden Administration has sought to build on those.

And you rightly point out that we are at a very delicate stage in our diplomacy between Israel and Saudi Arabia, and other countries as well, and also looking at linking up various industrial energy and transportation lines with India and other countries. The October 7th attacks have been devastating, and obviously the region is now engulfed in anxiety associated with the ongoing conflict.

I will say that I think we can be carefully encouraged by some of the discussions that we have had to date that indicate that there still is a willingness among the key players to restart this process and continue it. And I believe that ultimately our goal will be to entrench Israel diplomatically in the region.

I believe that is in our best interests. I also believe it is in the best interests of the countries that we work with closely in the Gulf, including Saudi Arabia. I think it is understandable that at this moment some of those discussions are quiet and they are difficult, Chairman, but I believe that we must keep that dialog going and also work towards a situation in which once this terrible conflict is resolved, that we can work with those partners to try to re-assemble a Middle East peace and with more stable structures.

The CHAIRMAN. In my opening statement and in our private conversations, I told you about my priorities to make sure that we conduct our foreign policy based upon our values, and that is what President Biden has said. Diversity, equity, inclusion is part of our values.

The Department has a strategic plan, an equity action plan in regards to diversity, equity, and inclusion. It is part of our values that we promote for other countries to do. And yet, when we look at the recruitment and retention at the State Department, it has not always been the showcase of diversity, equity, and inclusion.

So, do we have your commitment as to how you will embrace the need for our State Department to not only espouse these values globally, but to demonstrate through its own internal actions?

Mr. CAMPBELL. You do, Senator. And I would just go beyond that as well. I know you and others have been involved in conversations on how best to think about modernizing and helping make sure that the State Department is able to meet the modern challenges of diplomacy, how to improve retention, how to work with recruitment, how to make sure that our diplomatic corps reflects not only our values, but our diversity.

I just want to commit to you that I know that that legislation is still in the process of internal discussion. I will commit to you to work with that. I do believe that these efforts are important, and it is critical that the State Department keep up with modern matters of innovation, bureaucratically, strategically, given the challenges that we are facing.

The CHAIRMAN. And my last question deals with Iran. Iran is helping Russia in his war against the Ukraine.

Iran is the facilitator for the terrorist operations in the Middle East, including Hamas and its attack against Israel, and Hezbollah, the Houthis, the militias in Syria and Iraq.

How do you see Iran's threat against America's National Security, and what steps do you think we need to take?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Look, Senator, I think I join with all of you is that I am quite concerned by a wide array of Iranian activities. We have seen provocative support to groups around the Middle East.

I have been very personally concerned by Iranian support for Russia in Ukraine. I think, as we heard from Senator Risch, they are increasingly allying themselves—aligning themselves with China more directly. I think at probably every level, Iran is our strategic nemesis.

They are seeking to undermine American purpose in the region, and we must contest that purposely across the board.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Risch.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am going to ask you—I do not usually do this, but I am going to read you some questions that I would like a direct yes or no answer to, and then I have got—I will give you a chance and we will get some other questions to talk a little bit about. First of all, one of the things I want to ask you on the record, will you pledge to provide direct oversight of the Department of State's implementation of AUKUS?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Absolutely, yes.

Senator RISCH. Will you commit to pursuing a thorough investigation into the decisions made by the State Department from 2020 onwards that enable China to subject U.S. diplomats to violations of their privileges and immunities?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Senator Risch, I will. And I must thank you. I have read the letters that you have sent carefully, and I fully intend to do so.

Senator RISCH. I appreciate that. Will you work to remove barriers to U.S. agencies supporting natural gas over Chinese coal?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I believe natural gas plays a critical role as a transitional fuel. I have worked closely with this committee and others to ensure that that is the case, particularly in the Indo-Pacific. Yes.

Senator RISCH. Thank you. Will you agree to providing this committee with a fulsome and detailed explanation of why the Biden Administration did not repudiate Hong Kong Chief Executive John Lee's claim of being invited to APEC?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can give you more background on that now, if that would be useful, Senator.

Senator RISCH. Why do not you do that as a question for the record. Could you do that for me?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is great. I will be happy to do that.

Senator RISCH. That will give me a chance to—

Mr. CAMPBELL. But I do want to underscore very clearly here, we made clear to both China and Hong Kong authorities that he would not be welcomed in San Francisco, and indeed, he would need to be sending a second, which he did. So, I do want to underscore that we never intended for him to participate.

Senator RISCH [continuing]. And I appreciate your public declaration of that right here. This one I am going to not necessarily give you a yes or no. You can talk about it.

And that is, given China's ongoing support for Russia in its war against Ukraine, what are your thoughts as we get to the end, and there will be an end, of discussions regarding ending the war and then on rebuilding Ukraine.

And then I will give you—as a spoiler alert here, I do not think China ought to have any fingerprints on this whatsoever, but I appreciate your thoughts on it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. Look, Senator Risch, I have to say in my discussions with your team, which were extensive, we had very clear discussions around this issue. And I will tell you that they represented your views clearly, unmistakably.

And I do not want to say that they schooled me, but I really came away with a much deeper appreciation and I think a greater sense of what the limitations are for any kind of role that China can or would play in the future.

So, I just want to make clear about that. I will say personally, I am quite troubled by China's support for Russia in its war in Ukraine. I think we can see over the course of the last year and a half or so, China has assisted through a variety of means, not necessarily direct military means, but through, you know, support through commercial and other engagements. But Russia has largely reconstituted militarily.

And even though China purports to be an independent actor that has not taken sides, very clearly, they have taken sides here. And that is deeply concerning to me. So, one of the reasons why, and there are many reasons why we have to be so committed to Ukraine, is that authoritarians take lessons from other authoritarian experiences.

And I will tell you, one of the reasons why countries in the Indo-Pacific are so determined to support Ukraine is because they do not want the same thing to happen in the Indo-Pacific.

So, we have to be vigilant here because this is not just about the future of Europe, which in itself is an enormous and important concern in the United States. We have to be concerned of what lessons that China would take from us if it went badly.

Senator RISCH. Well, I appreciate that, and I think that is well said. I do not think there is any question that China will try to leverage some way into this, trying to bootstrap themselves somehow in Europe.

And so, I think we need to be very vigilant in that regard. Well, my time is almost up, but I do—I know you are on the National Security Council and get to hear about the discussion. What in the world is the Administration thinking about freeing up cash to Iran?

I mean, I was aghast when the Administration started with the first $6 billion, and then even worse than that, after the fighting started in Israel, they are talking about the other $10 billion.

So, help me understand this. I just cannot square that circle. I really cannot.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. Well, look, Senator, I do want to just underscore a few things. I try to lay out clearly what at least my view and I think the view of the Administration is on Iran's role.

I do want to underscore one thing, that despite some discussions in the media and elsewhere, I do not think anyone sees that there is any chance in the current environment to go back to the JCPOA.

It is just not on the table. It is not up for discussion. I hope that at least provides you some assurance for—

Senator RISCH. I think that is pretty straightforward.

Mr. CAMPBELL [continuing]. I agree, but it is still important to state on the record. So, I will also say that the Administration has not lifted any sanctions on Iran. And overall, I think the beginning of the Administration, the number is about 400 that have been applied. I recognize the concerns on the $6 billion.

And I keep—you have heard all the arguments more generally. The money has not been spent. It is still on the account. We have absolutely full confidence that if money were taken out of there, that it would be used specifically for the needs of the Iranian people and for humanitarian concerns.

But I do want to just underscore, Senator, I think we are in an environment right now where Iran is taking a role that is so antithetical to our interests that we must be even more vigilant. We must be sending a military message that provocations will be met and met with stern responses.

We must isolate them diplomatically, internationally. And I just want to commit to you, I do think this is a subject that we need to have close consultations on, and we have got to work with you not just at the end of policy deliberations, but as the Senator said, the chairman said, earlier in the process.

So, I think we share many of the strategic assessments of Iran going forward, and managing this delicate period given the conflict in Gaza between Israel and Hamas is going to be critical.

Senator RISCH. Thank you for that answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Menendez.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

Mr. Campbell, I have not had the pleasure of working with you, so I do not know your views as deeply. And that, and since your position that you are nominated for is global in nature, I have a series of questions I want to pursue to get an understanding of where you are coming from in that regard. For the first time in history, the Republican Majority in the House passed a bill conditioning aid to Israel. At the same time, I have been sensing contradictory messages from the White House as to whether or not President Biden is considering or would consider placing conditions on aid to Israel. What is your view on creating conditions on aid to Israel?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, Senator—I think you know this—that all aid at some level is conditioned. We do not just send money out the door. We go through a careful process both at the State Department and the inner agency. So, I just want to just begin that—

Senator MENENDEZ. I am not talking about.

Mr. CAMPBELL [continuing]. I know you are not. I know you are not. But, my own personal view is, and I believe that this is the view of the President and the Administration, is that we are standing side by side with Israel in an absolutely desperate fight.

That they are facing enormous challenges. The worst attack, terrorist attack in their history. Largest loss of life. I do believe that we have been careful, publicly and very clear privately, about some of our concerns about the conduct of the military operation. And we want to make clear that there is a difference between Hamas fighters and Palestinian civilians also, and particularly children and women.

And those conversations are ongoing. That is what you do with close allies and partners. You speak directly to them of their concerns.

Senator MENENDEZ. I get the conversations, and I am agreeing with them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. So, I think that is—

Senator MENENDEZ. But the question is, is creating conditionality a way to achieve that goal or to hamstring? I mean, look, I am for our military telling Israel how it meets the challenge of Hamas in an urban setting. I am not sure that the standards that we seek of Israel were met in Afghanistan and Iraq by the United States.

So, the question in my mind is, is it—you are going to be sitting in a position not only of authority, but of advice. Would it be your advice to create conditionality on aid to Israel at this time?

Mr. CAMPBELL [continuing]. It would not be at this time.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you this. With reference to Iran, I was heartened to hear some of the things you said. You call it a strategic nemesis. Would you consider Iran an enemy of the United States?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think they are an antagonist, Senator. Yes.

Senator MENEDEZ. Well, yes. So here is a country that continues to violate its obligations under the JCPOA that other countries still maintain with, that is not forthcoming with the IAEA about their enrichment operations where we—I do not think we clearly know what they have and do not have.

Do not come clean with their past pursuit of nuclear weapons. Here is a country that is giving Russia drones in Ukraine. Here is a country through its proxies that is trying to strike at our troops in Iraq and Syria. I do not know how much more it comes before one says, yes, that is an enemy of the United States.

And so, is it time to seek to internationalize the sanctions that we have had? Because we have had sanctions, but of course, internationalizing sanctions are the way in which we ultimately have greater results.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Senator, I cannot disagree with anything that you have said here. And I think if confirmed, frankly, I would welcome the opportunity to have greater discussions on this, both with you and the team at the State Department.

I do want to underscore that we are contesting them significantly. You saw the statement that Secretary Austin made the day before yesterday, that, yes, some of their associated groups do occasionally attack us or try to many times and effectively, but when we strike back at them, we always hit our target.

I just want to say that I think the Administration remains absolutely resolute that we will persecute our interests. We will take necessary military—

Senator MENEDEZ. I appreciate the tit for tat, but I believe a stronger message has to be sent. Let me ask you, do you believe that we should be selling F-16s to Turkey when it continues to not allow Sweden to move forward in its accession to NATO?

When it continues to threaten its neighbor, the Hellenic Republic? When it continues to jail lawyers and journalists and human rights activists and a long list of issues that it faces? Is that in the national interest and security of the United States?

Mr. CAMPBELL [continuing]. So, look, I think you point out the complexities of our relationship with Turkey, and there are some real concerns here. I cannot get into the details. I am not specifically briefed about where things stand, particularly, Senator, on the F-16s.

But I will, if I am confirmed, be involved in those decisions. I will say that they are involved in many things that concern us, and I am confident that we will over time admit Finland into NATO, despite some of the challenges that we have had procedurally. I will also say there is a modest balance here.

There are things that Turkey has assisted us with. They have assisted us in the counter ISIS campaign. They have helped us in the food, the trans-shipment of grain through the Black Sea. They have done some things that have been in our interests.

Senator MENEDEZ. In the weight of it, I would just suggest to you that those few things far—do not outweigh the various elements of which there are negativity. I have a series of other questions.

Obviously, I do not have time for them. I am going to submit them for the record. I would really like a responsive answer so that I can decide on your nomination. Thank you.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Romney.

Senator ROMNEY. Mr. Campbell, thank you for your willingness to continue to serve our country in an admirable way, in an important way. I think we would agree that China intends to replace us probably by mid-century as the economic, military, and geopolitical leader of the world, and they are on a pretty good track so far.

They have convinced a lot of nations that used to be free nations to side with them relative to Taiwan. They monopolized a number of industries. They have been able to achieve dominance of key raw materials for the industries of the future. They have infiltrated various governments around the world.

I mean, they have been extraordinarily successful in their efforts so far. At the same time, they have vulnerabilities, and their demographic reality is a real vulnerability. The debt overhang that exists in China is a real vulnerability.

It is an area which is, if you will, absolutely primed for us having a very effective strategy to figure out how it is they are so successful in accomplishing certain of things around the world. They have got—of course, they have gone into Latin America, to Africa, even to the Caribbean. They are all around us.

And they say, of course, that they are worried about us, you know, constraining them and containing them. Well, it is like, that is so laughable. They are all over the world. They are far more all over the world even than we are in many respects. They also say they want to respect the sovereignty of other nations. That they are not in favor of one nation interfering with another.

At the same time, they smile and their biggest ally, Russia, invading their neighbor Ukraine. So, we cannot take them at their word. The need for a comprehensive strategy, not necessarily in the public, but one behind the scenes, has never been greater.

And I appreciate your working with members of my staff and others to develop that strategy, but Senator Menendez and I drafted a bill, as you know, to have that strategy developed and to be provided to this committee by January 9th—excuse me, July 9th of this year. It is later than that now.

We have not received it. I know you are working to try and make that happen. What is the holdup and when will we receive it yet?

Mr. CAMPBELL. First of all, let me just, unbelievably graciously put. I probably deserve worse. I am committed to get you both the unclassified and classified versions of this, and I will deliver it to you personally. I, too, have been a little bit frustrated.

You know, you do not understand every element of government. This is something that should be shared and done in consultation. I will tell you, we have that strategy. We have followed it.

And look, I think you paint a picture of challenges that we face, but it is incredibly important for us not to be completely discouraged and to have confidence in what we are doing. And I will just give you the other side of that ledger, if I can, Senator, just very quickly.

I think we have made incredible investments in technologies, the key technologies of the 21st century. We understand that this is going to be the high ground where the battle for supremacy will be fought. We are investing in them.

We are trying to restrict the most critical of those technologies from going to China. I think that has been largely a success, bipartisan success. Senator Young leading the way. Number one.

Number two, look, I would stack up what we have done with allies and partners with anyone and look at the countries that in the past that had really flirted with a different kind of relationship with China and who have made fundamental decisions to be with us, Great Britain and Australia.

AUKUS is for a significant, inspirational, powerful program, not just on submarines, but on technology for the future. India, a key country for the 21st century, working much more closely with us.

Japan and South Korea, other countries in Southeast Asia. And what we have done in Europe, all of whom I think some of the blinders have come off about what they are dealing with respect to China. We have huge challenges in the global South, as you rightly point out, we have begun to diversify in terms of supply chains and critical minerals.

But we are doing better in the contest than I think sometimes we tell ourselves. And I will say just, Senator, you are—you understand the history of the region of the Indo-Pacific. The one theme that has permeated discussions for 50 years in Asia was the idea of American decline.

People thought we were in decline during the Korean War. They thought we would never recover from the Vietnam War. Reagan brought us back. Cold War, people thought that Japan was the ultimate victor.

Each time there is something about the American character, our inventiveness, our ability to reinvent ourselves that have propelled us forward. I have confidence that we can do that again. China believes that we are in hurtling decline. It is critical that we prove otherwise.

Senator ROMNEY. Thank you.

Senator COONS. Welcome, Dr. Campbell. I am grateful for the opportunity to be with you today. And grateful to Lael and your family, your daughter, Coco, and others for their support and for the great conversation we had.

I will confess, I have not read your ten books, but I look forward to reading several of them. You have laid out in great detail the remarkable record you have at helping stand up innovative and resolute partnerships between the United States and key allies and partners in the Indo-Pacific.

And I think you are the right man at the right moment for this challenge for us. I will also point out that December 7th, the anniversary of the Pearl Harbor attack, is also the anniversary of the moment that Senator Vandenberg, a Republican from Michigan, who was chairman of this committee, dramatically changed his position from an America First isolationism, urging that we reach an accommodation with Japan, to recognizing that our only path forward was a bipartisan one, locking arms across the aisle here and looking to the world with a common determination to advance freedom.

Kurt, I am very worried that right now the Senate stands on the precipice of failing to provide critically needed support and supplies, funding, and material for the Ukrainians who are fighting Russian aggression, for our partners in the Indo-Pacific, for Israel in its fight against Hamas, and for the humanitarian needs of dozens of countries.

Just briefly, could you say what would the consequences be for our global leadership if we were to fail to provide the support critically needed by our allies at this moment?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, Senator, thank you for that and thank you for your nice comments. Look, the truth is the struggle, the desperate struggle in Ukraine is no longer just a regional conflict.

Many outside players are hugely invested. What is different about this conflict, not only have we seen substantial resources from Europe, even greater than from the United States, but huge support for the Indo-Pacific because they understand the stakes about how this region, how Europe is increasingly linked to the Indo-Pacific more generally.

So, myself personally, I worry that the wrong lessons will be taken. If you look at the doctrine that was published by China and Russia before the Beijing Winter Olympics and really look at it closely, it is a document out of the 1930s where big countries should dominate smaller countries on their periphery.

That is antithetical to everything we believe and support. I will say, one of the things that I have appreciated and enjoyed the most is that, yes, this is a highly contested time. There is lots of signs of dysfunction.

But I have found the discussions with this community both together and with individual Senators, I think there is much more that unite you all than divide you and it has given me personally much more confidence about the road ahead.

And so, I know that this period is incredibly intense and difficult. I am not involved in those deliberations. I have confidence that we are going to find a way to basically secure support for Ukraine, appropriately working with our allies and partners, make sure that we take the necessary steps standing with Israel, but also planning for the future in Gaza and elsewhere.

I am confident the President said yesterday he is prepared to make substantial compromises with respect to the border. And we have critical needs in the Indo-Pacific to stand with Taiwan, to support the Philippines.

So, I think the comprehensive nature of this budget request will affirm America's strategic purpose in ways that are deeply consequential and will go right at the heart at the criticisms and the hopes of those who wish us ill.

Senator COONS. Thank you, Dr. Campbell. Two quick follow on questions, if I might. And I agree with you that addressing border security is a critical part of our path forward. A key piece of the supplemental is also funding for the Compacts of Free Association States, the Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Palau.

I think it is critical that we pass robust funding to strengthen these valuable partnerships with Pacific Islands. What would the impact be on our position in the Indo-Pacific if that were knocked out of this package, or if we were to fail to pass the COFA funding?

Mr. CAMPBELL. So, first of all, I want to thank you. I also want to again, thank Senator Risch and his staff. I have gone through all the correspondence, all the suggestions about how we step up our game in the Pacific, something that is actually very near and dear to my heart. I am proud of the efforts I have taken over the last two years in making sure that we do better in the Pacific, a place that we have enormous strategic, historic, moral responsibilities.

The COFA agreement, as you know, provides support for the three nations in the Northern Pacific critical to our security. I will simply say to the Senate that literally China is waiting. At the moment that we are unable to fulfill our commitment, to fulfill the COFA arrangements with these countries, arrangements that we have enjoyed for absolutely for decades.

That keeps these countries in our purview that work closely with us. You could not ask for a better ally in partner than Palau, President Whipps, a son of Baltimore, wants to be with the United States. He needs this agreement.

And if we do not get it, you can expect that literally the next day, Chinese diplomats, military, and other folks will be on the plane landing in each of these things, trying to secure a better deal for China. We need to do this.

Senator COONS. Well, thank you for your focus on the region. I look forward to traveling either with you or informed by you.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Great.

Senator COONS. Last topic, bipartisan legislation that Senator Graham and I worked on for years, created the Global Fragility Act.

I am encouraged by your service at a senior level in the Pentagon as well as your service in the Navy as you move towards a senior position in the State Department, because the whole goal of the Global Fragility Act was to demonstrate that the strategy that we followed across several Administrations in Colombia of pulling together jointly across State, AID, DOD in partnership with a country for a long period of time, was the best way to deal with a fragile state.

As you know, I have been very frustrated by the initial period of GFA implementation, both the selection of some countries that struck me as well outside the scope of it and the difficulty getting buy in, and in particular from senior DOD officials.

Will you commit to working with me on Global Fragility Act implementation, including improving interagency coordination, targeting sustained funding towards these countries, and making sure that we prove out the thesis underlying it that was the result of a two year-long study and development process by senior experienced diplomats, that we have to figure out a way to get a 3D strategy right long term?

Mr. CAMPBELL. First of all, Senator, I want to thank you for your leadership and creativity in putting this piece of legislation together. It is bipartisan, signed into law by President Trump. I actually was very grateful.

I argued that one of the countries that I worked on in the Indo-Pacific, Papua New Guinea be included in that for a variety of reasons, has vast oil and natural gas reserves, but continues to be one of the poorest countries in the world. Why is that? And so, how to think about that going forward.

I think what is most inventive and important about this legislation is that it encourages, it requires a degree of coordination between three critical agencies, AID, the State Department, and the Department of Defense.

If I am confirmed, I think this is a deeply innovative piece of legislation that should be further implemented. And frankly, we are dealing in Africa, Latin America, the Pacific, with increasing number of fragile states that need greater support. We have got to be careful how we do it. We just cannot pile resources on.

But a constructive, multifaceted strategy like that you have laid out, that is the right approach. I am committed to it.

Senator COONS. Thank you. I look forward to working together on coastal West Africa, on U.S. engagement with the global South, on PNG and on other countries, and I look forward to supporting your confirmation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, Senator.

Senator HAGERTY. Thank you, Senator Coons. And again, welcome, Dr. Campbell. It is good to see you here.

I think you and I share the understanding of how critical it is to build bridges between our Indo-Pacific allies, how critical it is for us to unify our national strengths, how critical it is for us to work together to advance our common economic and National Security interests in the region.

One area I wanted to speak with you about today is regarding energy cooperation between the United States, Korea, and Japan. I would particularly like you to articulate your vision to advance energy cooperation and energy security among the three nations.

And also, just specifically your thoughts on nuclear and LNG.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. Thank you very much, Senator. And I, if I could just take a moment to thank you for your leadership on Indo-Pacific issues, but also for your support for Japan. It is a country that is dear to both of us. It is a critical partner.

We cannot be successful in the Indo-Pacific unless we work closely with them. They are your first—when they come to the United States, your office is their first stop. I am happy to see them after. So, thank you for what you have done. Let me just say that my own personal view, and I think the view increasingly in the Administration, is that given our urgent and immediate challenges, we need to double down on transitional fuels.

And I know some people do not like to use that concept with respect to natural gas. We ultimately want to go to renewables. But in this critical period, taking advantage of vast stores of American energy and other places more aligned with the United States, working with Japan and South Korea to ensure that those energy supplies are safe and secure.

I will note, and Senator, I know that you know this, and you encourage this as well, when the energy crisis got most difficult in Ukraine last year, it was Japan and South Korea that agreed to do complex swaps so that they provided that urgent and badly needed energy to Ukraine.

We need to support Japan and South Korea more here. We also need to work with them on innovative nuclear projects. I think you know that there are some interesting projects that we are now working on. Our friend Dan Poneman has pioneered work on small nuclear reactors. Much safer.

Japan has invested in—you know, basically developed some innovative technologies. There are some business challenges, some companies and struggles with, you know, ultimate issues associated with government backing.

Ultimately, we highlighted this in our engagements with both individually with South Korea and Japan. As the trilateral partnership builds momentum, this is going to be at the center of what we intend to do.

Senator HAGERTY. Just a quick point. I have noted the discussion of the trilateral national laboratories cooperation. This is parochial question because Oak Ridge National Labs is in my home State, but do you have a thought of how our laboratories will be cooperating?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. In fact, I think you know this, the person that is champion this thing the most is Ambassador Emanuel, who served us with distinction. He wants that lab to play a new role. I do, too.

Senator HAGERTY. Great. That is great. If I could turn it again to just an area where I want to congratulate you, and that is on the role that you played in the Camp David summit, bringing together the leaders of South Korea, Japan, and the United States. I think that was an important step.

I was pleased to engage in a complementary trilateral conference in San Francisco in the margins of APEC. You and I discussed that we had some 40 CEOs, National Security leaders and government leaders that attended that.

And I see great promise and great potential there. One thing that I am curious about, though, is that China is now trying to establish its own trilateral conference with leaders in South Korea and Japan. I would be just curious in your perspective what China's goals here might be.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, thank you. And in fact, Senator, I am sure you know this, but their trilateral far precedes ours. The trilateral that went on between China, Japan, and South Korea was very active in the 2000s.

You know, China had withheld certain engagements from both South Korea or Japan, and so that has sort of fallen a little bit by the wayside. But the Chinese have noted the actions that we have taken. I would say among all the things that we have done, they look at our engagement with Vietnam, working more on the security side, what we have done with India, these concern them. The thing that I think they recognize has the potential, the most significant in changing the security architecture of Asia is if Japan and South Korea can finally and fundamentally put their animosity behind them to focus on the future in everything, energy, technology, security, people to people, education.

This is our goal. I do want to thank you for what you are doing. I do want to also just say it is in our interest to commend more publicly the risks and the courage that have been shown by Japan and South Korea.

They need to recognize that we fully support at every possible level what they have done, and we seek to strengthen it as it goes forward. Again, I am confident that China will be unsuccessful in building the kind of bonds of trust that we are doing now with Japan and South Korea.

Senator HAGERTY. Indeed. I appreciate that confidence. I look forward to supporting your nomination.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Thank you very much, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. As you can tell, members are moving in and out because of votes on the floor—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I fully understand, Senator. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN [CONTINUING]. VOTES ON THE FLOOR OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

Senator Ricketts.

Senator RICKETTS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Dr. Campbell, for your willingness to continue to serve our country. And I appreciate your comment that you made about people thinking this country was in decline and being wrong numerous times in the past.

I remember being a young business school student in the late 80s and Japan's manufacturing base was going to take over the world. And obviously, they are a very important ally, but did not work out quite the way people were predicting at that time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Senator RICKETTS. Anyway, so when you and I spoke in my office, we talked about what we need to do to deter the People's Republic of China with regard to any sort of military aggression toward Taiwan.

And we talked about a number of things, not only the preparedness of our military, but what we need to do with regard to investments in technology, working with our partners and allies. What we need to do with regard to our economic and investment policies and could not agree more on those things.

And you have highlighted some of the very positive developments that have occurred that you have participated in with regard to our partners and allies, but there is one area that we have not made progress, where we have frankly failed, which is trade.

And the People's Republic of China is not sitting still on this. You know, they announced their regional comprehensive economic partnership, which is their 15 member free trade bloc. In response, the Administration has put together the Indo-Pacific economic framework.

This is really aligning regulations and standards around four pillars. It does not include things such as market access or tariffs. And my understanding is that the APEC conference, they had hoped to be able to roll out the Indo-Pacific economic framework pillars and that got put to the backburner, so that has not happened.

But maybe you could talk a little bit about—you know, certainly States like Nebraska, we want to see more open access and reduce—reduction in tariffs and so forth. We also, we hear that from our allies. They would like to see the same thing. I was a supporter of TPP. I believe you were as well. Talk to me about what are our allies getting with the Indo-Pacific economic framework, and do we need to start addressing things like market access and tariffs?

Mr. CAMPBELL. So, first of all, Senator, I do want to thank you for the meeting I had with you, and I want to commend you for really focusing on the Indo-Pacific. I do think this—the thing that we need to underscore is that this body has a long history of very distinguished members who are committed to the Indo-Pacific.

And it is nice to see people following in the footsteps of Senator Lugar, Senator Inouye, and others. So, I wanted to thank you for that. And I note very clearly your State's interests in broadening agricultural and other kinds of engagements in the Indo-Pacific, so I support that.

So, I do want to just take a moment to stand back, and the larger picture in many ways is quite impressive. We have—we are the largest investor in the region. Last year was, by most measurements, the largest trade year in our history with the Indo-Pacific. It was much more diverse than in the past, not just with China, other countries.

So, we are diversifying. We are working with allies and partners on diversifying supply chains and issues associated with critical minerals, working in technology. So, we are part and fully integrated into the Indo-Pacific economic and commercial picture. So, we have to begin with that. But the truth is that the region expect us to play a role as a confident, engaged player on commercial and economic matters.

I think, if I am confirmed, I am going to commit to work with you and others—to see if there is a bipartisan way forward. I think you, in your remarks, I think you recognize implicitly that there are challenges on both sides of the aisle, questions about whether trade or certain kinds of trade agreements, are they good for the United States? Do they benefit our workers?

I think we have to take that into consideration, and we have to see what is possible. I will also say, I think there are elements of IPEF that are important on diversifying supply chains, on looking at how taxation policy works.

These are critical operating matters, but the truth is there is more that we can do. I am committed to working with you on that going forward.

Senator RICKETTS. Is it fair to say that you think IPEF is important, and I am not trying to argue that regulations and standards are not important, but that we also need to look for a way to move forward on other additional trade agreements to be able to counteract what the PRC is doing in the Indo-Pacific?

Because I think our allies are expecting us to be able to provide an alternative. I do not believe that they want to do these things with China without having us have the same opportunities. And I think they prefer to be a trade partner with us rather than the PRC.

Mr. CAMPBELL. So, look, I can say this, Senator. I think it is absolutely essential that in our future, that we are deeply, fundamentally intertwined and engaged with the commerce, business, and economics of the Indo-Pacific. And if we are not, we will not succeed.

Senator RICKETTS. Yes. And I realize I am out of—oh, Chairman is busy anyway—

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir. Go ahead.

Senator RICKETTS. So, I am out of time, but one of the thing is I will just highlight—

The CHAIRMAN. We are just negotiating in here.

[Laughter.]

Senator RICKETTS. One of the reason I think it is important is, as the former governor of Nebraska, I can tell you that the PRC was a terrible trade partner. They were a terrible trade partner.

They certainly have not lived up to their agreements they agreed to under the Trump Administration, but even before that, I can tell you the products they bought from us, they would buy a lot and then they would cut us off. I mean, it was just—they were not a good trade partner.

So, I think there is an opportunity for us to be able to push back on them, and we can be successful, but we have got to make sure that we are working with our partners and get these trade deals done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Thank you, Senator.

Senator RICKETTS. Thank you, Dr. Campbell.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Merkley.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. And thank you for your service and your testimony. Do you and does the Administration support the ability of Palestinians from Gaza to be able to return to their homes in Gaza when Gaza starts to rebuild?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. First of all, Senator, thank—I do want to thank you for hosting me for breakfast, and we are taking steps to make sure that your famous breakfast order is enshrined in the menu. And so, thank you for that.

Senator MERKLEY. The trifecta.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The trifecta, right.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Mr. CAMPBELL. So, look, I believe that is our policy. I think that is the just and right thing to do. And I believe that the United States will need and will want to work with other partners to ensure that that ability is possible.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. And will the U.S. work with Israel, with the defense forces, with the national police to make sure that any armaments we provide, and particularly small arms and semi-automatic or automatic machine guns, are not transferred to settlers outside of the INP and the IDF?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Senator, I—to be honest, I do not know enough about that, those particular provisions. I know that we are working closely with the Israelis to ensure that actions taken seek to minimize damage to women and children, to civilians. I will need to get back to you directly on that specific question.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. I will just point out that given the increased settler violence on the—a lot of attacks on Palestinian villagers, that I would be very concerned, and I know many Americans would be very concerned for our arms to be transferred, that are intended for the IDF and the INP, to be transferred to settlers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will say I have seen the statements of Secretary Blinken and others condemning those actions against Palestinian civilians. I share your concern here.

Senator MERKLEY. So, the Administration has expressed concern about how the expansion of settlements and outposts and checkpoints make the vision of two states for two peoples a very difficult path.

Would it make sense to have an annual report that tracks the expansion of existing settlements, the establishment of new settlements, checkpoints, and outposts?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Look, I think consultation with the Hill on this critical set of issues is essential. And I believe that as we go forward, the only viable way is a two state solution. It is going to be extremely difficult, as you point out, highly contentious, but it is the only way to ensure that the region can live in peace.

I think that there are going to be myriad ways that the Executive Branch needs to work with partners on Capitol Hill to ensure that this is truly a national effort. And so, I would support any appropriate communications or engagement.

Senator MERKLEY. And one of the reasons I was framing the questions in this way in terms of the Administration, because we have heard folks in the Administration say, we do not want conditions on the bill, but we are intending to press hard on a series of key issues.

I was trying to clarify whether these were the types of key issues Administration is planning to press on.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. So, look, Senator, I can say that I know that there are discussions underway now on how we are thinking about the way forward after this terrible conflict concludes.

Some of that, frankly, awaits if I am confirmed. And so, I would like to just suggest to you that if confirmed, I promise to make sure I am deeply familiar and engaged in those discussions, and then will engage with you as such.

Senator MERKLEY. Well, I want to restate how absolutely horrific the attacks were by Hamas. And I also want to be very clear that the only future peace, based on positive aspirations for the Israelis and the Palestinians, does involve two states for two people and we have to work very hard towards that, and as you have stated.

Turning to Ukraine, it was in 1938 when Chamberlain went to Munich and said to Hitler, we will look the other way, we will declare peace in our time. You go ahead and take that piece of Czechoslovakia.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Senator MERKLEY. I am concerned that if we fail to provide support to Ukraine, which will also affect the whole Atlantic alliance, it will drive cracks in NATO, it will certainly undermine the support of other nations for Ukraine, that there is an equivalence to saying to Putin, well, you can take Ukraine.

And I think I consider this possibility of a Munich style moment, this style of appeasement of Putin, to be an enormous mistake, should we fail to provide support to Ukraine. Is there anything to my analogy that you find resonance in?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Senator, I completely identify with what you have laid out. I am of a generation that are very familiar with the false promises of appeasement in the 1930s.

I can remember in debates that in—at Oxford and elsewhere that the harshest criticism that someone could make at you or to someone, is where is your umbrella? Like the umbrella that Chamberlain carried into Munich. So, I do believe authoritarians follow closely, take lessons.

And I think that this is an intense test of American commitment. I will say, I think through the support of this body and others, and the bipartisan efforts that we have seen, I think if we look at the last two years, this—we have done remarkable things and we can do more working closely with our Ukrainian partners, and I am committed to support that.

And I think there are strong supporters on Capitol Hill to see this through as well.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Duckworth.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Dr. Campbell, when we met in my office recently, we discussed the importance of the United States continued commitment to implementing the Indo-Pacific strategy, but also the challenge of maintaining some sort of engagement with the PRC.

Obviously, they are our greatest near-peer competitor. Obviously, they challenge us on National Security, but we also have to be able to work with them collaboratively across a region to do things like counter climate change or counter the next global public health crisis, deal with economic crises as well.

So, to live up to our enormous potential, we need to approach this work through a coordinated whole-of-government approach. As you move from the NSC to the State Department, you come with very unique experiences, having been in DOD yourself.

I would like to invite you to speak briefly to how, if confirmed, you will ensure robust interagency coordination and continued strengthening of our position and our commitment to our partnership in the Indo-Pacific.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Thank you. Thank you, Senator Duckworth. I do want to just underscore one thing that—the Senator said at the outset that is important. We have had a series of consultations.

I think what I have been most pleased and impressed by in our private meetings, Senator Duckworth has come right at me and been clear about areas where we need to do better. And it was in 2021 that the Senate came and said, you are not engaging Southeast Asia effectively enough.

You need to do better. It was from those conversations that President Biden decided to invite all the ASEAN leaders to Washington, D.C. for the first time, a major diplomatic initiative that we have carried forward.

And so, I do want to underscore that these dialogs and discussions are important in the formulation and execution of our strategy. So even though it is painful, I want to thank you for that, Senator.

Look, so for us to be effective in everything we do, there is a need for a much higher degree of coordination among all our tools of government. And so, it has been said before, you know, we have one agency that is massive, huge, with huge resources at the Department of Defense, and other agencies with less resources.

Nevertheless, there is huge capacity, economic, diplomatic, military, that need to be coordinated, particularly in the Indo-Pacific. I will say that if you look at much of our strategy, they involve key moving pieces of moving parts in each of the bureaucracies that I have laid out and beyond that.

I do want to commit to you that if I am confirmed, I will continue to work as part of a collegial and engaged effort to ensure that the United States maintains a purposeful engagement in the Indo-Pacific.

And I also want to thank you that you have constantly reminded us that even though we are facing hugely hard challenges elsewhere, we have to be able to focus on the Indo-Pacific, and I am committed to do that.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. How do you assess our current staffing levels and resourcing for diplomatic missions across the Indo-Pacific? You know, the ASEAN mission, you know, I have talked to you about this.

I think the ASEAN mission itself is under—understaffed. And also, how will you approach the challenge of balancing our need to invest in the region, even as we address other urgent crises around the globe? And I would say that our Africa experts will say that we are understaffed there, too.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. So, look, Senator, I—you know, there is a tendency—I worked in the Indo-Pacific, so I noted the lack of staff in the Pacific, the difficulty in setting up diplomatic offices there. I thought we had to be more innovative. I look at certain regions that I think maybe might be, you know, have more staffing.

I am struck that some of our hardship posts in the Pacific and Africa, we have had difficulty in filling those. And so, I recognize that it is not something you can look at just that one place. You have to look at the totality. I come down to the—with the inescapable conclusion is that we need to recruit more people. I love the idea of an innovative effort to look at how to modernize as part of that.

Does that mean bringing in mid-career people? Does that mean being able to recruit from other walks of life like the military and the like? I personally see, and I have seen it up close, and I will just give you one quick story if I can, Senator.

I remember last year I went to the Solomons for the first time. We landed in our plane. We got off. We were met at the airport by one diplomat, probably the most hard charging guy I have ever met. And he was exhausted. He was a one person diplomacy in the Solomons, one of our most contested places. Was living in a hotel with his dog.

And as we drove into town, we went by the gleaming Chinese embassy. Dozens and dozens of staffers. We just have to do better. We have to be able to find more resources and make sure that we get these people out into the field. And so, look, if I am confirmed, I am committed to doing that.

I will do everything possible to make sure that our best and brightest, our most diverse, are serving in the key regions that are being contested that define American purpose.

Senator DUCKWORTH. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I am going to turn the gavel over to Senator Schatz. I apologize. There are some additional—

Senator BOOKER. I object.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. You do not get the right to object.

Senator BOOKER. Okay.

The CHAIRMAN. Sorry about that. I would like to, but there is another issue affecting our committee there on the floor at this particular moment that I am required to be over for. I want the members to know they have until the close of business tomorrow, questions for the record.

And Dr. Campbell, I would ask that you get them back as quickly as possible and as thoroughly as possible, because we are trying to expedite the consideration of your nomination, considering the importance it is to the State Department.

And Senator Risch and I are going to try to expedite the consideration, but it will require you to make sure you get your answers back as quickly and as thoroughly as possible.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We will get it done. Chairman, thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. And with that, I was going to recognize Senator Booker, but after his comments, he is going to have to wait a little bit longer. Senator Booker.

Senator BOOKER. All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am sorry to see you go. I am going to go quickly before the power goes to Schatz's head. It is great to see you here, especially with the two women at your back.

You kind of did a daughter diss. She is sacrificing not taking that test today that she was prepared for, and she was going to ace, but she decided to come here to support you, and I am delighted. It is extraordinary to see that.

I am very excited about your leadership. I am very grateful and excited to vote for you on the floor. I just want to try to use this as an opportunity to look into the future and talk about the continent of Africa.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Senator BOOKER. I know your specialty is Asia and that is such an important part of the globe, but I do not think most people understand the importance that the emergence of Africa will have in the next 50 years. I mean, even by 2050 alone, they are going to be so large that one out of every four people on the planet Earth will be Africans.

It is a country that has this youth bulge, while China is declining demographically, Europe is declining demographically. We have demographic challenges here. That youth bubble in Africa really is going to have an extraordinary shaping element on all of humanity.

And then you add into that arts and culture, you add into their booming tech sector and innovation sector. You add into that their control of critical natural resources for the future of our planet.

What is astounding to me is how we, who are only 4 percent of the globe, of population, do not do more to understand that our growth, our future, not just our security, but the upside of the possibilities of humanity in showing up more in partnership with African nations.

And so, could you please let me—help me understand how you view this? And clearly, in my opinion, looking at China's activities on the continent, even Russia's activities on the continent, we are not necessarily matching in terms of focus, energy, investment, partnerships to the degree that I think we should do counter those influences on the continent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Senator, thank you very much. I do want to just begin by saying I am grateful that my daughter Coco is here. And, you know, it is supposed to be the case that the parents teach the children. There is not hardly a week that goes by, I have rarely seen a more disciplined person.

You know that old adage, do your job. Coco always does her job. Never has to be reminded. I am the one who has to be reminded to do my job. Senator, I have had a number of conversations with you.

One of things that we have not discussed is that I am actually an old Africanist. My Ph.D. thesis at Oxford was on Africa.

Senator BOOKER. Oh, wow.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. I remember I did get a call a few years ago saying, congratulations, your thesis has won an award, a typically British call. And I thought, oh, fantastic, what is the award? It is a book made most relevant by history. So, it was Soviet policy towards South Africa.

But, I have traveled extensively in the region. I have gone overland across Africa several times. I spent a lot of time in East Africa and the assistance programs. I know Southern Africa better. I completely associate myself with everything that you have said, and I would go even further.

You know, you look at the number of coups—Senator, Chairman Cardin talked about the number of coups that have taken place in the last several years, the fragility of certain states, the challenges that we face that some of the dominant countries that we have based much of our engagement on are facing challenges.

I think the whole region holds enormous promise, but also it is an area that we have to step up our game. Now, I have been very impressed what—with what Secretary Blinken and his team has done, but there still needs to be more. We need to make sure that we are working on critical minerals more directly.

I think advancing governance, democratic practices, human rights, calling out where we see real challenges, as we saw yesterday, both the Chairman and the Secretary of State on Sudan. I do want to just say that if confirmed, I have talked to the Secretary about this, I intend to offer what assistance and personal engagement I can.

We have to step up our game. We are being contested in the global South. It is there that, frankly, I worry the most. I am not sure that—look, I think a few years ago, some of these countries looked at China carefully.

I think they are more worried about the model that China offers, bringing in its own workers, not as much transparency. I think what we have to offer in terms of our role, our investment capacity with the DFC and others. I think we have a lot to bring to Africa, and my hope is that we will be able to continue to do that.

Senator BOOKER. So let me say this in conclusion again, because I fear Schatz is drunk with power over there and might cut me off because I have gone over my time.

[Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER. But just really quickly, there is so much attention right now on Ukraine and what is happening in Israel and what is happening in Gaza. But if you look at the sheer numbers of children that are dying right now from the Horn of Africa in Sudan to West Africa, it dwarfs, and yet we do not seem to see the same kind of outrage in our engagement on the continent.

And in Sudan in particular, with over five million displaced people. I just want to urge you and our great Secretary of State to think about a special envoy for Sudan. To really make that more of a focus and priority of our diplomatic power.

And then the final thing I will just say, and I am going to regret this, I am sure, but my childhood nickname by my mother when I was a kid was Coco. And that is why I just want to make a predictive element. That as great as her father is, that I think that the daughter will one day—there will be another Coco perhaps sitting on this dais in the future.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I concur with that, Senator. I know time is short. I saw the statement put out by Chairman Cardin yesterday asking for a special envoy.

I just want to promise you we are going to look at that very carefully, and we are highly attentive to what we see taking place there. Secretary Blinken's statement yesterday speaks for itself in terms of our concerns about war crimes.

So, I take very seriously what you are suggesting, and I do want to commit to as much focus and attention as I can bring to the issues.

Senator BOOKER. I am very grateful. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your grace and mercy.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Senator Booker. Mr. Campbell, thank you for being here. To your family, thank you for serving as well. Let us talk about North Korea. You have said that North Korea is a land of bad options.

Tell me if you have got any creative ideas for risk reduction. Cards on the table, I think. CVID is a fantasy. I think that we have been engaged in magical thinking for quite a while, and I am wondering if, you know, you are known as a pragmatist and someone who understands the region really well.

What do we do, because clearly our current policy, which by the way, has been the policy of—on a bipartisan basis for 20 odd years, it is clearly not working. What should we do?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, look, Senator Schwartz, let me just say—
Senator SCHATZ. Schatz.

Mr. CAMPBELL [continuing]. Schatz, I am sorry. I will say—this has flummoxed American diplomats for decades. But I am concerned, as you are, that we are heading into a new period, and that period could be quite concerning.

The steps that we have taken to date have been primarily to strengthen the regional deterrent around North Korea. What we have done with Japan and South Korea and other countries as well, and I think that is important.

The last constructive, diplomatic engagement that we had with North Korea was the aborted meeting in Vietnam between Kim Jong Un and President Trump. Essentially, since then, the North Koreans have rebuffed every effort that we have utilized to try to reach out to them.

I will just say, Senator, that we have tried some what I thought were creative, inventive approaches. We have offered vaccines during the height of challenge that North Korea faced with respect to COVID.

We have offered certain kinds of engagements on humanitarian grounds. We have had difficulty getting any takers, even in addressing our letters or approaches to them. I do think this is something that requires deeper consultations with allies and partners.

I am concerned that North Korea has taken very dangerous steps with respect to Russia, providing military equipment to Russia's campaign. I am concerned that North Korea continues to perfect its long range missile and nuclear capabilities in ways that are antithetical not only to the region, but to the United States as well.

And so, to be honest, I share your concerns. I am worried that North Korea, in the current environment, has decided that they are no longer interested in diplomacy with the United States. And that means that we are going to have to focus even more on deterrence.

Senator SCHATZ. Two more questions. Two more minutes. Tell me why it is important that we ratify the Law of the Sea Treaty.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, look, Senator Schatz, I will say this, this is a treaty that was negotiated in another time, right, in the 1960s. We abide, even though it has been signed but not—

Senator SCHATZ. I know, we abide, yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL [continuing]. I know that. I know you understand it, but it makes it hard for other countries that we contest with who say, hey, you know, you have—you cannot hold us accountable to something that is not your own law.

So, it has been a challenge for us. I think the reason that I am primarily interested in it is that it will provide a framework for how to think about areas in which China is contesting our sovereign interpretations in the South China Sea and elsewhere.

And I think that is difficult for us because even our allies and partners say, hey, wait a second, you are holding China to account to something that you yourself—

Senator SCHATZ. Have not signed up for.

Mr. CAMPBELL [continuing]. Yes.

I would love to see that possible. There is another renewed effort to go forward. I think we have gotten very close in the past. I would love to get that over the finish line. I think it will be challenging. I am committed to it.

Senator SCHATZ. I think we can get the votes because I think the politics has changed as we understand the urgent need for us to act together, collectively, on competition with China. Final question, and it is a little technocratic, but how are you going to divide the portfolio with Mr. Verma? Or if you do not know yet, that is a fair enough answer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes. So, the one thing I will commit to you is there are very few people that I hold in higher regard than Rich Verma. He is a longstanding friend. I do not know if it is possible to be more well prepared.

He has been a diplomat. He has a Ph.D. He has a business degree. He has been in the Air Force. He is an extraordinarily able diplomat. He is primarily responsible for resources in the Department, but my own view is that we are missing his skills on the field.

And I want to make sure working with Secretary Blinken and the other key members, that we make sure that his real skills, not only in Budgets and Management, are seen in the field to play diplomatically.

Senator SCHATZ. Yes, that is a fair enough answer—and I want you to sort of iterate this over time, but I just, I think it is important for the, frankly, committee members and their staffs to kind of know who to talk to about what. And so, I would like to sort that a little further. Senator Van Hollen.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Thank you. I will take that up.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. Senator Schatz. Mr. Campbell, great to see you. Congratulations on your nomination. Great to see members of your family, Leal, Coco. Thank you, Leal, for your service as well.

And let me say to you, Kurt, thank you for the great work you have been doing already as part of the Biden Administration at the National Security Council with respect to East Asia and the Pacific, the work on China, Taiwan, the whole region, and the important role you played supporting the President at the recent APEC conference in San Francisco.

I think your nomination to be Deputy Secretary of the State Department signals the importance the Administration places in that very important part of the world and in our competition with the People's Republic of China.

Let me also associate myself with the words of some of my colleagues, including Senator Coons, with respect to the urgency of providing military assistance to Ukraine as they face continued assaults from Putin, and that as others around the world, both friends and foe, watch to see what we will do in Ukraine.

Now, as Deputy Secretary, of course, you will have a much broader policy portfolio. And I wanted to ask you a couple of questions about the situation in the war between Israel and Hamas. And I had not planned to get into this, but I understand it came up a little earlier in some conversations.

I just want to quote from what Jon Finer said on national television recently when he was asked about conditionality of assistance. And what Jon Finer said in response, and I quote, “well, I guess what I would say about that, Jake,” referring to Jake Tapper, “at this point is no assistance the United States provides to any country is unconditional.”

He went on to say, it comes with the requirement that that aid be used consistent with international law, consistent with the law of armed conflict. Do you agree with the Deputy's—with the Deputy National Security Adviser's coming?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, of course.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. And just to understand your response to an earlier question, I take it to mean that you are not—that the Administration, as I understand the Biden Administration's position, the Biden Administration is not asking for additional conditions on assistance to any of the countries in this package, whether it be Ukraine, Israel, or countries in the Indo-Pacific. Is that correct?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Senator, that is my understanding. But I will also say that there are daily conversations at the very highest levels between senior officials in the U.S. Government and Israel, our senior military, their senior military about their military plans.

And we have expressed very clear views about the conduct of operations more generally. I recognize that is different than sort of a legislative approach, but I will say that this—that we do have very clear interests in ensuring that this conflict be conducted within what we would view as the humane rules of war.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. No, I very much appreciate that. I just had wanted to clarify that your response meant to adhere to what I understand the Biden Administration's position is, which is you are not asking for additional conditions at this time, recognizing what you just said.

And I do think it is very important that the United States, as we support our friend Israel, that we insist that measures be taken to better minimize civilian casualties. As of today, there are over 16,000 people who have died in Gaza, two-thirds of them are women and children, and that we insist that the Netanyahu Government fully cooperate with us in the provision of desperately needed humanitarian assistance there.

And speaking for myself, I think that the Biden Administration could be doing even more in that regard, and I know that view is shared with some of my colleagues. I realize that my time is up. I do want to really, in the remaining time, ask you about the issue of our economic engagement in the Indo-Pacific.

And the Administration has put forward a number of proposals that we have talked about in the past, IPF being one. There are a number of others as well regarding critical minerals. So, if you could just talk generally about the Administration's strategy on the economic front with countries there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Great. Thank you, Senator. I appreciate the question. And I also want to say how much I appreciated our conversation in your office the other day. It was meaningful and I took a lot from it.

I would say just that we have already had a little bit of discussion about the importance of the American economic and commercial engagement in the Indo-Pacific. Largest investor, huge trade flows.

I think over the course of the next little while, there are a number of things that we need to work on even more intensively. Number one is to diversify our supply chains and make sure that the watchword that we use in doing so is greater resilience, working with allies and partners in particular, and doing that in such a way that we have confidence in a crisis that we have more than one source.

Second is to take urgent steps on critical minerals and trace elements that are essential in the modern technology and all issues associated with long life batteries and the like. I think the Administration is taking steps in this direction. You will have seen that we have a new agreement with Australia.

We are exploring next steps with Indonesia. These are all things that are essential going forward. IPF, I think, as we have discussed already, does provide some critical standards and other procedures that improve issues associated with taxation, matters related to green technologies and investments.

These are important procedures, procedural steps that I think are smooth and give us greater confidence about engaging particular countries. There is more work to be done to ensure that the United States is deeply embedded in the commerce and economies of the Indo-Pacific.

My own personal view, Senator, is that this is something that requires a deeper conversation with the Executive Branch and with bipartisan members on the Hill. I think everyone on both sides of the aisle understands that the U.S. role here is essential, but it has to be designed carefully so that American workers, American jobs are not sacrificed in the process.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you. I appreciate that. I do want to just say in parting, and not asking this as a question, just something for you to take back.

A lot of us were surprised and alarmed when the USTR seemed to roll back the longstanding U.S. position in favor of an open internet because so many countries, especially authoritarian countries like China and Russia, try to put up these walls to essentially prevent good information from getting in and also to track their citizens and dissidents.

So, if you could just that take back to your colleagues, a lot of us were very surprised, disappointed in that decision. Based on other hearings we have had, there was no consultation by the USTR in that process with other parts of the government, and I hope it will be reversed.

I think that our long standing policy was the right one and I hope the Administration will undertake a course correction there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Thank you, Senator. I will take that back.

Senator VAN HOLLEN. Thank you.

Senator SCHATZ. Thank you, Senator Van Hollen. Mr. Campbell, thank you for your continued service to the country and for being open to all members on a bipartisan basis.

The record for the hearing will remain open until the close of business tomorrow, Friday, December 8th, 2023. Please ensure that questions for the record are submitted no later than the close of business tomorrow. This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 12:50 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED
TO HON. KURT CAMPBELL BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question. Corruption has revealed itself to be a top national security threat. I have been pleased to see the Department use the Global Magnitsky framework to target corruption in Georgia, Moldova, and the Western Balkans. Can I expect that you will push the Department to continue pursuing these types of designations to help vulnerable democracies stand up to anti-corruption across Eastern Europe? Where do you think the Department has not paid enough attention to date?

Answer. This administration has vigorously used anti-corruption designations under the Global Magnitsky program and other accountability tools and authorities to address systemic corruption and threats to democratic governance in Georgia, Moldova, and the Western Balkans. Global Magnitsky has proven an important tool in helping protect vulnerable democracies from those who seek to perpetuate corruption, including to enable the malign influence of foreign actors, most notably Russia. If confirmed, I will strongly support the continued strategic use of this and related tools wherever appropriate, but especially in these countries and regions.

Question. How do we ensure that a revitalized Palestinian Authority is ready to effectively administer both the West Bank and Gaza after Hamas is defeated?

Answer. A sustained peace between Israel and the Palestinians must include Palestinian-led governance and a Gaza unified with the West Bank under the Palestinian Authority (PA). For this to work, the Palestinian people's voices and aspirations must remain at the center of post-crisis governance. This will also require that Gaza is no longer a platform for terrorism and violent attacks, that there is no attempt to blockade or besiege Gaza, and that the PA respects human rights and fundamental freedoms and has access to the revenue streams to which it is entitled under relevant agreements.

Question. What diplomatic steps are needed to maintain support and participation from Arab states in preparing for the "day after" in Gaza?

Answer. Ensuring support from Arab states for the "day after" in Gaza requires strong U.S. leadership laying out a clear vision for a two-state solution and for equal measures of prosperity, security, and dignity for Israelis and Palestinians alike, including by urging Israel to conduct the current campaign in accordance with international law and a view towards setting the conditions for peace. Secretary Blinken took a major step forward in this process in his speech at the G7 Conference in Tokyo on November 8, 2023. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing these efforts.

Question. What concrete actions can the Administration take against those who would undermine a two-state solution or try to create a de facto one state reality on the ground in the West Bank?

Answer. The Administration can continue to support Israel's security and right to self-defense while also supporting the viability and renewal of the Palestinian Authority. Both are essential to a two-state solution. The Administration can encourage Israel to counter actions that undermine stability in the West Bank, such as attacks by violent extremist settlers against Palestinians. The Administration has tools to address these challenges, such as the "3C" visa policy announced on December 5. If confirmed, I look forward to exploring additional policy options.

Question. What further steps can the U.S. take to help countries in the Middle East deal with the knock-on effects of Russia's illegal war, especially regarding food imports.

Answer. The United States continues to engage countries in the Middle East to hold Russia accountable for its unlawful war against Ukraine. If confirmed, I will strongly push back against false accusations that blame sanctions for food insecurity, and I will stress that Russia's de facto blockade has prevented ships in the Black Sea from delivering wheat to key partners in the Middle East, North Africa, and the rest of the world. If confirmed, I will work with our partners to facilitate more secure and stable alternatives to Russian suppliers.

Question. Can you please outline the implications for U.S. national security if we do not continue to support Ukraine?

Answer. Lessons of the 20th century make it clear: if we don't stop aggressors early, we get pulled into a larger war. U.S. leadership is indispensable to ensuring a strong response that protects our interests as well as those of our Allies and friends. Friends and foes alike are watching closely and will draw lessons about American power and resolve. A lapse in U.S. support for Ukraine would immediately impact Ukraine's performance on the battlefield, compromise NATO Allied security, affirm for Putin that he can wait out Ukraine's international supporters, and call into question our commitment to a free and fair international system far beyond Europe. It would also risk Allied and partner unity on sanctions, economic assistance, and other economic measures meant to change Russia's calculus for this war.

Question. I believe that we have a window of opportunity to help NATO and EU aspirants, including Ukraine, Moldova, Georgia, and countries in the Western Balkans, to complete their reforms and join the Euro Atlantic alliance. However, enlargement is both a merit-based process and a political decision, and I fear that this window will not last forever. How will you work with these countries, as well as our NATO and EU counterparts, to operate with a sense of urgency on completing required reforms and deepening integration with vulnerable countries?

Answer. I look forward to robustly engaging with the EU and NATO to support EU candidate and aspirant countries, and I will be committed to reform efforts that will deepen their Euro-Atlantic integration. As candidate and aspirant countries like Ukraine, Georgia, and Western Balkan countries, align with transatlantic values, they will be able to contribute to protecting shared interests. If confirmed, I will work to encourage the EU and candidate and prospective candidate countries to support and accelerate necessary reforms to advance their aspirations.

Question. We are fast approaching NATO's 2024 Washington Summit, an important opportunity to demonstrate solidarity with Ukraine, as well as key allies on NATO's eastern flank. What do you hope will be achieved in Washington this summer to deter Russia and stand with Ukraine?

Answer. The 2024 Washington Summit will be an opportunity to reflect on and celebrate the 75th anniversary of the most effective alliance in modern history. It will also be an important opportunity to present deliverables that will ensure NATO is ready and able to defend the security of the United States and Allies for the next 75 years. We will also make clear that Ukraine's future is in NATO. We are actively working with Allies to develop robust deliverables that further deepen Ukraine's Euro-Atlantic integration and provides Ukraine the practical support needed to defend against Russian aggression. I look forward to informing Congress on the deliverable's progress as we get closer to the 2024 NATO Washington Summit.

Question. I commend allies like Estonia and Lithuania who have stood with other vibrant democracies like Taiwan. However, especially in the case of Lithuania, we have seen economic retaliation from the PRC for our ally's choice to do the right thing. What will be your approach to maintaining Euro Atlantic unity in the face of Chinese economic coercion, and what else can we do to stand with our allies targeted by the PRC?

Answer. Lithuania exhibited extraordinary resilience to PRC coercion. U.S. economic and diplomatic support helped Lithuania turn that challenge into an opportunity. Today, Lithuania is thriving, and replaced PRC trade losses with expanded trade with other partners. The EU recently passed its Anti-Coercion Instrument, granting authorities for countermeasures against a country targeting a member state. State will continue working with the White House, the interagency, and with allies and partners to exchange information on economic coercion and coordinate support to targeted countries.

Question. Putin's invasion of Ukraine alarmed many of Russia's neighbors in Central Asia. Reform-leaning leaders of Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan are increasingly seeking U.S. partnership. How would you recommend that the Department seize the momentum of President Biden's meeting with regional leaders at UNGA, and visits to the region by Secretary Blinken and Administrator Power?

Answer. Building on the historic C5+1 Presidential Summit in New York in September, I would, if confirmed, advance U.S. commitment to the sovereignty and independence of the Central Asian states. These efforts would include strengthening security cooperation, building economic resilience, and promoting connectivity. I would advocate for U.S. initiatives to expand cooperation with Central Asian partners on critical minerals, establishment of alternative trade routes that bypass Russia, and creating a favorable business environment for private sector trade and development.

Question. Putin's invasion of Ukraine alarmed many of Russia's neighbors in Central Asia. Reform-leaning leaders of Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan are increasingly seeking U.S. partnership. What legislative measures would be useful in demonstrating our commitment to expand our relations and increase investment in the five nations in Central Asia?

Answer. The Department of State supports adoption of legislation that would authorize the President to grant permanent normal trade relations status to Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, and Tajikistan. Doing so would send a powerful signal of U.S. commitment to the governments and peoples of Central Asian countries and create opportunities for stronger economic partnership and increased foreign investment.

Question. There should never be tradeoffs between pursuing U.S. national interests and advocating for universal human rights and promoting democracy. These two aims are one and the same. What are your views on how we should keep human rights advocacy and democracy promotion at the center of American diplomacy, and not as a secondary or tertiary talking point in our engagement?

Answer. This Administration centers human rights in our foreign policy and has made democratic renewal a top priority. Defending human rights and democracy around the world advances U.S. interests, by helping to create a more stable, more open world, with countries that are better partners to us, more committed to human rights, less prone to conflict, and more dependable markets for our goods and services. Free and fair elections, an independent judiciary, robust civil society, and independent media are crucial to healthy democracies, prosperous economies, and resilient societies. If confirmed, I will continue to center these efforts and expand the tent of partners and allies committed to democratic renewal and human rights, building on the work of the Summit for Democracy process.

Question. Humanitarian responses for displaced persons are severely underfunded across the world. As we speak, because of a lack of donor resources, there are massive cuts underway to food and daily rations for vulnerable people in Sudan, Afghanistan, the West Bank and Gaza, Bangladesh, and many others. The U.S. is the largest contributor in many of these responses and other wealthy nations are not contributing. If confirmed, how would you encourage shared responsibility to contribute to these humanitarian responses?

Answer. As the world faces astronomical levels of displacement, conflict, complex emergencies, and worsening economic realities, compounded by climate change, resources for humanitarian aid are struggling to keep up with needs. No one country can meet these humanitarian challenges alone. If confirmed, I will prioritize advancing diplomatic efforts to expand resources and robust donor support for humanitarian action and to pursue innovative new partnerships to deliver protection, assistance, and durable solutions to refugees worldwide.

Question. Humanitarian responses for displaced persons are severely underfunded across the world. The U.S. is the largest contributor in many of these responses and other wealthy nations are not contributing. How can Congress raise the specter of these global humanitarian crisis with the American public and the media, given the constant drumbeat of high-profile crises?

Answer. I appreciate Congress's support in helping the Executive Branch raise the profile of global humanitarian crises. Your voice is crucial. One of the most notable ways to raise the profile of these issues is through congressional travel or public hearings that highlight specific crises like the renewed conflict in Sudan or the plight of Rohingya. Op-Eds by Members of Congress also generate attention and reach new audiences. If confirmed, I will work with Congress to continue to highlight global humanitarian needs and U.S. leadership to address them, and to direct careful U.S. stewardship of humanitarian funding to International Organizations and other partners to respond to these situations worldwide.

Question. We have been working to secure a State Department Authorization in this year's NDAA. If enacted, this will be third year in a row that it is enacted into law. Passing State Authorization is critical for a number of reasons—chief among them is that it demonstrates the strong bipartisan support to modernize the Department and equip our diplomats with the training and skills needed to address cyber, economic, and other 21st century security challenges. If confirmed, how do you plan to prioritize and implement modernization efforts, particularly in the context of increasing strategic global competition?

Answer. I fully believe we have a workforce of talented professionals essential to advancing America's interests. Ensuring that our national security workforce has the necessary tools, training, and support to fully realize their potential will be a key priority.

Investing in our own capacities and in secure, resilient supply chains; pushing for a level playing field for our workers and companies and defending against harmful trade practices are integral to continued U.S. success in global strategic competition. If confirmed and as the Department continues to move forward in its modernization agenda, I will be clear-eyed about the challenges posed and actively work within the Department, across the interagency, with the Congress, and with our allies and partners to make further progress in strengthening our shared interests and values to address the challenges in the 21st century.

Passing State Authorization is critical for a number of reasons—chief among them is that it demonstrates the strong bipartisan support to modernize the Department and equip our diplomats with the training and skills needed to address cyber, economic, and other 21st century security challenges. How do you anticipate collaborating with Deputy Secretary for Management and Resources Verma to guarantee that strategic modernization goals are achieved?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work collaboratively with Deputy Secretary Verma and our teams so that together we achieve the Department's modernization goals. This includes continued engagement with the Congress to ensure the Department has the tools and authorities needed to fully implement the Secretary's Modernization Agenda.

Question. The New START treaty is the last remaining nuclear weapons treaty between the United States and Russia and it is set to expire in 2026. This will occur at the same time as China continues the expansion of its nuclear weapons program. In an era of strategic competition, what role do you think arms control can play in reducing nuclear risks and avoiding a costly arms race?

Answer. I support maintaining a safe, secure, and effective nuclear deterrent and strengthened extended deterrence. I also believe, as stated in the 2022 Nuclear Posture Review, that "deterrence alone will not reduce nuclear dangers." With willing partners, arms control can reduce risk, strengthen stability, head off costly arms races, foster transparency, limit destabilizing systems, and reduce the chances of miscalculation. Together, deterrence and arms control can help inform and shape adversary calculations about the tradeoffs between cooperation and competition.

Question. The New START treaty is the last remaining nuclear weapons treaty between the United States and Russia and it is set to expire in 2026. This will occur at the same time as China continues the expansion of its nuclear weapons program. What objectives should the United States have for its arms control and non-proliferation discussions with China? Have we communicated to China the profound impact their massive nuclear buildup will have on U.S.-Chinese relations?

Answer. The United States has communicated to the People's Republic of China (PRC), including in arms control consultations held November 6 at the Department of State, that the PRC's rapid, diverse, and opaque nuclear buildup is creating strategic and escalation risks both regionally and globally. This unexplained buildup is a factor in the United States strengthening its deterrent and extended deterrence with Allies and partners. The United States seeks substantive engagement by the PRC to increase transparency, reduce strategic risks, increase stability, and manage competition so it does not veer into conflict.

Question. I was pleased to see that as a result of the meeting between President Biden and Xi Jinping last month, the PRC is taking important, but long overdue, steps to address its harmful role in illicit fentanyl supply chains. The fentanyl epidemic has led to the tragic deaths of hundreds of thousands of Americans, and the role of PRC pharmaceutical and chemical companies shipping fentanyl precursors to Mexican cartels has directly facilitated and exacerbated this epidemic. We owe it to the American public to closely monitor the implementation of these commitments and ensure we use all tools at our disposal to stop the flow of the precursor chemicals used to produce illicit fentanyl. What is your assessment of the impact the PRC's commitments last month will have in our efforts to counter the trafficking of illicit fentanyl?

Answer. In their meeting, President Biden and President Xi announced the resumption of bilateral cooperation to combat global illicit drug manufacturing and trafficking, with a focus on reducing the flow of precursor chemicals fueling illicit fentanyl and synthetic drug trafficking. As part of this cooperation, the PRC is now taking law enforcement action against illicit precursor suppliers, issued a notice to industry warning Chinese companies against illicit trade in precursor chemicals and pill press equipment, and committed to restart key law enforcement cooperation.

President Biden and President Xi also welcomed the establishment of a working group for ongoing communication and law enforcement coordination on counter-narcotics issues. To ensure sustained follow-through, we are working to establish that working group. This progress will advance our whole-of-government effort to counter this evolving and deadly threat. Building a more cooperative relationship with the PRC on this critically important issue has the potential to save American lives and protect our communities.

Question. I was pleased to see that as a result of the meeting between President Biden and Xi Jinping last month, the PRC is taking important, but long overdue, steps to address its harmful role in illicit fentanyl supply chains. The fentanyl epidemic has led to the tragic deaths of hundreds of thousands of Americans, and the role of PRC pharmaceutical and chemical companies shipping fentanyl precursors to Mexican cartels has directly facilitated and exacerbated this epidemic. We owe it to the American public to closely monitor the implementation of these commitments and ensure we use all tools at our disposal to stop the flow of the precursor chemicals used to produce illicit fentanyl. Should the PRC fail to follow through on its commitments, what steps would you advocate that the Biden Administration undertake to strengthen its response against PRC pharmaceutical and chemical companies?

Answer. As the President said: trust but verify. We are encouraged to see that the PRC has already started to take steps to dramatically curtail illicit fentanyl precursor trafficking as part of this process, including through law enforcement action against illicit precursor suppliers, and issuance of a notice to industry warning Chinese companies against illicit trade in precursor chemicals and pill press equipment. We continue to work with the PRC on a plan to promote accountability for individuals and companies that provide chemical precursors and pill press equipment to illicit drug traffickers. We are clear-eyed and will continue to work intensively across the U.S. Government and through this process with the PRC, using all tools at our disposal to promote accountability and protect our communities.

Question. I believe the strength of U.S. foreign policy rests on our commitment to our values—to human rights, democracy, and the rule of law. Our relationships with our allies are stronger, our foreign assistance—and, ultimately—our foreign policy is more effective when we center our diplomacy on these values. What have you learned, in all of your years of experience serving our country, about how best the United States can lead with our values?

Answer. I believe our strongest and most durable security and economic partnerships are those rooted in shared respect for human rights and the rule of law. Democracy remains the best way to realize lasting peace, prosperity, and human dignity. The transnational challenges we face today, including authoritarianism, corruption, and a myriad of other governance challenges, must be met by collective action. For our efforts to succeed, we need strong alliances and to ensure that our collective success is a beacon to other nations, whose freedom and security is intertwined with ours. If confirmed, I commit to prioritizing these issues in our bilateral relationships.

Question. India is obviously a country we need to engage strategically, particularly when it comes to China yet the recent allegations regarding a plot by the Indian Government to carry out an assassination of a U.S. person on U.S. soil is deeply disturbing. What calibration do you think is needed to U.S. policy toward India in light of these events?

Answer. I share your view that this is a very serious matter. If confirmed, I will urge the Indian Government to conduct its investigation of the alleged activities in the United States expeditiously and ensure those responsible are held accountable. India is an important strategic partner, and we are pursuing an ambitious agenda to expand our cooperation on defense and security, climate change, and critical and emerging technologies. We also do not refrain from addressing with our Indian partners concerns about human rights.

I do not want to jeopardize ongoing legal investigations or pre-empt the Indian Government's own accountability efforts by commenting further at this time.

Question. The outbreak of civil war in Sudan has taken a huge humanitarian toll and there have been significant human rights abuses. It is clear we need a strong policy response and clear coordination across the numerous bureaus at the Department who play a role in helping achieve peace and building lasting stability for Sudan. What do you think are the necessary steps to ensure effective coordination across the Department to build a strong policy response to the crisis in Sudan?

Answer. I agree the Sudan conflict requires an urgent and robust response. I support the Department's all hands-on-deck effort led by the Secretary involving close coordination among the Department's relevant bureaus and offices, including the Bureaus of African Affairs; Near Eastern Affairs; Conflict and Stabilization Operations; Population, Refugees, and Migration; Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor; among others. I will identify ways to ensure the newly created Office of Sudan Affairs in Addis Ababa has the support it needs to lead diplomacy in the field.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. KURT CAMPBELL BY SENATOR JAMES E. RISCH

China

Question. Last year you said that bringing China into a global climate framework "is the most important element of the next 10 years." Does that mean you think climate is our most important issue in the China relationship? If so, what concessions on key strategic issues or constraints on U.S. behavior should we be prepared to give to China to secure cooperation on climate?

Answer. Climate change is not a bilateral issue, but a global one. The PRC is the world's largest emitter, and we cannot keep a safer, 1.5-degree Celsius future within reach unless the PRC acts faster to cut all its greenhouse gas emissions. The United States will continue to work with the PRC on global and transnational challenges, such as climate and counter-narcotics, when it is in our interest to do so, and, as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because that is what the world expects. It is also true that China's steps to date on climate are inadequate to the challenge.

Question. Why is the Biden Administration and the State Department in particular planning to facilitate cooperation on climate with U.S. cities, states, and think tanks, when we know that the PRC prioritizes malign influence operations at the sub-national level to undermine U.S. foreign policy? What guardrails should be put in place to prevent these climate working groups, dialogues, and sub-national engagements from being used to legitimize and facilitate PRC malign influence?

Answer. We are clear-eyed about PRC attempts to co-opt subnational and non-governmental actors and are determined to push back against malign influence that exploits our openness. With that always in mind, we work with the PRC to enhance climate action to help avoid the worst climate impacts. States, provinces, and cities can play an important role in these efforts through practical climate cooperation in areas such as the power, transportation, waste, and building sectors. These interactions then will need to be carefully calibrated and seriously evaluated for their overall impact and effectiveness.

Question. Secretary of Treasury Yellen wrote a few weeks ago that a "constructive economic relationship" with China can "serve as a stabilizing force for the overall relationship." Do you agree with her statement, and will that inform how you approach relations with China if you are confirmed?

Answer. The United States will explore working with the PRC where our interests align, such as promoting global macroeconomic stability. Even as the United States and PRC work together where our interests intersect, we support de-risking, diversifying, and protecting the interests of our workers and companies. That means investing in our own capacities and in secure, resilient supply chains; pushing for level playing fields for our workers and our companies; defending against harmful trade practices; and protecting our critical technologies so that they are not used against us.

Question. Given China's ongoing support for Russia in its war against Ukraine, do you believe that there is a legitimate role for China in resolving the war between Russia and Ukraine, or in rebuilding Ukraine after it is over? Please explain your view in detail.

Answer. We call on all countries to play a constructive role in securing a just and lasting peace for Ukraine. But I have no illusions about the nature of the PRC's strategic partnership with Russia, and we see no indications of that changing. Beijing is not an honest broker, and I am realistic about Beijing's willingness to play a constructive, transparent role. The United States has warned the PRC against providing Russia economic and material support that enables the Kremlin's war machine. If confirmed, I commit to monitoring Beijing's activity closely; to raising directly our concerns with the PRC; and to coordinating closely with our allies and partners on our concerns about PRC support for Russia.

Question. Several Biden Administration officials, as well as European allies, have told SFRC that they believe pursuing a "wedge strategy" or exploiting perceived daylight between Russia and China should be a focus of U.S. foreign policy towards Russia and China. Do you hold this view? If yes, why do you believe this? Is the Administration currently pursuing any efforts to exploit perceived daylight between Russia and China?

Answer. While we continue to take steps to deter China's provision of support to Russia's war against Ukraine, we are realistic about the geopolitical reality of the PRC and Russia's alignment. Their strategic partnership is critical to both countries' global aspirations. There are areas of friction between the PRC and Russia, such as the PRC's ambitions in the Arctic and Central Asia, but we do not believe they will supersede their leaders' impetus to maintain a close and cooperative relationship.

Question. Do you commit to prioritizing securing the release of detained U.S. citizens Kai Li, David Lin, and Mark Swidan?

Answer. Yes. The release of American citizens subject to wrongful detentions is a top priority for this Administration, and every high-level meeting we have focuses on making progress on bringing them home. Due to the sensitive nature of these conversations, we should not publicly discuss our efforts or specific cases, but our efforts are ongoing. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize bringing Americans home.

Question. Why is the Administration prioritizing increase of commercial flights between China and the United States, and other people-to-people exchanges, given the increased risks of traveling to China for U.S. citizens, the ongoing wrongful detention of three American citizens, and reports that foreign business executives are increasingly worried about their physical security in China?

Answer. The United States welcomes tourism and travel from PRC citizens. Prior to the COVID-19 pandemic, close to three million PRC citizens traveled to the United States annually, contributing $33.5 billion to the U.S. economy. Simultaneously, based on ongoing comprehensive reviews of all available safety information and developments, we advise U.S. citizens that the PRC Government arbitrarily enforces its laws, including by wrongfully detaining or issuing exit bans on U.S. citizens without fair and transparent process under the law.

Question. If confirmed, will you press for the release of Ekpar Asat, Ilham Tohti, and other others detained in Xinjiang?

Answer. Yes. I am very concerned by the cases of Ekpar Asat and Ilham Tohti, and I have supported senior U.S. officials' raising their cases with the PRC over the past three years. If confirmed, I will continue to strongly advocate on behalf of Ekpar Asat and Ilham Tohti and other individual human rights cases of concern, as well as to work with our allies and partners to promote accountability for the PRC Government's ongoing genocide, crimes against humanity, and other human rights abuses against Uyghurs and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups in Xinjiang.

Question. If confirmed, will you press for the release Jimmy Lai and other political prisoners in Hong Kong?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue to call on the PRC Government to respect the rights and freedoms of people in Hong Kong, as guaranteed by the Basic Law and the Sino-British Joint Declaration and will continue to advocate for the release of Jimmy Lai and other unjustly detained political prisoners in Hong Kong. The Administration raises human rights issues with the PRC Government at every opportunity and at the highest levels. In his meeting with President Xi, President Biden raised concerns about PRC human rights abuses, including in Xinjiang, Tibet, and Hong Kong.

Question. On July 21, 2023, SFRC received an email from the Department of State through official channels that said the following: "Please note that the United States will not invite Vladimir Putin or John Lee because of the sanctions against them and we have informed government officials in Moscow and Hong Kong of this decision. We have said we would invite only non-sanctioned officials." Several months later, after Hong Kong Chief Executive John Lee made public claims of being invited, the Department told the press and SFRC staff that "participating in APEC 2023 will be in accordance with U.S. law and regulations, including with respect to sanctions.” I followed up with a letter, along with Senator Romney, asking whether Lee had in fact been invited and if he had not, why the Biden Administration did not repudiate his claims to contrary. I received a belated response that did not answer the questions asked and repeated the same talking points the Department had used with the press. In your December 7 hearing, you committed to providing me with a full and detailed explanation of why the Biden Administration did not repudiate Lee’s claim of being invited to APEC, and to submitting an answer for the record. Why did the Biden Administration not repudiate Hong Kong Chief Executive John Lee’s claim of being invited to APEC? (Please note that I understand that the Administration told China and Hong Kong that John Lee would not be in attendance, but that does not explain the decision not to contradict Lee’s public claims. Therefore, repeating that information alone will not be considered responsive.)

Answer. The Administration made clear to the PRC Government and Hong Kong authorities that John Lee would not be welcome at APEC because the United States had sanctioned him. After the PRC confirmed that Hong Kong would designate an alternative representative, the Administration sent a standard APEC invitation letter to Hong Kong. In keeping with protocol, the letter was addressed to John Lee, as the leader of an APEC member economy. The fact that the United States refused to allow John Lee to travel to the United States to participate at APEC is clear to the PRC Government, the Hong Kong authorities, and the international community. We have not assessed that additional statements about John Lee’s invitation status are necessary.

Southeast Asia

Question. China’s actions in the South China Sea are testing the credibility and value of U.S. commitments to allies and partners in the region. Senators Risch, Rubio, and Wicker have requested the Biden administration provide a full list of plans, branches, and sequels or other diplomatic or non-defense options developed by the Departments of State and Defense to support the Philippines and ensure the resupply of the BRP Sierra Madre. Will you commit to working with colleagues at State and DOD to do so? What should the United States do to support the Philippines in the South China Sea?

Answer. I will continue to make clear that the United States stands with our Philippine allies in the face of dangerous and unlawful PRC actions that interfere with lawful Philippine maritime operations, and I will continue to reaffirm that Article IV of the 1951 U.S.-Philippines Mutual Defense Treaty extends to armed attacks on Philippine armed forces, public vessels, or aircraft—including those of its Coast Guard—anywhere in the South China Sea. I am committed to working with colleagues in the Department of State and with the Department of Defense to support our Philippine allies’ defense modernization, improve their maritime law enforcement capabilities, and increase their maritime domain awareness in the South China Sea. To complement our strong security ties, I am also committed to bolstering the Philippines’ economic resilience.

Question. What in your view is the intended end state of U.S. policy towards Burma?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support our efforts to address the worsening crisis in Burma and seek a swift return to the path of democratic transition. This includes engaging with our diplomatic partners and allies, accountability for the regime’s atrocities—designed to urge the military regime to reverse course; release all those unjustly detained, including democratic political leaders, journalists, civil society advocates, and foreign citizens; allow unhindered humanitarian access; and engage in meaningful dialogue that acknowledges the will of the people in Burma and establishes a path to inclusive, multiparty democracy.

Question. Is ASEAN’s consensus-based model of decision making at odds with ASEAN Centrality?

Answer. No. ASEAN’s consensus-based model, which allows the organization to speak with a single, collective voice, affords it increased leverage in the region and beyond. This model fortifies ASEAN centrality, the idea that ASEAN sits at the center of the regional institutional architecture. Through this position, ASEAN is able to convene global partners to discuss pressing regional and international issues, and this matters to the United States because it helps ensure that ASEAN, rather than the PRC or other strategic competitors, sets the regional agenda.

Question. The State Department and USAID informed SFRC of their assessment that new leadership in Cambodia presents a new opening to improve the relationship. However, PLA activity at Ream Naval Base continues, most recently with the visit by PLAN vessels to conduct joint military exercises with the Cambodian military.

Question. Do you agree we have an opening with the new Cambodian leadership? Why or why not?

Answer. Cambodia's new Government has an opportunity to address a range of U.S. concerns and thereby to improve the country's international standing and bilateral ties with the United States. Cambodia's new generation of mostly young, western-educated leaders represents a possible opportunity in this regard.

Question. What are the consequences for the United States of a PLA presence at Ream?

Answer. The Department has serious concerns about reports of PRC plans for exclusive control over portions of Ream Naval Base. U.S. officials continue to urge the Cambodian Government to closely examine the agreements its defense officials have made with the PRC to ensure the PRC will not be allowed a presence or to install sensitive technology at the base that undermines Cambodia's sovereignty, contravenes its constitution, or threatens regional stability.

Question. Have we lost Cambodia to China?

Answer. Cambodian officials continue to highlight their commitment to a non-aligned, independent foreign policy. U.S. officials have and will continue to make clear that the U.S.-Cambodia bilateral relationship cannot reach its true potential unless Cambodia lives up to this pledge.

Question. What U.S. interests are served by continuing to provide assistance to Cambodia?

Answer. U.S. foreign assistance to Cambodia allows the United States to continue supporting the Cambodian people in key development sectors, including public health. These programs do not preclude the U.S. call for the new Cambodian Government to make progress on democracy and human rights-related issues, including by restoring a free and independent media and allowing all Cambodians a voice in the governing process.

Taiwan

Question. Do you support providing FMF to Taiwan?

Answer. I am fully committed to supporting the Administration's enhancement of Taiwan's self-defense capabilities including through utilizing FMF grant assistance. To date, the Department has notified $135 million in FMF for Taiwan. If confirmed, I will work to explore all available options to resource this important policy priority.

Question. Do you support providing Taiwan with equipment through PDA? Why did the Biden Administration not use the full PDA authority it received for Taiwan in FY 2023?

Answer. I support the use of the Presidential Drawdown Authority (PDA) to strengthen Taiwan's self-defense capabilities. The Secretary of State exercised the drawdown authority for Taiwan on July 28, 2023, to provide up to $345 million in defense articles from DoD stock and services to Taiwan. I believe the Department should continue to use all available tools, including PDA, to support our overarching goal of maintaining peace and stability across the Taiwan Strait.

Question. In September 2022, SFRC and SASC sent a request for information to the Administration about Taiwan defense issues. We know the Departments of State and Defense did the analysis required to answer these questions, but have received nothing. Why hasn't Congress received information it has asked for? I asked the same question of then Deputy Secretary Wendy Sherman on February 9, 2023, and she said that "we are working across the interagency to provide the information Congress has requested."

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure Congress receives timely responses to Congressional requests for information. This will be among my highest priorities as consultation and coordination with key partners in Congress is essential.

Europe

Question. In your opinion, what is the purpose of the security assistance we provide Ukraine?

Answer. The security assistance we provide to Ukraine is vital to sustaining its defense against Russian aggression. Without it, Ukraine would be unable to hold back Russian attacks - its military would be defeated - and its people subjugated. Without our support—Ukraine’s quest to join the people of the free world—for which it has fought for so long—will come to an end. The impact of our assistance goes beyond Ukraine. Other autocratic regimes with expansionist ambitions are watching—and they will draw lessons about U.S. power and resolve.

Question. What do you assess to be the primary factors that limit Ukraine’s ability to retake territory more rapidly and what does Ukraine need in order to overcome those factors?

Answer. This is a war of industrial scale attrition, where a combination of technological and tactical factors are currently combined to deny either side the ability to conduct decisive maneuver. Armor has lost its protection due to drones; minefields cannot be penetrated; Russian guns cannot be silenced. Given this state of affairs, in the near term - we must increase the volume and efficacy of Ukrainian fires so that they can deny Russia safe haven anywhere in occupied territory and impose undue attritional cost on the occupation. We must bolster Ukraine’s defense on the ground and in the air to blunt Russian strikes and deny territorial gains. We must rapidly expand our defense industrial base to field the traditional and new munitions required to achieve this. Above all, we must work with Ukraine and our allies to achieve technological and training solutions to the factors that are holding it back. We must enable Ukraine to return to the offense—to defeat the Russian military in the field and compel Putin to negotiate on terms acceptable to us and Kyiv.

Question. What concrete action is the Administration taking to help Ukraine retake its occupied territory, versus merely helping them hold the current battle lines and survive?

Answer. The Administration continues to provide Ukraine with the artillery, air defense, and other weapon systems required to sustain its defense. This is allowing them to grind down Russian forces—but in the near term it is insufficient in volume and quality allow the retaking of territory through combined arms maneuver. Further investments in our (and our partners) defense industrial bases are required to produce the volume and quality of weapon systems needed. This, in concert with further Ukrainian training and prioritization—may be sufficient to restore a viable offense.

Question. In your assessment, what would be the results if the United States ends military and economic support for Ukraine?

Answer. A cessation in U.S. support would result in the defeat of Ukraine and the subjugation of its people. It would divide NATO, worsen our geostrategic position, and affirm for Putin and other autocrats that they can wait out the will of the west and do away with the rules-based international system that has underpinned broad global peace for the last three quarters of a century.

Question. As Deputy Secretary, how would you work with your counterparts at the other executive branch agencies like USAID, Treasury, Commerce, and USDA to support Ukraine’s reconstruction?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with our interagency partners to help Ukraine rebuild and thrive as a secure democracy firmly rooted in the rule of law. This includes helping the Government reform its judiciary, improve corporate governance, and strengthen its independent anti-corruption institutions, all of which will help attract international investment. I would also strongly support the effort of Penny Pritzker, our Special Representative for Ukraine’s Economic Recovery, who is engaging the private sector to mobilize the innovation, creativity, and investments necessary for Ukraine’s recovery and reconstruction. We will work in concert with the international community—including the G7 and other partners like the Multi-Agency Donor Coordination Platform.

Question. In your opinion, how can the seizure and repurposing of frozen Russian assets in the U.S. contribute to Ukraine’s economic recovery?

Answer. On December 6, the United States and our G7 partners reaffirmed that Russia’s sovereign assets in our jurisdictions will remain immobilized until Russia pays for damage caused to Ukraine and that we are exploring all possible avenues to aid Ukraine in obtaining compensation from Russia, consistent with our respective legal systems and international law.

Seizing Russian sovereign assets for the benefit of Ukraine is a complex issue given that most of these assets are located in Europe, not the United States. I understand legislation is under consideration to provide the President the authority to seize these assets in the United States to support Ukraine's recovery, and I look forward to consulting with Congress on this matter.

Question. Many other countries have pledged support to Ukraine. To what extent are other countries fulfilling their commitments to Ukraine?

Answer. The United States has built a global coalition of countries that are supporting Ukraine and united democracies as never before. With U.S. leadership, more than 50 partners and allies have stepped up to support Ukraine and impose costs on Russia in unprecedented ways. Our partners are providing more assistance to Ukraine than we are, about $94 billion to our $74 billion. They have funded roughly twice as much humanitarian assistance and budget support as we have and have hosted 4.5 million refugees, costing billions more. The EU is working to secure another 50 billion Euros ($54 billion) for Ukraine's economic recovery, and U.S. leadership is important to keep partners unified and engaged.

Question. How will you use your position to urge countries to increase and fulfill their pledges?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Department's efforts to urge other countries to fulfill and increase their share of pledges, including by engaging bilaterally, multilaterally, with the EU, and through the G7. However, the reliability and regular pace of U.S. disbursements has been our strongest point of leverage with countries to increase and fulfill their pledges. Without it, we cannot create meaningful leverage with our partners, who themselves would likely see our actions as precedent for not delivering on their commitments.

Question. I have previously expressed my concerns about the deepening alignment between China and Russia, even as China publicly signals its desires to mediate and play a role in Ukraine's reconstruction—potentially undermining U.S. and allied efforts to shore up a resilient, democratic Ukraine. How has China helped Russia to circumvent international sanctions?

Answer. The United States has made it clear to the PRC that providing Russia lethal support would have serious implications for our relationship. As noted in the Department of State's quarterly report to Congress on PRC support for Russia, we have concerns that PRC entities have provided dual use items and other support that Russia has used in its war against Ukraine. If confirmed, I will be vigilant in monitoring these actions and in promoting accountability for PRC entities who support Russia's war effort.

Question. Do you believe that welcoming a potential role for China in Ukraine could create space or drive a wedge between Russia and China? If so, why do you hold this view?

Answer. Beijing is not an honest broker in Ukraine, and I have no illusions about the nature of the PRC's strategic partnership and "no limits" friendship with Russia. The United States has warned the PRC against providing Russia economic and material support that enables the Kremlin's war machine. If confirmed, I commit to monitor Beijing's activity closely and to raise this directly with the PRC, coordinating closely with our Allies and partners. The United States will need to remain exceedingly wary of the PRC's role in diplomacy and commerce in Ukraine.

MIDDLE EAST POLICY

Iran

Question. The Administration's Iran policy runs counter to U.S. policy goals in Ukraine and the Pacific. Specifically, Chinese purchases of Iranian oil, the perception of lax Iran oil sanctions enforcement, provides the Iranian regime with greater resources to arm Russia and provides China with a cheap source of oil to militarize the Pacific.

Answer. In line with the President's forward-looking approach, I support the Administration's work to confront the threats Iran poses to U.S. interests through a combination of pressure, deterrence, and diplomacy, in close coordination with our partners and international bodies. I understand that the main elements of this effort include constraining Iran's nuclear program, deterring and disrupting Iran's destabilizing regional actions, countering Iran's increasing military cooperation with Russia, demonstrating our ongoing support for the human rights of Iranians, and deterring the wrongful detention of U.S. citizens in Iran as well as protecting U.S. citizens targeted by Iran. This is all in line with the Administration's overall priorities of defending American interests and pushing back against our adversaries' destabilizing activities wherever they are.

Question. Do you agree that Iran policy runs counter to U.S. interests in other regions? Explain in detail.

Answer. Iran's activities in the Middle East and globally are antithetical to American interests and the larger maintenance of peace and stability. In line with the President's forward-looking approach, I support the Administration's work to confront the threats Iran poses to U.S. interests through a combination of pressure, deterrence, and diplomacy, in close coordination with our partners and international bodies. I understand that the main elements of this effort include constraining Iran's nuclear program, deterring and disrupting Iran's destabilizing regional actions, countering Iran's increasing military cooperation with Russia, demonstrating our ongoing support for the human rights of Iranians, and deterring the wrongful detention of U.S. citizens in Iran as well as protecting U.S. citizens targeted by Iran. This is all in line with the Administration's overall priorities of defending American interests and pushing back against our adversaries' destabilizing activities wherever they are.

Question. If confirmed, how will you coordinate U.S. policy on Russia, China, and Iran to ensure they are aligned?

Answer. Secretary Blinken has identified the PRC as the most consequential long-term challenge to the United States and he has stressed that ensuring Russia suffers a strategic failure in Ukraine is our most urgent priority. The President has been clear that Iran will not be allowed to acquire a nuclear weapon. All these efforts are aligned with the overarching U.S. goal to stand up for democracy and the rule of law in defiance of authoritarianism and aggression.

Question. You played a significant role during the Obama administration on the "pivot to the Indo-Pacific." The Administration's stated focus on the Indo-Pacific, arms sales restrictions, the Afghanistan withdrawal, and Iran policy have pushed many of our longstanding Middle East partners to diversify their relationships and has opened the door to China. If confirmed, how will you prioritize competing global challenges in a manner that does not fuel a narrative of an American retreat from the Middle East?

Answer. Strategic competition is a global undertaking and we are engaged in a global context with the PRC for power and influence. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to articulate an affirmative vision of the benefits in a long-term partnership with the United States. The United States remains a committed partner diplomatically, militarily, economically, and with unprecedented people to people connections. Our diplomacy, backed by our track record of sustained leadership to resolve the region's most pressing concerns—something neither the PRC nor Russia can match—remains the anchor for regional security, stability, and prosperity.

Question. During your hearing, you said, "The Administration has not lifted any sanctions on Iran and overall about 400 have been applied." Yet Iran's oil revenues have skyrocketed to over $80 billion during the Biden Administration. What more can the Administration do to enforce sanctions, particularly Chinese purchases of Iranian oil, ship to ship transfers, teapot refineries, and reduce Iran's oil revenues to the same level as the Trump administration?

Answer. The Administration continues to enforce sanctions on Iran and pursue sanctions evaders. The United States has sanctioned dozens of individuals and entities across multiple jurisdictions, including in the PRC, UAE, and Southeast Asia for playing a critical role in the production, sale, and shipment of Iranian petrochemicals and petroleum products.

The Administration has also engaged in an extensive diplomatic campaign to ensure that new countries do not become purchasers of Iranian oil. Also, we assess Iran only gets a fraction of the market price for its oil sales because sanctions evasion is costly, and buyer prices for sanctioned oil are discounted.

Question. Less than a month before Hamas' attack on Israel, the Biden administration issued a waiver to allow $6 billion from South Korea to be transferred to Qatar for Iran to access for humanitarian purposes. What do you believe Iran's financial priorities are? Do you believe Iran prioritizes its defense industry and proxies over the needs of its people?

Answer. Iran has historically proven that it will always prioritize support to terrorist groups and its defense sector, regardless of its economic condition.

Question. During your hearing, you stated, "We have absolutely full confidence that if money were taken out that it would be used specifically for the needs of Iranian people and for humanitarian concerns." Please clarify what gives you confidence that access to $6 billion will not free up funds for Iran to use for terrorism. Isn't all money fungible?

Answer. The State Department and the Treasury Department have worked closely together to establish a rigorous oversight process to ensure that the funds held in restricted accounts can only be used for approved humanitarian transactions with third party-vendors outside of Iran. These funds have not and will never enter Iran. To date, none of the funds equivalent to $6 billion of Iran's own funds that were transferred from restricted accounts in the Republic of Korea to even more restricted accounts held by financial institutions in Qatar have been spent. Consistent with longstanding U.S. policy of ensuring our sanctions do not prevent food, medicine, and other humanitarian goods and services from flowing to ordinary people, no matter how objectionable their governments, these funds may only be used for humanitarian transactions with third party-vendors outside of Iran.

To the extent food, medicine, or other humanitarian goods flow to the Iranian people as a result of this arrangement, it is unlikely to free up funds that the Iranian regime would otherwise have spent on those goods. The Iranian regime does not prioritize funding to feed its people first. Iran is a destabilizing regime that always funds its destabilizing activities first, regardless of its economic condition.

Question. What are the dangers of monetizing hostage policy?

Answer. Bringing U.S. nationals held hostage or wrongfully detained U.S. nationals home will always be fundamental to our interest. These negotiations are tough, but not working to secure the release of a U.S. national wrongfully detained or held hostage is completely unacceptable. At the same time, I understand the U.S. Government is continuously working to increase pressure and penalties on those who would engage in the practice of hostage-taking and wrongful detention and hostage-taking, and if confirmed, I would support these efforts.

Israel

Question. It is critical for the United States to maintain support for Israel's operations against Hamas, even in the wake of antisemitism, misinformation, and criticism. How will you address reported dissent concerning the Administration's Israel policy within the Department?

Answer. I am mindful of and value Department of State employees' right to free speech under the First Amendment. As Secretary Blinken has said, we should "be sure to sustain and expand the space for debate and dissent that makes our policies and our institution better." Moreover, from what I understand the expression of dissent is unlikely to constitute insubordination. However, in other contexts, in the event a discipline issue came to me, including insubordination, I would consult with the Department's experts and attorneys to ensure the matter is handled appropriately.

Question. Hamas' continuing attacks on Israel and Iranian-backed militia attacks on U.S. troops in the region have shown that deterrence has failed. What steps must the United States take to re-establish deterrence?

Answer. The Administration has used diplomatic, military, and financial tools to disrupt and deter Iran-aligned militia groups in Iraq. Secretary Blinken, Secretary of Defense Austin, and U.S. Ambassador to Iraq Romanowski have all urged PM al-Sudani to stop the attacks against U.S. and Coalition forces in Iraq and Syria. The United States conducted strikes in Syria on October 26, November 8, and November 12 and in Iraq on November 21 and December 3. The Administration sanctioned individuals affiliated with Kata'ib Hizballah and IAMG Kata'ib Sayyid al-Shuhada and its leader on November 17. We will continue to take the necessary steps to preserve peace and stability in the Middle East and to reinforce a broader deterrence against our adversaries.

Question. When asked for your view on creating conditions on aid to Israel, you stated, "It would not be at this time." Under what circumstances would you support conditioning aid to Israel?

Answer. I cannot speculate on future conditions of foreign assistance funding. The President has been clear that he believes the strategy he has pursued thus far has been more effective. Israel has the right to defend itself, and we must continue to stand by Israel in this difficult time. Still, more must be done to protect Palestinian civilians; they should not suffer the consequences for Hamas's inhumanity and brutality and Israel has the responsibility to distinguish between terrorists and civilians. I mourn the loss of the thousands of civilians killed or wounded in Israel, Gaza, and the West Bank. As with all our partners and allies, the United States expects the Government of Israel to act consistent with international humanitarian law, which includes taking feasible precautions to minimize harm to civilians.

Syria

The United States has not had a consistent Syria policy over the last 12 years since the beginning of the Syrian civil war. Consequently, the UAE, Saudi Arabia, and others have decided to normalize relations with Assad, hoping Assad will deliver on assurances to stem the flow of captagon, remove Iran and Russia from Syria, and allow Syrians to return without being killed or conscripted.

Question. Do you believe Assad can be rehabilitated?

Answer. The Administration does not believe Bashar al-Assad has done anything to merit rehabilitation by the international community. He remains a brutal dictator who continues to repress and commit atrocities against his own people. As the Secretary has said, “Our position is clear: We are not going to be in the business of normalizing relations with Assad.”

Question. Do you believe Assad can or will deliver on any of the assurances listed above?

Answer. The Administration is skeptical of Assad’s willingness to take the steps necessary to resolve Syria’s crisis. As the Secretary has said, “Our position is clear: We are not going to be in the business of normalizing relations with Assad.” That said, with respect to Syria we share many of the same goals as our Arab partners, who intend to use our sanctions on Syria as leverage in direct engagements with the Assad regime to push for and demand progress in these areas. UNSCR 2254 remains the only viable solution to the conflict.

Question. During your hearing, you said, “Authoritarians take lessons from other authoritarian experiences.” What lessons do you think authoritarians around the world have taken from recent efforts to rehabilitate Bashar al-Assad?

Answer. Authoritarians feed on weakness and look for cracks in the international system to exploit. This Administration has been clear that democracy—transparent and accountable government of, for, and by the people—remains the best way to realize lasting peace, prosperity, and human dignity. The Administration does not believe Bashar al-Assad has done anything to merit rehabilitation by the international community. He remains a brutal dictator who continues to repress and commit atrocities against his own people. As the Secretary has said, “Our position is clear: We are not going to be in the business of normalizing relations with Assad.”

Question. The Arab Gas Pipeline intended to deliver natural gas from Egypt to Lebanon via pipelines in Syria which would enrich Assad. Do you believe the Pipeline would be compliant with the Caesar Act?

Answer. No final determination has been made about U.S. sanctions implications of that proposal. The final financing terms and contracts are still being discussed by the parties and the World Bank. The Departments of Treasury and State will review details of the final financing terms and contracts to assess any relevant sanctions concerns. At that time the Administration will have the information needed to make any final determinations.

Question. Will you commit to consulting with the committee on Caesar Act compliance before any issuance of comfort letters, waivers, or any licenses related to the Arab Gas Pipeline?

Answer. If confirmed as Deputy Secretary, I commit to consulting with Congress on compliance with the Caesar Act related to the Arab Gas Pipeline.

Question. There have been public reports that Hamas terrorists who attacked Israel on October 7 used the drug captagon, reinforcing the ties between the Assad regime, Iran, and terror proxies like Hamas. Please explain your understanding of the role captagon plays in Middle East geopolitics.

Answer. Captagon represents a grave and growing risk to the health and safety of people around the world. The Assad regime and terrorist groups such as Hizballah rely on illicit profits from captagon smuggling to circumvent sanctions and fund their illegal activities. The United States and our regional partners recognize that combatting the production and trafficking of these synthetic drugs requires collective action. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage our partners in the Middle East to support the Global Coalition to Address Synthetic Drugs Threats.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take as Deputy Secretary to implement the June 2023 State Department report on captagon?

Answer. I understand the Department of State, led by INL and NEA, is already taking steps to combat captagon trafficking in coordination with interagency and regional partners. These include efforts through the Global Coalition to Address Synthetic Drug Threats, which Secretary Blinken launched in July. If confirmed as Deputy Secretary, I will support efforts to continue to implement the June 2023 report on captagon.

Africa

Question. Do you agree with my assessment that the United States needs a presidential special envoy to Sudan who reports directly, and with unhindered access, to the secretary of State and president? Yes or No?

Answer. I agree that an envoy would add to the extensive efforts undertaken by the three ambassadors currently working full time on Sudan. It is under active and serious consideration by the Administration.

Question. What is your understanding of the bipartisan, bicameral Congressional concerns regarding U.S. policy on Sudan?

Answer. I understand that Congress, like the Department of State, wants to see an immediate end to the conflict, accountability for past atrocities and prevention of future ones, unhindered humanitarian assistance to affected communities, and the formation of a democratic government led by civilians in Sudan. The Department, under the Secretary's leadership and as part of a whole-of-government, interagency approach, is working tirelessly and with urgency to achieve these goals, and is constantly assessing and revising its approach to promote harmonization of international efforts and ensure we bring the right leverage to bear on the belligerent parties to resolve this devastating conflict.

Question. In your assessment, what, if any, practical impact have the Jeddah talks had on the situation on the ground in Sudan?

Answer. The Jeddah talks have provided a platform and an opportunity for the SAF and RSF to seek a negotiated end to the conflict and a channel to facilitate humanitarian assistance. During the recent talks, they committed to take steps to increase humanitarian assistance, including enhanced and ongoing coordination with the U.N. Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), and to implement confidence-building measures. Since those commitments were announced in early November 2023, we have been monitoring their progress on these steps. We remain ready to facilitate further technical talks, along with our Saudi and Inter-governmental Authority on Development for East Africa (IGAD) partners, if the parties demonstrate that they can implement their commitments and confidence building measures.

Question. What is your understanding of the roles and responsibilities of the Special Envoy for the Horn of Africa?

Answer. Special Envoy Ambassador Mike Hammer continues to work to advance peace in Ethiopia and support efforts to achieve a diplomatic resolution to the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam dispute involving Egypt, Ethiopia and Sudan. In addition, on Sudan, Special Envoy Hammer is engaging international partners in the region, starting with our African partners from the IGAD and the African Union, as well as other international partners, like the European Union, to chart a path forward for ending the conflict and restoring democratic civilian governance, while mobilizing support for humanitarian needs.

Question. In your assessment, had the Africa Bureau adequately prepared for a crisis in Sudan that required the evacuation of Embassy/Khartoum on April 22, 2023? Was the manner in which the evacuation occurred a best-case scenario or a worst-case scenario?

Answer. The Mission in Sudan was aware of complex security threats throughout Sudan before the conflict began, as reflected in consular and public messaging prior to the outbreak of hostilities, in which it consistently advised U.S. citizens to not travel to Sudan or to depart the country immediately. When it became safe to do so, the Mission assisted approximately 1,300 U.S. citizens and their immediate family members to leave via U.S. Government-organized convoys, flights with our international partners, and messaging about options to depart overland and via ferry.

Question. How will you draw upon the lessons from the lead-up to and evacuation of Embassy/Khartoum to prepare other high-risk posts where a similar scenario could play out, say in Chad, the Central African Republic, or South Sudan?

Answer. Following evacuation, the Office of Crisis Management and Strategy (CMS) coordinated drafting a lessons-learned document to capture what actions worked and identify opportunities for improvement. These lessons learned were shared within the Department and with posts abroad to inform future planning. In addition, the Bureau of African Affairs hosts periodic virtual workshops on crisis preparation with posts abroad, with the help of CMS, to discuss recent evacuations and any lessons learned from recent events.

Question. What lessons have been learned from the recent coups in Africa (Mali, Chad, Sudan, Guinea, Burkina Faso, Niger and Gabon) that should be applied to other countries at risk? How is the Biden Administration adjusting its approach to countries like Burundi, Cameroon, South Sudan, Zimbabwe, Nigeria to ensure they remain on a positive democratic trajectory?

Answer. Recent coups in Africa have highlighted the critical importance of U.S. efforts to stem democratic backsliding and confront human rights violations and abuses using both punitive measures and positive inducements. The Department will continue to support civil society, ensure members of marginalized groups have a voice in political processes, and provide resources to encourage democratic governance, effective service delivery, accountability, anti-corruption measures, and dialogue between capitals and communities, which are key to long-term stability and prosperity. At the 2022 U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit, President Biden announced the United States would increase political and technical support for democratic transitions through a new African Democratic and Political Transitions (ADAPT) initiative. ADAPT resources will provide technical assistance for ongoing efforts to draft a new constitution and prepare for free and fair elections, while also laying the groundwork for more effective and inclusive democratic institutions. Guinea was selected as the first recipient.

Question. How should lessons learned from situations in Mali and Sudan inform the State Department's sense of urgency in addressing protracted conflicts and failed peace processes in places like Cameroon and South Sudan?

Answer. While all have unique causes, at the core of undemocratic transfers of power and violent conflicts on the continent is a lack of accountable democratic governance and open political space, and each requires a democratic governance solution. Sustainable peace and democracy across the African continent will require continued investments in institutional reforms and civil society, including by empowering civil society advocacy through programs like the Bureau of African Affairs' Civil Society Partnerships for Civilian Security program.

Question. Given the rapidly deteriorating conditions for constructive relations with the junta, what are the Biden Administration's current top priorities for Mali?

Answer. The United States is committed to helping the Malian people achieve democracy, development, and stability. We are the largest single donor of development and humanitarian assistance that benefits the people in Mali. Our priority is to provide the people in Mali with access to humanitarian assistance, food, healthcare, and education while growing our relationships through cultural and exchange programs. While we support Mali's population, we will advocate for the transition government to return Mali to democracy and provide responsible security that respects human rights.

Question. With the departure of the French, as well as significant anti-French sentiment by the junta, which allies does the United States view as having the most influence with the junta? How are we working with these allies to advance mutually beneficial outcomes?

Answer. The transition government is not readily influenced by any allies, although it maintains relatively robust partnerships with some European partners, including Germany, Spain, and Italy. Russia is the transition government's preferred partner, which is unfortunate for the people in Mali who suffer from the abuses of the Wagner Group. We engage our allies on the ground in Bamako, through capitals, and in Washington to advocate for mutually beneficial outcomes.

Question. In recent months, Congress has been vocal about its concerns with South Africa's engagement and embrace of malign actors, to include the docking of sanctioned Russian vessel the "Lady R", recurring meetings with senior Iranian officials, including the Iranian president, inviting Putin to participate in the BRICS summit in Johannesburg, and recurrent engagement with Hamas following its October 7 attack on Israel. Do you agree that South Africa's recent actions, including those noted here, constitute a threat to U.S. national security and foreign policy interests?

Answer. We value our partnership with South Africa and the opportunity to engage in frank discussions on a range of topics. As is the case with many countries, we have to manage our shared priorities—including trade, health, and climate change—alongside areas where we disagree. If confirmed, I commit to working closely with you to clearly convey our position regarding any actions that undermine U.S. national security.

Question. How would you characterize the U.S./Zimbabwe relationship at this time?

Answer. After the poor elections in August, and other attacks on democratic institutions, the U.S./Zimbabwe relationship remains strained, which severely limits our ability to form a mutually beneficial partnership. On December 4, Secretary Blinken announced a new visa restriction policy targeting those responsible for, or complicit in, undermining Zimbabwe's democracy. We continue to cooperate on areas of mutual interest including public health, humanitarian demining, refugee protection, and combating trafficking in persons.

Question. What is your assessment of Nigeria's 2023 electoral process?

Answer. Nigeria's 2023 national and state-level elections took place on February 25 and March 18, 2023, respectively. Election observers generally found that the results, including the result of the presidential race, reflected the will of voters. Nonetheless, I understand there were significant problems surrounding the electoral process, including serious technical and logistical challenges, as well as instances of voter suppression, voter intimidation, and electoral violence, that left many voters very frustrated.

Question. What is your understanding of the specific acute staffing challenges facing the Africa Bureau?

Answer. Embassies in AF operate with persistent staffing gaps, with eight fewer staff per Embassy compared to other regional averages; AF posts see the highest vacancy rates of any region. Insufficient infrastructure, inadequate schools, health care challenges, and the remote nature of many posts in Africa are inherent impediments to getting our posts to full staffing. The Department continues to use increased incentives for service in historically difficult to staff posts, including service needs differential for extended service, along with hardship differentials, and prioritized assignments to incentivize service in AF posts. Multiple (10) Ambassadors are awaiting confirmation in the region.

Question. What steps will you take, if confirmed, to encourage experienced ambassadors to bid on priority ambassadorial posts in the Africa Bureau?

Answer. I am strongly committed to ensuring that the most experienced and qualified officers in the State Department are selected for ambassador assignments in the Africa Bureau. If confirmed, I will chair the Deputies Committee which recommends ambassadorial candidates to the Secretary and to the President. I am committed to active outreach to senior officers and will prioritize a thorough review of candidates' leadership skills, senior-level experience in the region, and a strong record of policy and management accomplishment.

Question. Do you commit to working with the Africa Bureau, Deputy Secretary of State for Management and other relevant bureaus and State Department leaders to address the specific and acute staffing challenges faced by the Africa Bureau?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Africa Bureau and all other relevant parts of the Department to address staffing challenges in Africa. I understand the Department continues to use increased incentives for service in historically difficult to staff posts around the world, including service needs differential as an incentive for extended service, along with hardship differentials, and early handshakes, among others. If confirmed, I commit to reviewing how we can improve recruitment so as to fill hard-to-fill posts around the world, especially in Africa.

The United States and the United Nations

Question. How will you, if confirmed, balance the International Organizations bureau within the Political Affairs family regarding decision-making?

Answer. President Biden consistently affirms his commitment to multilateralism and has advanced U.S. policy objectives at the United Nations and other international organizations on a range of topics important to U.S. national security. If confirmed, I commit to working with the entire Political Affairs family, including the Bureau of International Organization Affairs, to advance U.S. interests.

Question. There is growing concern about the aggressive efforts of the Chinese Communist Party to stack U.N. agencies with Chinese Nationals and secure leadership positions in order to exert undue influence in International Organizations. Do you share this concern?

Answer. This is a valid concern. Working in coordination with allies and partners, the United States is committed to upholding the integrity of the U.N. system and preventing strategic competitors from exerting undue influence. Our efforts are succeeding. The PRC currently leads only one U.N. agency, down from four in 2020, while the United States leads five international organizations. To advance U.S. citizen employment and ensure U.N. personnel remain committed to the organization's founding ideals, we are recruiting and advocating on behalf of U.S. citizens applying for positions at all levels.

Question. Do you believe the United States should craft a comprehensive strategy to ensure the open and transparent processes for the selection and promotion of Directors, Secretary Generals, and Director Generals of all international organizations, including the U.N. and its specialized bodies?

Answer. We will continue to advocate for transparent processes for the selection and promotion of personnel in the U.N. system. We are committed to ensuring the U.N. has skilled, well-qualified, and capable leadership and personnel to address global challenges. The Office of Multilateral Strategy and Personnel in the Bureau of International Organizations Affairs leads the Department's efforts to ensure the appointment and elections of qualified, independent U.S. and like-minded candidates to leadership positions in the U.N. system, including specialized agencies.

Question. What do you believe is the most appropriate level of funding to the United Nations?

Answer. I believe that funding levels for the United Nations and other international organizations should be tailored to the amounts necessary to accomplish each organization's mission and advance our national interests.

Ensuring budget discipline at international organizations is especially important given current budgetary constraints and the need to make the best use of U.S. taxpayer dollars.

Question. Should the U.S. leverage our contributions to promote necessary reform within U.N. specialized bodies/committees?

Answer. As the largest contributor to the U.N. specialized agencies, the United States has a special obligation to pursue all reforms necessary to ensure those entities function as efficiently and effectively as possible while adhering to best practices for transparency and accountability.

If confirmed, I will continue the Department's efforts to leverage our financial contributions to achieve and sustain such reforms.

Question. The U.S. has accrued peacekeeping arrears due to incongruence between U.S. law and U.N. assessment levels. How will you advocate for the lowering of U.S. peacekeeping assessments to 25 percent during the scales of assessment negotiations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will advocate for better burden sharing by other countries, especially through preservation of the 22 percent ceiling that sets the regular budget assessment rate for the United States. The 22 percent ceiling has had the effect of lowering the U.S. peacekeeping assessment rate by up to 6 percent points to the current level of 26.9 percent.

Question. Do you support paying the backlog of U.S. arrears, including the pre-Helms-Biden agreement arrears, or will you honor the bipartisan agreement negotiated in the current President's name?

Answer. If confirmed, I would welcome the opportunity to work with Congress to allow the United States to meet our current financial obligations. Given current financial constraints, meeting current obligations should take priority over older arrears that the Administration is not seeking to pay.

Question. Given the potential conflict with U.S. policy that U.N. membership would cause, what actions would the Biden Administration take if the Palestinian Authority submitted a new application for membership to the U.N. or attempt to accede to any new U.N. body?

Answer. Efforts by the Palestinians to join international organizations as a state at this stage are premature and counterproductive. There are no shortcuts to Palestinian statehood outside direct negotiations between the parties, and this includes counterproductive steps to gain membership as a state in the United Nations or U.N. specialized agencies. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring the United States works to deter such actions, including through calling attention to relevant U.S. statutory provisions.

Question. Do you support establishing an office of U.N. Integrity within the Political Affairs family to counter malign influence within the U.N. system and to promote free and fair elections within the U.N. system?

Answer. The Bureau of International Organization Affairs, which falls under the Political Affairs family, established the Office of Multilateral Strategy and Personnel in 2021 in consultation with Congress. That office coordinates efforts to counter malign influence within the U.N. system, including those by the PRC, Russia, and others to undermine the principles and values enshrined in the U.N. Charter. It also works to ensure the appointment and elections of qualified, independent U.S. and like-minded candidates to leadership positions in the U.N. system.

Energy

Question. Do you agree that natural gas plays a critical role in ensuring affordable and reliable energy security for U.S. allies and partners around the world?

Answer. The United States is the largest producer and exporter of natural gas in the world, and natural gas will be a part of the energy mix for the near term. U.S. LNG exports alongside clean energy deployment and energy efficiency improvements have played a decisive role in Europe's ability to reduce dependence on Russian piped natural gas and ensure the invasion of Ukraine is a strategic defeat for the Kremlin. The Administration is committed to reducing global fossil fuel dependence and scaling up clean energy globally to keep the goal of limiting warming to 1.5 degrees Celsius within reach. The Administration prioritizes reducing global methane emissions and the carbon intensity of the oil and gas sector through efforts such as the Global Methane Pledge.

Question. In your view, and based on your experience in your current position, does the Administration's International Energy Engagement Guidance empower or constrain the ability of the State Department, Treasury, and other agencies to support natural gas projects in key regions? Please provide a detailed explanation of your view, including with examples.

Answer. The International Energy Engagement Guidance was designed to support projects that advance decarbonization but includes specific exemptions that preserve the State Department's ability to support highly strategic projects that enable energy access in the most vulnerable countries or advance U.S. national security interests, particularly as Russia attempts to leverage its energy supplies as a tool of coercion. For example, the Biden Administration is helping Ukraine rebuild its energy infrastructure and has advocated for the Interconnector Greece-Bulgaria and new regasification terminals in Europe, which are key to U.S. partners' and allies' efforts to end energy imports from Russia and accelerate their energy transitions.

Question. What has the Biden Administration done to support natural gas projects in the Indo-Pacific and Africa?

Answer. We recognize every country will have a unique pathway to achieving net zero emissions, and natural gas can increase energy access while replacing more carbon-intensive forms of energy, such as coal, which we want to phase out as soon as possible. The Department works with our partners on the responsible development of natural gas, including methane emissions reductions in the gas supply chain. For example, in September ENR and the Department of Commerce jointly released the Methane Abatement for Oil and Gas: Handbook for Policy Makers to assist hydrocarbon producing countries reduce industry emissions.

PGII

Question. If confirmed, what actions will you take to ensure unity of effort across the Department's initiatives related to strategic infrastructure, energy, critical minerals, and other national security-sensitive projects, including PGII?

Answer. The Department has several initiatives to advance our strategic and national security goals, including the Partnership for Global Infrastructure and Investment (PGI), the Administration's flagship infrastructure initiative and coordinated out of the Department. If confirmed, I would commit to ensure the Department's initiatives, which also include, but are not limited to, the Blue Dot Network, the Digital Connectivity and Cybersecurity Partnership, the Minerals Security Partnership, and the Transaction Advisory Fund, are coordinated.

Question. Do you commit to upholding the Department's assurances to RM Risch that the primary driver for U.S. investments in these projects will be strategic and national security considerations, regardless of their nexus to other preferences like climate change or gender?

Answer. The Partnership for Global Infrastructure and Investment (PGI) aims to advance global infrastructure that will strengthen and diversify our supply chains, advance strategic and national security interests, and respond to the needs of our partners. To advance these goals, I commit to working with the Office of the Special Presidential Coordinator for PGI to ensure prioritization of investments in three core areas: securing clean energy supply chains; fortifying trusted information and communications technology networks; and building critical transportation and logistics infrastructure.

Department of State Management and Oversight

Question. Do you commit to pursuing a thorough investigation into decisions made by the Department State from 2020 onwards that enabled China to subject U.S. diplomats to violations of their privileges and immunities?

Answer. As I stated at my hearing, I intend to do so. If confirmed, I would review all aspects of the status of our mission personnel in China in consultation with Department experts and would take appropriate action to ensure protection of our mission personnel. Should this issue arise again, I would review requests for waivers in consultation with Department experts and would take appropriate action to ensure protection of our mission personnel.

Question. Do you pledge to provide direct oversight of the Department of State's implementation of AUKUS?

Answer. Yes, I intend to help lead the AUKUS effort of the State Department towards a success in both pillars I and II given their respective importance to U.S. national security.

Our China policy and prioritization must be driven by the Secretary and the Deputy—with other Senate-confirmed officials ensuring the Department executes a unified commander's intent. That requires a robust policy coordination mechanism, led by the Secretary or Deputy Secretary, to prioritize China-related policy lines of effort and provide concrete guidance on execution, and direct Under Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries to increase their coordination as well. At all levels, officials should be held accountable by frequent touchpoints with the Department's senior leadership to ensure their actions align with identified priorities and guidance. China House cannot and should not be a replacement for any of this.

Question. What is your plan for the Deputy role in driving a coherent China policy tied to strategic objectives where officials are accountable to the Secretary and to you for executing that policy?

Answer. I strongly support the bipartisan commitment to focus, elevate, and integrate the tools of American diplomacy to meet the generational challenge posed by the PRC. A centerpiece of the Secretary's modernization agenda, the establishment of the Office of China Coordination last year focused on equipping and empowering the Department to meet the challenges and seize the opportunities of the decade ahead. It signals to the entire Department the critical coordination role China House plays and enables it to draw on the strength of the full enterprise, including from regional and functional bureaus. If confirmed, I will chair the PRC Strategy Group, which ensures that Department leadership provides regular direction and guidance on execution of our strategy and various lines of effort and holds Under Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries accountable for its implementation. As Deputy Secretary and chair of the PRC Strategy Group, I will retain responsibility for major policy decisions and adjudicating relevant disagreements on China policy within the Department. If confirmed, I intend to continue the heavy focus of the Deputy Secretary on issues related to the PRC and assure you that China House will operate under my auspices and that I will continue to personally oversee the Department's execution of our PRC strategy.

Question. Do you commit to providing SFRC with your office's evaluation of the effectiveness of "China House" within six months of your confirmation?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to maintaining close dialogue with SFRC on issues related to the PRC, ensuring the Department of State has the talent, tools, and resources to successfully execute U.S. policy and strategy towards the PRC as the most complex and consequential challenge of the 21st century. This includes briefing the committee in open and classified settings, as appropriate.

Question. The Department of State possesses a wellspring of expertise among economic officers who will continue to play a critical role in fostering a more level playing field for U.S. companies, helping them compete with Chinese companies and succeed despite anti-competitive economic practices employed by China.

- Do you commit to fostering a strong corps of economic officers within the Department, including through providing tools and training they need to succeed in addressing issues related to China's unfair economic practices?
- Do you commit, through issuing All Diplomatic and Consular Posts (ALDAC) cables and via other means, to making sure economic officers prioritize among their various duties active economic and commercial diplomacy, including providing tangible support to U.S. companies as appropriate, tracking China's anti-competitive economic policies, and developing associated recommendations?
- Do you commit to ensuring that economic diplomacy is a top priority of every U.S. ambassador, and that performance of ambassadors will be evaluated in part on their commitment to advancing economic and commercial diplomacy?

Answer. The scale, scope, and stakes of the challenge posed by the PRC requires the Department of State to think, organize, collaborate, and act in new ways—both domestically and overseas—to compete effectively in this new age. Novel challenges demand novel responses. Economic officers around the world play a critical role in supporting economic and commercial diplomacy. I support efforts to engage broadly to improve supply chain diversity and security and to elevate standards, resilience, sustainability, and inclusive prosperity at home and abroad, and I will make this clear to our Chiefs of Mission and to our economic officers around the world.

Question. Last year, Congress enacted several ranking member priorities in the NDAA, including the Secure Embassy Construction and Counterterrorism Act and the Diplomatic Support and Security Act. These bills together have the potential to make generational change at the Department to move away from risk avoidance and towards allowing diplomats to get out from behind Embassy walls and do their jobs.

- What is your assessment of the Department's current approach to risk tolerance?
- If confirmed, do you commit to encouraging the swift implementation and robust practice of these laws at the Department?
- How would you work promote cultural and structural changes at the Department to rebalance risk tolerance?

Answer. As Secretary Blinken has said, "A world of zero risk is not a world in which American diplomacy can deliver. We have to accept risk and manage it smartly." If confirmed, I commit to the timely implementation of the Secure Embassy Construction and Counterterrorism Act and Diplomatic Support and Security Act. These bills give the Department greater flexibility to balance diplomatic effectiveness with security, while institutionalizing a culture of learning. I, likewise, commit to support Department initiatives to train, encourage, incentivize, and enable thoughtful risk management.

Question. From your perspective, what are the primary differences in roles and responsibilities between the Deputy Secretary and Deputy Secretary for Management and Resources?

- If confirmed, how would you work with DMR to ensure there are no gaps or overlap in responsibilities? Please describe your understanding of the anticipated work relationship with the Deputy Secretary for Management and Resources.

Answer. Deputy Secretary for Management and Resources Verma acts as the Chief Operating Officer of the Department of State and leads Department efforts on modernization, foreign assistance, and a wide range of workforce and strategic issues. He is also a longstanding friend and a brilliant diplomat. If confirmed, I would work closely with Secretary Blinken, Deputy Secretary for Management and Resources Verma, and others to discuss and communicate the delineation of responsibilities between the offices of the Deputy Secretary and the Deputy Secretary for Management and Resources.

Question. For the past 2 years, this committee has enacted a State Department Authorization bill into law. In the past, the Department has been late in providing requests or feedback to the committee, making it difficult or impossible to include some Department asks.

Answer. I am pleased the Department and Congress have reinvigorated the State authorization bill process, including through the Department submitting legislative proposals to committee staff and working the committees to address feedback and refine the proposals. I deeply appreciate that the Department of State Authorization Act of 2023 included many provisions that the Department had requested. It is my hope that our teams will continue to work collectively to even further streamline the process in order to allow for even more constructive discussions, direct redline edits, where possible, and real-time engagement with a particular focus on including Department priorities.

Global Health

Question. The COVID-19 pandemic demonstrated the need for the United States to have stronger diplomatic foundations with partners overseas to address global infectious disease threats. My Global Health Security and International Pandemic Prevention, Preparedness and Response Act will help to better address these threats before they become global pandemics.

- If confirmed, how do you intend to implement this legislation?
- What concrete steps would you take to effectively organize and resource the Department's new Global Health Bureau to advance the global health security and diplomacy objectives of the United States overseas?
- If confirmed, will you commit to ensuring the Global Health Security Bureau and the Ambassador-at-Large who leads it play the leading role in executing the U.S. global health security strategy overseas, including through coordination of diplomatic efforts and U.S. foreign assistance resources made available to the implementing agencies (USAID, CDC, Peace Corps) for pandemic prevention and preparedness?

Answer. If confirmed, I will consult with my colleagues in the Department and Congress to ensure this legislation is implemented effectively. Also, if confirmed, I will continue to strengthen the Department's work, led by the Bureau of Global Health Security and Diplomacy (GHSD), to advance U.S. Bureau of Global Health Security and Diplomacy (GHSD), to advance U.S. Bureau of Global Health Security and Diplomacy (GHSD), to advance U.S. Bureau of Global Health Security and Diplomacy (GHSD), to advance U.S. Bureau of Global Health Security and Diplomacy (GHSD), to advance U.S. Bureau of Global Health Security and Diplomacy (GHSD), to advance U.S.

Pol-Mil—AUKUS

Question. AUKUS remains a critical effort in building out allied capabilities to deter Chinese aggression. Pillar 2 would do just that, providing export control exemptions to expedite the transfer of critical technology with UK and Australia. However, there are concerns that the Biden administration might not certify an exemption for the UK, which would vastly undermine the efficacy and strategic mission of the agreement.

- Do you believe that both the UK and Australia have legal and regulatory regimes comparable to that of the United States? If not, what specific changes do you want them to make?

Answer. AUKUS partners remain committed to ensuring appropriate security as we deepen our defense and security relationships. In recent months both Australia and the UK have made efforts to strengthen their controls, and we are in regular discussion with both partners to understand their controls and any upcoming changes. As key trusted allies, we intend to work closely with both to improve cooperation in key technologies.

I understand that National Defense Authorization Act recently passed by the Senate would require the President within 120 days of enactment to determine if the UK and Australia have implemented a system of comparable controls. If confirmed, I look forward to examining this issue and providing my advice to the Secretary of State and the President as he makes this determination.

Question. You assert that AUKUS contributes to the deterrence of China. Deterrence entails manipulating an adversary's cost-benefit calculation—typically through the issuance of a threat—that leads to something not happening. Chinese complaints about AUKUS do not mean that it is being deterred.

- In what specific ways does AUKUS deter China? How has China's behavior changed since AUKUS—what is it not doing now that it was doing, or was planning to do, before the agreement was announced?
- What, besides deterrence, are the other strategic and political-military benefits of the AUKUS agreement?
- What other allies would you like to see eventually join AUKUS?

Answer. AUKUS is part of a comprehensive Administration strategy to harness our national strengths and unmatched network of allies and partners to advance a free, open, and secure Indo-Pacific region. AUKUS deepens our diplomatic, security, economic, and defense cooperation with two of our closest allies to enhance the security and the military capabilities of all three partners. The National Security Strategy and National Defense Strategy describe integrated deterrence as a holistic response to the strategies that our competitors are pursuing and calls on us to combine our strengths to achieve maximum effect in deterring acts of aggression. Allies and partners are a center of gravity for the strategy. AUKUS provides a mechanism to enhance U.S. and partner conventional military capabilities, enables a more integrated, capable, and resilient defense industrial base; increases information-sharing, and implements cooperative policies that reflect and realize the concepts laid out in both the National Security Strategy and National Defense Strategy. Deeper ties with the United Kingdom and Australia also serve to expand collective defense production and bolster supply chain resilience, essential elements of integrated deterrence.

We will continue to engage with other partners and allies to advance AUKUS, including on potential partnership opportunities under Pillar II activities as our work to build advanced capabilities progresses.

Question. China's rapid expansion of its nuclear arsenal has placed it on a trajectory to achieve nuclear parity with the United States by the 2030s. At the same time, Russia remains the largest nuclear force in the world with the highest number of nuclear weapons. The present security environment is a world in which the United States must be prepared to face two nuclear peer competitors. Do you agree that any new arms control must include both Russia and China as well as types of nuclear weapons?

Answer. The type of limits the United States will be able to agree to in a future strategic arms control instrument with Russia will be impacted by the size and scope of the PRC's nuclear buildup. While the United States welcomed the opportunity to highlight its concerns with China's opaque and large-scale buildup, clear responses to U.S. proposals to reduce strategic risk will be necessary to determine whether our bilateral engagement can result in substantive, positive impacts for U.S. and allied national security. Beijing's nuclear weapons buildup, however, does not necessarily preclude another bilateral U.S.-Russia arms control instrument after the expiration of New START. Addressing all of Russia's nuclear weapons, including its new, long-range systems and large arsenal of so-called nonstrategic nuclear weapons, also remains a U.S. arms control objective.

U.S.-China Mil to Mil

Question. Chinese officials have cut regular contact with the U.S. military for 7 years now. Secretary Blinken has continued to prioritize the necessity of the mil-to-mil relationship—signaling to the Chinese that this is an urgent U.S. priority. The Biden Administration often describes its logic for pursuing these talks as means for reducing misperception and miscalculation and as an attempt to achieve risk reduction.

- Do the Chinese seek to use mil-to-mil comms as a point of leverage?
- Why is it in the strategic interest of the U.S. to keep pursuing mil to mil dialogue with the Chinese?
- Have the Chinese stated that they share our view of the importance of reducing the risk of miscalculation and misperception? Is it in their interest to foster uncertainty on the part of the U.S.—in particular, when it comes to military operations in the Pacific?
- If confirmed as Deputy Sec State, how would you approach the issue of mil-to-mil communications with the Chinese?

Answer. We are clear-eyed about our diplomatic and military-to-military engagement with the PRC, and we will continue to vigorously advance and defend U.S. interests. While it is in the U.S. interest to maintain open military-to-military communications at all levels to prevent miscalculation and unintended conflict, clarify intentions, and ensure the safety of our servicemembers, we will continue to strengthen our regional deterrence and defense posture as necessary to ensure peace, security, and stability. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts to advance and defend U.S. interests.

Western Hemisphere

Question. In 2024 key provisions of the United States' Columbia River Treaty with Canada are set to expire. The Columbia River Treaty provides the northwest region stable flood control, hydroelectric power, and water flow throughout each year. The State Department has been engaged in modernizing the treaty since 2018. If confirmed, do you commit to making the renegotiation of the treaty a priority to the State Department?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize modernizing the Columbia River Treaty regime and emphasize the urgency to reach agreement imminently. The Columbia River is the lifeblood of the Pacific Northwest's environment and economy, and I will pursue a modernized treaty regime that continues adequate flood control, lowers the amount of hydropower sent to Canada, and supports flows for salmon migration.

Question. If confirmed, how will you organize and mobilize the resources of the State Department to counter malign Russian Government behavior and influence in the Western Hemisphere.

Answer. The United States raises concerns with its allies and partners regarding threats of increasing Russian security cooperation in the Americas. The U.S. Government closely monitors Russian support for Cuba, Nicaragua, and Venezuela, including its provision of military advisors, training and equipment, disinformation mechanisms, and financial backing. The United States uses diplomatic, economic, and public diplomacy tools to counter problematic Russian influence in the region.

Question. If confirmed, how will you organize and mobilize the resources of the State Department to counter malign Chinese Government behavior and influence in the Western Hemisphere?

Answer. The U.S. Government—through sustained engagement with the Western Hemisphere—bolsters the region's coalition of resilient democracies that champion our shared values. If confirmed, I would work closely with allies and partners to increase high-standard infrastructure investment and transparent economic development. If confirmed, I will urge partners to carefully consider PRC investment in critical infrastructure or sensitive sectors, which could expose a country to serious national security and data privacy threats.

Question. What is your assessment of the strategic threat China presents in the North American Arctic? If confirmed, what strategies would you employ to strengthen bilateral efforts with Canada to deter and compete with China in the Arctic region?

Answer. The PRC declared itself a near-Arctic state and increasingly invested resources that would garner it a greater say in Arctic affairs, as well as access to shipping lanes and mineral wealth. If confirmed, I would partner with Canadian colleagues, both bilaterally and multilaterally, to ensure the Arctic remains a diplomatic, economic, and strategic priority. We will robustly share information on the economic and military threats the PRC poses to the region and work closely with both Arctic and non-Arctic states to limit the PRC's influence in the Arctic.

Question. Please describe your views about Chinese Illegal, Unreported, and Unregulated (IUU) fishing in the waters of the Western Hemisphere. If confirmed, what policy tools would you employ to support Western Hemisphere partners threatened by these malicious activities?

Answer. IUU fishing is a global security threat and it is critical that all flag States, including the PRC, fully accept and implement their responsibilities to prevent and deter IUU fishing. The State Department chairs the Maritime Security and Fisheries Enforcement (SAFE) Act Interagency Working Group that leads the whole-of-government approach to combating IUU fishing. The Department is also leading a series of IUU fishing information exchanges in Latin America, which bring together U.S. Government interagency experts, foreign government representatives, and civil society stakeholders to discuss tools for fisheries governance and establish critical partnerships. If confirmed, I commit to supporting these efforts.

Question. Is it in the interest of the United States that China develop and operate maritime ports in the Western Hemisphere, including the Chancay Port in Peru? Please answer yes or no, and explain why. Please describe the steps you will take if confirmed to reduce the security threats posed by these activities.

Answer. It is in the United States' interest to promote democracy, fair competition, economic growth, security, and human rights in Peru. If confirmed, I will work with our Embassy in Lima to raise awareness in Peru about the long-term risks of partnering with the PRC on infrastructure projects, and I will promote U.S. business and investment as a partner of choice. We will continue to monitor PRC investments and provide an alternative model that benefits both the United States and Peru.

Question. Will you commit to prioritizing efforts to support providing alternatives to untrusted Chinese vendors and firms in telecommunications and electricity power grids in Latin America and the Caribbean? If so, please explain how.

Answer. The United States actively encourages countries in Latin America and the Caribbean to prioritize security in their telecommunications and energy infrastructure. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department maintains its consistent focus on critical infrastructure security and emphasizes collaboration with like-minded partners through capacity building, regulatory cooperation, and other forms of assistance.

Question. What is your assessment of the strategic threat Russia presents in the Arctic? If confirmed, what strategies would you employ to strengthen bilateral efforts with Canada to deter and compete with Russia in the Arctic region?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Canadian colleagues, both bilaterally and multilaterally, to continue deterring and countering Russia's military build-up in the region, while scrutinizing its economic and diplomatic efforts. Both Canada and the United States remain clear eyed about the risks Russia poses in the Arctic. Canada remains a stalwart ally committed to defending the hemisphere and fulfilling its NATO- and North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD)-related security responsibilities in partnership with the United States.

Question. Nicaraguan exports to the United States have increased by approximately 70 percent since the Dominican Republic-Central America Free Trade Agreement (DR-CAFTA) went into effect in 2006. DR-CAFTA requires important reforms of the domestic legal and business environment that encourage competitive business development and investment, protect intellectual property rights, and promote transparency and the rule-of-law in the trade partners.

- Has Nicaragua instituted reforms that promote transparency and the rule-of-law over the last 15 years since the trade deal has gone into effect?
- Is Nicaragua abiding by its commitments to DR-CAFTA?

Answer. The Ortega-Murillo regime has minimally fulfilled its commitments to DR-CAFTA. However, the regime continues to suppress democracy and fails to respect the human rights of Nicaraguans. The regime continues to use violence; harsh prison conditions; denial of respect for freedom of peaceful assembly; closure of civil society organizations, independent media, and independent academic institutions; repression of the Catholic Church; and unjust arrests and sentences for those who criticize the regime.

Question. Is it in the interest of the United States to act on the request of President Chaves of Costa Rica to allow Costa Rica's entry into the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA), yes or no?

Answer. Costa Rica is one of our closest economic partners in the region, exemplified by its leadership in the Americas Partnership for Economic Prosperity (APEP). Costa Rica committed to host the 2025 APEP Leaders' Summit, to develop a digital economy Center of Excellence, and to host a semiconductor supply chain and workforce symposium in early 2024. It is in the interest of the United States to consider every avenue for strengthening the economic partnership with Costa Rica and I commit to neutrally evaluating all proposed options to do so, if confirmed.

Question. Do you agree that the absence of a trade agreement with the United States puts Ecuador at an economic disadvantage compared to Colombia and Peru?

Answer. The United States is Ecuador's principal trading partner. Ecuador and the United States have expanded economic and commercial ties in the past few years. Both countries signed the Protocol on Trade Rules and Transparency in December 2020, updating our existing Trade and Investment Council Agreement. In October 2022, USTR Tai and Ecuador's Production Minister Prado established a Fair-Trade Working Group on negotiations on labor, environment, and digital trade.

Question. Colombia's crop of illicit coca has reached historically high levels. Meanwhile, the Petro Government has stopped voluntary, forced, and aerial eradication, and it is seizing significantly lower amounts of cocaine and heroin than the previous government. What impact does this situation have on the security environment in Ecuador?

Answer. The U.S. Government continues to work with the Colombian Government to address illicit drug production and trafficking, as well as other transnational crimes.

Over the past few years Ecuador has experienced intensifying violence and citizen insecurity along its northern border with Colombia and in coastal areas, including the city of Guayaquil. Violence is driven largely by local gangs influenced by Mexican transnational criminal organizations.

Question. Is the Chinese fishing fleet off the coast of Galapagos a source of concern regarding drug trafficking from South America?

Answer. Yes. To that end, the State Department works closely with the U.S. Coast Guard, DOD's Joint Interagency Task Force-South, and other U.S. Government institutions to help Ecuador increase its maritime domain awareness and defend against security threats such as illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing vessels and drug trafficking.

Question. Do you agree that China's growing activity and presence in and around the Panama Canal poses a threat to U.S. national security?

Answer. The PRC continues to increase its presence in the hemisphere, but the United States remains Panama's preferred partner. The Department maintains close coordination with the Panama Canal Authority, provides technical assistance, and routinely consults with Panama on tenders to ensure prioritization of the long-term security of the canal, Panama, and the region. The Department coordinates with Panama and the Department of Defense to address threats to national security, including coordinating on large-scale multinational exercises such as PANAMAX.

Question. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen U.S.-Taiwan trilateral cooperation across the Western Hemisphere?

Answer. As a leading democracy, Taiwan remains an essential partner in a region where most countries share U.S. values. If confirmed, I would continue U.S. support for Taiwan's diplomatic and unofficial relationships across the Western Hemisphere.

Question. Should the former president of Ecuador, Rafael Correa, be considered for a 7031(c) designation? Please explain.

Answer. Section 7031(c) requires the Secretary of State to publicly or privately designate foreign officials and their immediate family members about whom the Secretary has credible information of involvement in significant corruption or a gross violation of human rights. While the U.S. Government does not publicly preview any possible changes or upcoming actions related to U.S. sanctions, export controls, or law enforcement activity, if confirmed, I will continue to use this authority and all available tools to combat corruption globally.

Question. Should the outgoing vice president of Argentina, Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner, be considered for a 7031(c) designation? Please explain.

Answer. Section 7031(c) requires the Secretary of State to publicly or privately designate foreign officials and their immediate family members about whom the Secretary has credible information of involvement in significant corruption or a gross violation of human rights. While the U.S. Government does not publicly preview any possible changes or upcoming actions related to U.S. sanctions, export controls, or law enforcement activity, if confirmed, I will continue to use this authority and all available tools to combat corruption globally.

Cuba

Question. For decades, the Cuban Government has harbored a number of U.S. fugitives of justice, including: Joanne Chesimard, on the FBI's most wanted terrorists list for executing New Jersey state trooper Werner Foerster in 1973; Ishmael LaBeet, convicted of killing eight people in the U.S. Virgin Islands in 1972; and Charles Lee Hill, charged with killing New Mexico state policeman Robert Rosenbloom in 1971; among others.

- Does Cuba's provision of food, housing, and medical care for these U.S. fugitives constitute support for international terrorism?
- If confirmed, do you commit to prioritizing the extradition of all fugitives from U.S. law enjoying safe harbor in Cuba?
- Should the United States remove Cuba from the list of state sponsors of terrorism (SST) while they continue to harbor U.S. fugitives?
- Would you advise establishing diplomatic relations with Cuba while it continues to provide safe harbor to fugitives from the U.S. justice system?

- Please submit the list of specific assurances provided by the Government of Cuba in relation to its removal from the list in 2015.

Answer. In the Department of State's designation announcement of Cuba as a State Sponsor of Terrorism (SST) in January 2021, it noted that "the Cuban Government has fed, housed, and provided medical care for murderers, bombmakers, and hijackers, while many Cubans go hungry, homeless, and without basic medicine." If confirmed, I will prioritize seeking the return of U.S. fugitives from Cuba. U.S. law establishes statutory criteria for rescinding an SST designation. If confirmed, I would ensure that any review of Cuba's status would be based on the criteria in the law established by Congress.

Question. If confirmed, how will you work to ensure that U.S. public and private engagement in Cuba does not disproportionately benefit the Cuban military, intelligence, or security services or personnel at the expense of the Cuban people?

Answer. The private sector holds the most promise for improving the lives of the Cuban people. Since 2021, the Cuban Government authorized the operation of over 9,000 private companies. The Administration's support for entrepreneurs seeks to maximize benefit for the Cuban people, while minimizing benefit to the Government. For example, in 2022, the Administration pushed the Cuban Government to move the processing of U.S. remittances outside of military channels. If confirmed, I will ensure future initiatives do not disproportionately benefit the Cuban Government.

Question. In the Mais Medicos program, which ran from 2013-2018, the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) facilitated the deployment of thousands of Cuban doctors to Brazil, some of whom subsequently alleged misconduct and abuse. If confirmed, do you commit to working to ensure PAHO implements necessary governance changes to ensure increased oversight of future projects or programs such as Mais Medicos?

Answer. The Department of State documented Cuba's labor export program and its strong indicators of forced labor, and the Administration seeks every opportunity to bring abuses to light. The United States proposed governance reforms to prevent the recurrence of PAHO's involvement in projects like Mais Medicos, and PAHO's Directing Council approved the reform proposal by consensus in September 2020. If confirmed, I will continue this engagement with PAHO leadership to increase PAHO's transparency and accountability.

Central America

Question. Please describe the nexus between transnational criminal organizations and human smuggling/trafficking across Central America and Mexico? What financial benefits would you estimate drug trafficking groups are reaping from the increased flows of illegal migrants arriving at our Southwest border?

Answer. Transnational criminal organizations (TCOs) based in Central America and Mexico profit from migrant smuggling and trafficking in persons (TIP) across Central America and in Mexico by engaging directly in those illicit activities or charging fees for migrants, smugglers, and traffickers to cross TCO-controlled territory, including along the U.S.-Mexico border. TCOs also gain from exploiting migrants and TIP victims, such as through kidnapping for ransom, particularly if TCOs believe migrants heading to the United States have relatives who can pay ransoms.

Question. With illegal migration through the southwest U.S. border at a 21-year high, what actions will the Administration take to incentivize the Governments of Mexico and northern Central America to uphold their domestic and international obligations regarding refugee and asylum seekers?

Answer. The Department encourages governments throughout the Western Hemisphere, including Mexico and Central America, to uphold their international obligations to provide protection for those who need it through bilateral and multilateral engagement. Through humanitarian partners, we build governments' asylum capacity to screen individuals and provide protection. We also participate in the asylum working group of the Los Angeles Declaration on Migration and Protection to promote a regional approach so people can find safety closer to home.

Question. Guatemala is the largest country in the world to recognize Taiwan and one of three countries in continental Latin America to do so.

- If confirmed, what actions would you take to encourage stronger Guatemala-Taiwan relations?

- Please describe how Guatemala's diplomatic recognition of the PRC could affect U.S. interests and programs in Guatemala.

Answer. Taiwan is a reliable, likeminded, and democratic partner and its relationship with Guatemala provides significant and sustainable benefits to the Guatemalan people. As a leading democracy, Taiwan remains an essential partner in a region where most countries share U.S. values. If confirmed, I would continue U.S. support for Taiwan to build relationships across the Western Hemisphere.

Question. China has shown interest in critical sectors in Guatemala like technology and nickel mining. In 2020, Huawei donated a telecommunications tower to Guatemala to train 4G and 5G technicians.

- If confirmed, how would you communicate with Guatemalans about the risks of the PRC's predatory economic practices and of untrustworthy technologies like Huawei to Guatemala's sovereignty and national security?
- What impact would the presence of untrustworthy technologies, such as those of Huawei, may have on our security partnership with Guatemala?
- To your knowledge, how many individuals and entities in Guatemala has the United States sanctioned for engaging in corrupt practices with the PRC?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Guatemala's telecommunications infrastructure security and caution against untrustworthy, high-risk vendors. I will also work with authorities to expose any corrupt or problematic business activities in Guatemala, particularly those seeking a foothold in strategic industries, pointing out the strength of U.S. alternatives and leveraging appropriate sanctions. The United States has not levied and leveraging appropriate sanctions. The United States has not levied Question. In 2022, the U.S. sanctioned entities tied to Solway Investment Group, a Russian enterprise that has exploited Guatemala's nickel mining sector. If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure Solway Investment Group does not continue its corrupt activity in Guatemala and to support Guatemala's legitimate mining sector?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support the strategic use of anti-corruption and human rights-related tools to promote accountability and call out and impose costs on corrupt actors. The United States used financial sanctions in Guatemala to counter corruption, including in the mining sector. Such sanctions are most effective when used alongside other anti-corruption tools. For example, the Department and USAID implement foreign assistance projects in Guatemala that address top U.S. priorities, including countering corruption and supporting economic development.

Question. Guatemala designated Hezbollah in its entirety as a terrorist organization in October 2020. If confirmed, do you commit to encourage Guatemalan authorities to maintain that designation and strengthen counterterrorism cooperation with the United States?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to encouraging the Guatemalan Government to maintain its designation of Hizballah as a terrorist organization. I will also work to strengthen bilateral and regional counterterrorism cooperation, including through the Bureau of Counterterrorism's Law Enforcement Coordination Group, focusing on Hizballah activity globally.

Question. Would Guatemala's ascension to the USMCA help strengthen critical supply chains in the Western Hemisphere and fight corruption in Guatemala?

Answer. I fully support strengthening critical supply chains in the Western Hemisphere and fighting corruption in Guatemala. Guatemala and the United States are party to the Dominican Republic-Central America Free Trade Agreement. If confirmed, I look forward to exploring enhancing trade and investment relations with Guatemala under President-elect Arévalo's administration.

Question. Is it in the interest of the United States that China develop maritime port projects in Honduras and El Salvador? Please describe what steps you will take if confirmed to undermine these efforts.

Answer. The PRC's record of unkept promises and underdelivering on projected results for economic development projects, including maritime port projects, fall short of international best practices and fail to benefit partner countries in the long term. Poorly executed economic development projects are not in the interest of the United States or its partners in the region. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to engage with regional partners, including El Salvador and Honduras, to make clear the risks of partnering with the PRC on maritime port projects.

Drugs

Question. Mexican transnational criminal organizations produce increased quantities of fentanyl. Cartels, such as the Sinaloa and the New Generation Jalisco Cartel, are the primary trafficking groups responsible for smuggling fentanyl into the United States from Mexico.

- What specific actions should Mexico take to meaningfully tackle transitional criminal activities through its territory, including trafficking of fentanyl and other illicit narcotics?
- If confirmed, do you commit to encourage Mexico to deepen bilateral cooperation on the destruction of illicit chemical precursors fueling the synthetic opioid crisis in the United States?
- Do you support the United States leverage the possibility of tariffs on certain Chinese products to pressure the PRC Government to stem the flow of fentanyl precursors to the Western Hemisphere? Please answer yes or no and explain why.

Answer. Under the Bicentennial Framework, the United States and Mexico continue joint efforts to disrupt the illicit synthetic drug supply chain, combat the production of these substances, investigate, and prosecute transnational criminal organizations (TCOs) and their finances, and prevent the flow of illicit goods from crossing the U.S.-Mexico border. If confirmed, I will encourage Mexico's continued leadership in Secretary Blinken's Global Coalition to Address Synthetic Drug Threats. Disrupting the global illicit synthetic drugs supply chain remains a top priority, and, if confirmed, I will continue to explore all possibilities to keep these deadly substances out of our communities. Argentina

Question. In July 2019, President Mauricio Macri signed Decree 489, which created a framework for Argentina to designate terrorist organizations take law enforcement actions, such as asset freezes and travel bans entities associated with such designated foreign terrorist organizations.

- What is your assessment of the commitment of the incoming government of President Javier Milei in Argentina to enforcing the designation of Hezbollah as an FTO, the designations of Hezbollah financiers in the Tri-Border Area (TBA), and the designations of former and current Iranian officials who are on Argentina's terrorism list?
- If confirmed, do you commit to prioritizing U.S. support for the Interpol red notices issued on current and former Iranian officials involved in the bombing of the AMIA Jewish community center?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Government's policy to cooperate with partners and allies worldwide to combat terrorist threats and bring known terrorists to justice. As such, I will continue to coordinate with the Argentine Government regarding its terrorist designations against individuals and organizations. I will also ensure continued U.S. support for Argentina's efforts to bring to justice the perpetrators of the 1994 bombing of the AMIA efforts to bring to justice the perpetrators of the 1994 bombing of the AMIA efforts to bring to justice the perpetrators of the 1994 bombing of the AMIA

Question. Will you commit to working with President Milei and his government, if confirmed, to reduce the security threat posed by China's deep-space station in Neuquen, Argentina? If so, please explain how.

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to raise concerns about the risks associated with dual-use facilities that have People's Liberation Army (PLA) linkages in Argentina. I will also continue engaging with the Argentine Government on space-related issues.

Venezuela

Question. Please describe your understanding of Russia's interests in the survival of the Maduro regime.

- Is it in the interest of President Putin for the Maduro regime to end?
- If confirmed, what specific steps will you recommend as Secretary of State to diminish Russian influence in Venezuela?

Answer. I take seriously problematic actors like Russia's attempts to expand their activities and influence in Venezuela. Russia considers Maduro an important geopolitical ally. Russia spreads Spanish language disinformation in Latin America, including in Venezuela, to garner support for Russia's other malign activities like its unprovoked war against Ukraine. If confirmed, I will continue to coordinate with interagency partners and allies to monitor Russia's problematic activities in Venezuela and will support the democratic aspirations of the Venezuelan people.

Question. Please describe your understanding of Cuba's interests in the survival of the Maduro regime.

- Is it in the interest of the Cuban regime for the Maduro regime to end?
- If confirmed, what specific steps will you recommend as Secretary of State to diminish Cuban influence in Venezuela?

Answer. Cuba and Venezuela share a mutually beneficial relationship and Cuba has an interest in maintaining that relationship. For example, Venezuela sends oil and diesel to Cuba in exchange for Cuba sending doctors and military advisors to Venezuela. This exchange speaks to the isolation of Cuba and Venezuela and constraints on their economies. If confirmed, I will support the democratic aspirations of the Cuban and Venezuelan people to promote a peaceful and democratic Western hemisphere.

Question. Please describe your understanding of China's interests in the survival of the Maduro regime.

- Is it in the interest of China for the Maduro regime to end?
- If confirmed, what specific steps will you recommend as Secretary of State to diminish Chinese influence in Venezuela?

Answer. I take seriously external actors' attempts to expand their activities in Venezuela, including those of the PRC. The PRC seeks to recover billions in unpaid debts from Venezuela. If confirmed, I will continue to coordinate with interagency partners and U.S. allies to monitor the activities of the PRC in Venezuela and act where appropriate. This relationship demonstrates the isolation of the Maduro regime within the global community.

Question. Please describe your understanding of Iran's interests in the survival of the Maduro regime.

- Is it in the interest of Iran for the Maduro regime to end?
- If confirmed, what specific steps will you recommend as Secretary of State to diminish Iranian influence in Venezuela?

Answer. I take seriously the efforts of external/problematic actors like Iran to expand their activities and influence in Venezuela. Iran considers Venezuela an important geopolitical ally. If confirmed, I will continue to coordinate with interagency partners and our allies to monitor the activities of Iran in Venezuela and will continue to support the democratic aspirations of the Venezuelan people. Maduro's relationship with Iran demonstrates how isolated Maduro has become.

Question. Please explain your understanding of how the Maduro regime operates as a narco-terrorist regime. Please describe the role of the Venezuelan military in narcotics trafficking. Please explain the relationship between the Maduro regime and United States-designated foreign terrorist organizations, FARC and ELN.

Answer. Corruption remains endemic in Venezuela and facilitates the operations of drug-trafficking organizations. Armed gangs originating in Venezuela's prison system and pro-Maduro armed groups are deeply involved in drug trafficking, as are the military and security services. The United States revoked the designation of the FARC as a terrorist organization in November of 2021. The National Liberation Army known as ELN historically used Venezuelan territory to operate and, if confirmed, I would welcome the August 4, 2023, ceasefire announced between the ELN and the Government of Colombia.

Question. Do you agree Nicolas Maduro is an international criminal and a fugitive of U.S. justice?

Answer. The Department of Justice's March 26, 2020, indictment of Nicolas Maduro and others remains in effect. The Department of State continues to offer a reward of up to $15 million for information leading to the arrest and/or conviction of Nicolas Maduro. For further comment I refer you to the Department of Justice.

Question. If confirmed, do you commit to taking steps to ensure that Nicolas Maduro is arrested and extradited if he travels to any country with which the United States shares an extradition treaty?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to take steps that will support the democratic aspirations of the Venezuelan people. The Department of Justice's March 26, 2020, indictment of Nicolas Maduro and others remains in effect. The Department of State continues to offer a reward of up to $15 million for information leading to the arrest and/or conviction of Nicolas Maduro. For further comment I refer you to the Department of Justice.

Question. Please describe how the Maduro regime's involvement in transnational criminal activities affects peace and stability in Colombia.

Answer. Maduro and his representatives historically created a permissive environment for transnational criminal groups to operate in Venezuelan territory. If confirmed, I would welcome the news of a preliminary six-month ceasefire agreement between the Government of Colombia and the National Liberation Army ("ELN") and condemn those who undermine Colombia's hard-won peace through narcotics trafficking.

Question. Please explain why the Administration has not issued a single sanction in Venezuela since it came to office in January 2021.

Answer. I understand that the United States remains committed to leveraging sanctions on Venezuela to support the democratic aspirations of the Venezuelan people. The United States supports negotiations between the Venezuelan opposition Unitary Platform and representatives of Maduro, including the October 17 electoral roadmap agreement, as the best chance to achieve U.S. objectives in Venezuela.

Question. On October 18, 2023, Secretary Blinken said "the United States has also conveyed our expectation and understanding that Venezuela will take the following steps before the end of November," including "Define a specific timeline and process for the expedited reinstatement of all candidates" and "begin the release of all wrongfully detained U.S. nationals and Venezuelan political prisoners":

- Are the above-mentioned expectations and understandings memorialized in any document?
- Will you commit, if confirmed, to transmit those "expectations" and "understandings" to Congress?
- What is the Administration's "expectation" of a "specific timeline and process" for the reinstatement of all candidates?"

Answer. Secretary Blinken's October 18 statement conveyed the United States' expectations regarding Venezuelan actions by the end of November. Administration officials have stated that these expectations were based on previous diplomatic discussions with Maduro representatives. The Norwegian Government, as the facilitator of the negotiations between the Venezuelan opposition Unitary Platform and the representatives of Maduro, publicly announced the mechanism for candidate reinstatement, which the Maduro representatives provided. This mechanism provides a clear process for reinstatement of all candidates.

Question. On October 18, Secretary Blinken pledged "Failure to abide by the terms of this arrangement will lead the United States to reverse steps we have taken."

- Is the Maduro regime meeting the terms of the deal it reached with the Biden administration? Please answer yes or no, and explain why.
- Should the Biden administration immediately snapback the sanctions relief granted on October 18? Please answer yes or no, and explain why.
- Should the Biden administration snapback the sanctions relief granted since November 2022? Please answer yes or no, and explain why.

Answer. If confirmed, I welcome the developments related to the electoral roadmap agreement, including the November 30 announcement of a process to reinstate all candidates for the upcoming elections and the October 18 release of five Venezuelan political prisoners. However, as the State Department has indicated, Maduro and his representatives have not yet fully met the expectations outlined in Secretary Blinken's October 18 statement. I support the United States' position that absent further progress, the United States will take steps to reimpose some sanctions.

Question. How much revenue has the Maduro regime received because of the sanctions relief granted on November 2022?

Answer. As money goes into the oil and gas sector, Venezuela likely accrued additional revenue. I would refer you to the individual companies for information about the cash flow associated with their operations in Venezuela.

Question. How much revenue is the Maduro regime estimated to receive because of the sanctions relief granted on October 18, 2023?

Answer. The United States provided limited relief, but Venezuela will likely accrue additional revenue as money flows into the energy sector. However, this will happen slowly. Investors generally seek greater certainty about the sustainability of business and political conditions, repayment guarantees, and assurances against expropriation before they commit significant resources to a country like Venezuela.

Question. What impact would such revenue have on the Maduro regime's capacity to threaten its democratic neighbors, especially Guyana?

Answer. The United States provided limited sanctions relief to Venezuela in support of progress towards democratization in Venezuela through the October 17 electoral roadmap agreement signing. Venezuela will likely accrue some additional revenue, but this will happen slowly. The United States urged Venezuela and Guyana to continue to seek a peaceful resolution of their dispute, including by the International Court of Justice.

Question. Is it in the interest of the United States to deter the Maduro regime from starting a potential military conflict in Guyana? If so, please describe what steps you will take to support these efforts.

Answer. The United States seeks to promote a peaceful and democratic Western hemisphere. The 1899 arbitral award determined the land boundary between Venezuela and Guyana and should be respected unless, or until, the parties reach a new agreement, or a competent legal body decides otherwise. The United States urged Venezuela and Guyana to continue to seek a peaceful resolution of their dispute, including by the International Court of Justice. The U.S. maintains robust military-to-military engagement with Guyana, including visits, exchanges, and participation in joint multilateral military exercises in the Caribbean.

Haiti

Question. Is Haiti a failed state?

Answer. Haiti is not a failed state, although the Government's ability to provide security and governance for all its citizens is highly strained. Haiti faces multiple and competing crises, all of which are exacerbated by gang violence in and around the capital city of Port-au-Prince. It is my understanding that the U.S. interagency works closely with the Haitian National Police and civil society organizations, respectively, to build institutional police capacity and provide humanitarian relief. The Government still provides services within its limited capacity throughout much of the country.

Question. What is your assessment of China's efforts to leverage Haiti's economic and political perils to its advantage?

Answer. The United States remains concerned regarding PRC efforts to leverage crises around the world to its advantage, especially in developing nations. My understanding is that such efforts have to date had limited success in Haiti. Haiti has diplomatic ties with Taiwan and partners with Taiwan in international organizations and on humanitarian priorities.

Question. If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to ensure Haiti maintains its diplomatic recognition of Taiwan?

Answer. As a leading democracy and technological powerhouse, Taiwan is a key U.S. partner and a reliable partner to Haiti as well as other countries in the Americas and globally. Taiwan's relationships with partners around the globe provide significant economic and security benefits to the citizens of those countries. If confirmed, I will ensure that the United States continues to show support for partnerships between Taiwan and the region, including with the Government of Haiti, in line with longstanding U.S. policy.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. KURT CAMPBELL BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question. For months, we have seen the Armenian community of Nagorno-Karabakh be under attack by the brutal Azerbaijani regime. It is the United States' responsibility to prevent ethnic cleansing and not stand by while the Aliyev regime carries out its brutal campaigns of starvation and military action. In September, we saw Azerbaijan retake the remainder of Karabakh; what is your assessment of the security and humanitarian implications of the ethnic cleansing of Armenians?

Answer. By way of a personal note at the outset, I grew up in an Armenian community, studied at a conservatory of music in Erevan, Armenia, and remain very focused on Armenia's progress in the world. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging directly on matters that affect Armenia's progress, security, and democracy.

The most effective means of ending three decades of violence will be the establishment of a durable, dignified peace between Armenia and Azerbaijan. The Administration prioritizes this effort and continues to support Armenia's efforts to aid displaced persons, while working to strengthen Armenia's resiliency. The United States continues to urge the Government of Azerbaijan to ensure ethnic Armenians who departed Nagorno-Karabakh are guaranteed a safe, dignified, and sustainable return, should they choose, with security and protections for their rights.

Question. If confirmed, how would you hold Azerbaijan accountable for using military power to exert control over the region of Nagorno-Karabakh?

Answer. The Administration publicly condemned Azerbaijan's use of force and reaffirmed U.S. support for Armenia's sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity. Furthermore, it suspended high-level meetings and engagements in the immediate aftermath of the military operation and is closely reviewing the section 907 waiver extension as part of the annual process. The Administration does not rule out the use of any of the tools at its disposal to achieve its foreign policy goals.

While I welcome the Biden Administration's ongoing diplomatic efforts and engagement with Venezuela, we must ensure the Maduro regime fully follows the terms of the agreement announced in October. We should not continue to preemptively remove our sanctions until there are real, tangible results from the Maduro regime. Last week, the Administration expressed "deep concerns about the lack of progress on the release of wrongfully detained U.S. citizens and Venezuelan political prisoners."

Question. If the Maduro regime continues to fail to implement substantive deliverables on its commitments, when would the Administration reinstate sanctions and additional measures to hold the regime accountable?

Answer. The Secretary welcomed the developments related to the Barbados electoral roadmap agreement, including the announcement of a process to reinstate all candidates and the release of five Venezuelan political prisoners. Nicolas Maduro and his representatives have yet to fully meet the expectations outlined in the Secretary's October 18 statement. I understand the United States will review its sanctions policy and intends to suspend some sanctions relief if adequate progress toward these commitments has not been made.

Earlier this year, under my leadership, this committee passed the Taiwan Tax Agreement Act, legislation that would authorize the President to negotiate a tax agreement with Taiwan, modeled on existing tax treaties we already have with several countries. At my urging, the President also launched the U.S.-Taiwan Initiative on 21st Century Trade, reaching an agreement in June that will deepen our economic relationship with this key trading partner.

Question. If confirmed, will you commit to continuing these efforts to deepen our diplomatic and economic relationship with our key ally and trading partner, Taiwan?

Answer. Yes, I have been a strong supporter of Taiwan throughout my career. Taiwan is a critical investment and trading partner, which plays a crucial role in our ability to achieve the goals of the CHIPS and Science Act, including strengthening supply chains and creating jobs. If confirmed, I would continue these efforts to deepen our unofficial relations such as through the U.S.-Taiwan Initiative on 21st Century Trade.

Question. If confirmed, how would you propose to further engage and strengthen our relationship with Taiwan?

Answer. The United States' unofficial relationship with Taiwan has never been stronger or more wide-ranging. We enjoy close people-to-people ties, economic and trade relations, and cooperation across the spectrum of topics from public health to cybersecurity. Consistent with our longstanding one China policy, we will continue to provide Taiwan with defense articles and services necessary for Taiwan to maintain a sufficient self-defense capability, and we will deepen our economic relationship, including via the U.S.-Taiwan Economic Prosperity Partnership Dialogue.

The White House has reiterated the urgent need for the approval of U.S. assistance to Ukraine before the end of the year. Ukraine and its people continue to emphasize that if we do not come to an agreement on further funding for their cause, we may witness a reversal of hard-fought Ukrainian gains against Russia's brutal aggression.

Question. As Ukraine prepares to defend itself in the winter against Russia's aggressions, what are the security, economic, and humanitarian challenges the people of Ukraine will face if the United States and other allies do not provide assistance?

Answer. U.S. leadership is indispensable to ensuring a strong response that protects our interests as well as those of our Allies and friends. Friends and foes alike are watching closely and will draw lessons about American power and resolve. A lapse in U.S. support for Ukraine would immediately impact Ukraine's performance on the battlefield, compromise NATO Allied security, affirm for Putin that he can wait out Ukraine's international supporters, and allow him to undermine with impunity the post-WWII order upon which we have relied for our security for almost eighty years. This will call into question our commitment to a free and fair international system far beyond Europe. Security and economic assistance are intertwined and essential to Ukraine's survival. Putin seeks to break Ukraine's economy and hopes that by weakening Ukraine's will on the home front he can win. Additionally, U.S. humanitarian assistance is particularly important as Ukraine enters its second winter of the war, and needs endure. If we end our military, economic, and humanitarian assistance, the impacts will be compounded, particularly as other countries may question their contributions

SUBMITTED TO HON. KURT CAMPBELL BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

In May 2022, Secretary Blinken said that the Peoples Republic of China is the "only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it." The Chinese Communist Party (CCP) clearly holds the reins of power in the People's Republic of China and has used this power to commit genocide in Xinjiang, flood our communities with fentanyl, and emit, by far the largest quantity of greenhouse gases in the world today. With their absolute control of Chinese society and industry, the CCP could stop all of these destructive actions tomorrow if they so choose.

Question. Is the Chinese Communist Party a threat to the United States?

Answer. Earlier this year, the Director of National Intelligence testified that "the CCP represents both the leading and most consequential threat to U.S. national security and leadership globally." Under President Xi, the CCP has become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, seeking to undercut U.S. influence and alliances. If confirmed, I will advance U.S. national security interests across a range of sectors via our "invest, align, compete" strategy, together with likeminded allies and partners, to push back against PRC efforts to expand its influence and undermine the rules-based international order.

Question. Does the Chinese Communist Party undertake any activities that are beneficial to U.S. interests?

Answer. The Administration assesses the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) activities in the context of the CCP's having become more repressive at home and more aggressive abroad, as Secretary Blinken has stated.

According to the Office of the Director of National Intelligence's 2023 Annual Threat Assessment, the CCP is seeking to "undercut U.S. influence, drive wedges between Washington and its partners, and foster some norms that favor its authoritarian system."

Question. Do you believe that there are any areas within which the Chinese Communist Party would constructively work with the United States in good faith?

Answer. As the United States competes vigorously with the PRC, the United States must manage this competition responsibly so that competition does not veer into conflict. The United States works with the PRC to address transnational challenges, such as climate and counter-narcotics, when it is in our interest to do so—as Secretary Blinken has said, not as a favor to us or anyone else, and never in exchange for walking away from our principles, but because that is what the world expects. If confirmed, I will work, as I have done consistently in my current post at the National Security Council, with the Department of State's Office of China Coordination to advance U.S. objectives and counter harmful behavior by the PRC around the world.

Question. If confirmed, will you approve any joint activity with organizations or representatives from the People's Republic of China in the country in which you will work?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority will be advancing U.S. national security interests and countering efforts by our strategic and regional competitors, including the PRC, to undermine those interests. The Administration has been clear that the PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States, and that the United States is committed to working to strengthen the collective capacity of our partners in the region. If confirmed, I will support Secretary Blinken in leading the Department of State, while working closely with our interagency colleagues and Congress, to implement our "invest, align, compete" strategy and address China's efforts to expand its influence at home and abroad.

Question. As you may be aware, a group of federal employees penned an open letter to President Biden criticizing U.S. support for Israel in the aftermath of Hamas' brutal terrorist attack on October 7, 2023. Efforts like these directly undermine the duty of our diplomats to advance the policies of the President of the United States. Yes or no, did you sign the letter to the President expressing opposition to the President's Israel policy?

Answer. No, I did not sign the letter.

Question. If confirmed, would you define one of your employees or contractors signing an open letter criticizing you, or policies you undertake at the instruction of the President, as insubordination as defined by the Government Accountability Office?

Answer. I am mindful of and value Department employees' right to free speech under the First Amendment. Moreover, I recognize that the expression of disagreement does not in and of itself constitute insubordination. If confirmed, I would work with the Department's Office of the Legal Adviser to determine the proper course of action in this or any other specific cases.

Question. In your view, are the actions these federal employees took, by anonymously signing a letter to the President of the United States, covered as "whistleblowing?"

Answer. As a general matter, I support any federal employee's right to free speech and expression. If confirmed, I would work with the Department of State's Office of the Legal Adviser to understand whether an action constituted whistleblowing. Moreover, if confirmed, I will ensure that I and other managers in the Department protect whistleblowers' rights, including the right to free speech under the First Amendment.

Question. If confirmed, how will you address discipline issues, such as insubordination, that do not take established dissent channels?

Answer. I am mindful of and value Department of State employees' right to free speech under the First Amendment. As Secretary Blinken has said, we should "be sure to sustain and expand the space for debate and dissent that makes our policies and our institution better." Moreover, from what I understand the expression of dissent is unlikely to constitute insubordination. However, in other contexts, in the event a discipline issue came to me, including insubordination, I would consult with the Department's experts and attorneys to ensure the matter is handled appropriately.

Question. Have you ever expressed support for an Israeli ceasefire in Gaza?

Answer. No.

Question. Do you agree that Hamas is an antisemitic entity?

Answer. Yes, Hamas is a terrorist group and antisemitic entity that seeks to eliminate the State of Israel and whose founding charter calls for the killing of Jewish people.

Question. Would a ceasefire allow these groups to reconstitute and attack Israel, and Americans, in the future?

Answer. Yes, a ceasefire right now would give Hamas time to regroup and would fail to prevent Hamas from continuing terror attacks and firing rockets at Israel.

Question. Do you agree that calling for a ceasefire in Gaza means calling for Israel to stop its pursuit of Hamas, a designated foreign terrorist organization, that orchestrated the October 7 attacks and still refuses to release Israeli and American hostages?

Answer. It is the policy of the Administration to support additional temporary humanitarian pauses to enable a sustained flow of aid and to allow the voluntary movement of civilians who are seeking to move to safer locations. Further, the U.S. Government is actively working with partners to secure the release of all hostages held by Hamas. The U.S. Government supports Israel's right to protect itself from Hamas' terrorism, consistent with international law, but continues to encourage the Government of Israel to prioritize the protections of civilians, as required by international humanitarian law.

Question. Do you believe that Israel, in its operation against Hamas, which is known to use civilians as human shields, is taking all necessary steps to minimize civilian casualties?

Answer. Israel has the right to protect itself, consistent with international law. The United States has urged Israel to differentiate between civilians and Hamas terrorists and do everything possible to avoid civilian casualties. Hamas's use of civilians as human shields, a blatant violation of international law, does not lessen Israel's obligations under international humanitarian law.

Question. Today's world is one where a loose coalition of states opposed to the world order are coalescing under the leadership of the CCP. Though not a formal alliance, China is aided by its junior partners of Russia, Iran, and North Korea, as well as anti-American regimes in the Western Hemisphere such as Venezuela and Cuba. How should the State Department counter this budding coalition?

Answer. The National Security Strategy makes clear the pressing strategic challenge posed by powers that layer authoritarian governance with a revisionist foreign policy. As we compete, the United States and our allies and partners have an opportunity to shape the external environment around the PRC and Russia, as well as that of other smaller autocratic powers acting in aggressive and destabilizing ways such as Iran and the DPRK. We will continue to push back on actions by the PRC and others that run counter to U.S. interests and values, while deepening ties with allies and partners to strengthen a free, open, prosperous, and secure international order.

Question. China has placed a particular emphasis on courting countries in the Global South, such as those in Africa and Latin America. These countries often want to cut the best deal possible for themselves, which makes sense. However, what this means in practice is these countries will seek U.S. assistance on the one hand but then partner with Beijing on the other. What strategies would you employ to get these countries to align with the U.S. on a more consistent basis?

Answer. U.S. strategy toward the PRC prioritizes aligning efforts with allies and partners. U.S. policy doesn't ask our partners to choose between the United States and the PRC, or any other partner. However, many allies and partners, including in Africa and Latin America, have faced PRC coercion. We support their ability to make sovereign decisions in line with their interests and values, free from external pressure and coercion, and work to provide high-standard and scaled investment, development assistance, and markets. For example, the Administration has established new regional forums for economic cooperation, such as the Americas Partnership for Economic Prosperity, that reaffirm U.S. economic leadership in the region.

And we are deepening ties between the U.S. Government and multilateral development banks to channel more high-standard investments to critical sectors such as infrastructure in allied and partner countries. We act in common purpose to advance shared interests and values and address issues such as untrusted digital infrastructure, forced labor in supply chains, and illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing.

Question. At some point, do you think we should force these countries to choose the U.S. or China? Why or why not?

Answer. The United States is clear-eyed that the PRC is the only competitor with both the intent and increasingly the capability to reshape the international order — and the PRC's assertive and coercive behavior has caused other countries to push back and defend their sovereignty for their own legitimate reasons. As Secretary Blinken has said, this is not about forcing countries to choose, but rather about giving them a choice and the ability to make their own sovereign decisions. This is a critical difference between our vision, which aims to preserve the autonomy and rights of less powerful states, and that of our rivals, which does not. It is our hope that key states will align with the United States on the most critical matters in support of our mutual interests.

Question. You are a known advocate of increasing our relationships with countries in the Indo-Pacific in order to counter the CCP. This includes traditional allies such as Japan, Korea, Australia, and the Philippines, but you have also advocated for much closer ties to countries who are not allies, such as India and Vietnam. How important is it to successfully court countries such as India and Vietnam?

Answer. Strengthening our relationships across the Indo-Pacific with partners like India and Vietnam is critical to our efforts to build and sustain a free and open Indo-Pacific. Engagements like Prime Minister Modi's visit to Washington, during which the U.S. substantially advanced strategic technology and defense industrial cooperation with India, and President Biden's historic state visit to Hanoi, during which we upgraded the U.S.-Vietnam relationship to a Comprehensive Strategic Partnership, have strengthened a latticework of alliances and partnerships built around shared interests and a shared vision for the future. Our alliances and partnerships represent a source of strength the PRC cannot match.

Question. What about other countries in the region that attempt to be neutral in the U.S.-China competition, such as Indonesia and Malaysia?

Answer. We believe countries want a stable, open, prosperous, and secure region and world that respects sovereignty and territorial integrity, allows countries to make their own decisions free from coercion, promotes shared prosperity, and enables cooperation on shared challenges. While the PRC is a global strategic competitor, U.S. policy does not ask countries to choose between the United States and the PRC, but rather focuses on giving them a choice and the ability to make their own sovereign decisions. Countries such as Indonesia and Malaysia are important partners on a range of global and regional priorities. We intend to continue deepening our partnerships with them, as we did last month in upgrading our relationship with Indonesia to a Comprehensive Strategic Partnership, as well as with others in the Indo-Pacific region and beyond.

Question. What is your benchmark for success?

Answer. The goal of the United States is clear—an international order that is free, open, prosperous, and secure. Our approach is successful when it works toward that goal, advances U.S. interests and values, and counters the efforts of others, including the PRC, to undermine that order. The United States will continue to compete vigorously with the PRC, and the United States will responsibly manage the competition, so that competition does not veer into conflict. What the United States seeks instead is a positive, steady state, one where our interests and those of our allies and partners are protected.

Question. Our European allies have a slightly different view than us on China. On the one hand, they see China as destabilizing for supporting Russia's war against Ukraine. On the other hand, many European countries have traditionally sought to maintain positive relations with Beijing, largely for economic reasons. In fact, last year, French President Emmanuel Macron said "is it in our interest to accelerate [a crisis] on Taiwan? No. The worse thing would be to think that we Europeans must become followers on this topic and take our cue from the U.S. agenda and a Chinese overreaction." How can we educate our European allies about the dangers of Beijing?

Answer. The United States has worked closely with European allies and partners on addressing the challenges posed by the PRC, including through the U.S.-EU China Dialogue and the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council, and will continue close communication with European allies and partners and the European Union to exchange concerns and coordinate responses related to the PRC. There is increasing alignment between the U.S. and many key European states on our assessment of the security and political environment in the Indo-Pacific. As affirmed during the recent U.S.-EU Summit on October 20, the United States and the EU have a shared commitment to address, and to communicate directly to Beijing regarding, our shared concerns over challenges posed by the PRC's non-market economic practices, maintaining peace and stability in the Taiwan Strait, upholding international law in the South and East China Seas, voicing our concerns on human rights abuses, and calling on Russia to stop its war of aggression against Ukraine while countering Beijing's efforts to support Moscow.

Question. In your view, what would be Europe's reaction to a CCP invasion of Taiwan? Would our European allies support the U.S. or strike a deal with China?

Answer. As affirmed in the joint statements from the U.S.-EU Summit, U.S.-EU Dialogue on China, and the G7 Japan Foreign Ministers Statement, European allies and partners have spoken out strongly in support of cross-Strait peace and stability and the need for peaceful resolution of cross-Strait issues. We have also seen European allies and partners express concerns regarding cross-Strait peace and stability in their interactions with the PRC and in their recent China and Indo-Pacific Strategies.

Question. Some of our Middle Eastern allies and partners, such as Israel, have sought to have cordial relations with China, even welcoming significant Chinese investment in Israel's technology sector. Saudi Arabia and other Gulf Arab partners have welcomed Beijing's Belt and Road Initiative. Has Hamas' brutal terrorist attack and Beijing's support for Iran changed perceptions in the Middle East?

Answer. PRC officials are using the Israel-Hamas conflict as an opportunity to criticize the West, curry favor with Arab partners, and position the PRC as a purported champion of the "Global South." Israel has criticized the PRC for its unbalanced approach. Arab states have generally adopted a similar posture to the PRC on the Israel-Hamas conflict in fora like the U.N., but they acknowledge the United States is the most essential outside diplomatic actor in the region.

Question. What more should the U.S. be doing to drive a wedge between China and our allies and partners in the Middle East?

Answer. The PRC is the most consequential geopolitical challenge facing the United States. The United States continues to strengthen our partnerships in the Middle East to pursue shared interests of regional security, stability, and prosperity. Our sustained affirmative engagement counters efforts by the PRC and other strategic competitors to undermine those interests, while demonstrating the value of a long-term partnership with the United States. If confirmed, I will continue to coordinate closely with regional allies and partners to counter the PRC's efforts to expand its influence in the region.

Question. In 2020, the Congress passed my bill, the Uyghur Human Rights Policy Act, which mandates sanctions on Chinese officials responsible for human rights abuses committed against Uyghurs and other ethnic groups in Xinjiang. For nearly four years, both this, and the previous administration, have failed to uphold the law and impose these sanctions because the President declined to delegate his authorities to either the State Department or the Treasury Department. This delegation was recently given to the State Department. If confirmed, do you commit to swiftly imposing sanctions on all Chinese officials responsible for the ongoing genocide against the Uyghurs?

Answer. On December 8, the State Department issued a report to Congress, and in conjunction with the Treasury Department, sanctioned PRC government officials pursuant to UHRPA and the Global Magnitsky Program for their connection to ongoing serious human rights abuse in Xinjiang. State concurrently designated one of the officials under Section 7031(c) for gross violations of human rights, while the other was previously designated in 2021. These steps were in addition to the dozens of PRC officials and entities who have previously been held accountable over the past three years for their connection to ongoing serious human rights abuse in Xinjiang.

If confirmed, I commit to promoting accountability for PRC officials' involvement in genocide and crimes against humanity in Xinjiang as well as in human rights violations and abuses in Tibet, Hong Kong, and elsewhere in the PRC.

Question. The last confirmed Deputy Secretary of State, Wendy Sherman, reportedly refused to approve sanctions, even for grave human rights abuses, on members of China's Politburo, out of a fear that doing so would anger the Chinese. Do you believe that Politburo members should be immune from sanctions, even if they are responsible for human rights abuses?

Answer. This Administration has utilized, and will continue to utilize, a wide range of tools and diplomatic tactics to promote accountability for PRC officials' and entities' involvement in atrocities in Xinjiang, and for human rights violations and abuses in Tibet, Hong Kong, and elsewhere in the PRC.

If confirmed, I will continue these efforts.

Follow-up Question

Question. Thank you for committing to continue the administration's efforts to promote accountability for PRC officials' and entities' involvement in atrocities in Xinjiang. Do you believe that imposing sanctions on members of the Chinese Communist Party Politburo who are credibly implicated in these atrocities would further accountability, or do you believe that the United States should refrain from sanctioning Politburo members?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to evaluate actively the tools at our disposal to promote accountability for PRC human rights abuses. I take this matter extremely seriously and will not hesitate to work with Departments and Agencies to evaluate the full range of authorities and options available to us, including sanctions, as part of a robust interagency process. I would not prejudge the outcomes of those interagency deliberations in regards to specific persons but I will commit to being firm and principled in promoting accountability for PRC human rights violations. We will not pull our punches.

Question. Specifically, should Ma Xingrui be sanctioned?

Answer. While the U.S. Government does not publicly preview any possible changes or upcoming actions related to U.S. sanctions, export controls, or law enforcement activity, the Biden-Harris Administration has shown that it takes extremely seriously issues related to the PRC's ongoing genocide and crimes against humanity in Xinjiang. We do not pull our punches with the PRC.

Question. If confirmed, will you make it a priority to secure the release of Uyghurs and other political prisoners in China who are being held in order to pressure their overseas family members to mute their activism against the Uyghur genocide?

Answer. If confirmed, I would regularly and vigorously call upon PRC authorities to immediately and unconditionally release all arbitrarily detained people and abolish the internment camps; to cease forced sterilizations; to end all torture; and to stop persecuting Uyghurs and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups in the PRC and to halt its transnational repression campaign around the world, including here in the United States.

Question. Specifically, will you commit to raising the cases of Gulshan Abbas, Ekpar Asat, and the parent of Nury Turkel?

Answer. I am very concerned by the cases of Mr. Turkel's mother, of Gulshan Abbas, and of Ekpar Asat, and I have supported senior U.S. officials' raising their cases over the past year. I know Nury well and meet with him regularly to get an update on his family's circumstance in the PRC. If confirmed, I would continue to strongly advocate with the PRC government on their and other individual PRC human rights cases of concern.

This past October, authorities in China forcibly repatriated around 600 North Koreans, sending these individuals to certain torture and death in North Korea. I worked with Senator Kaine to reauthorize the North Korean Human Rights Act to include authorization of sanctions on Chinese officials responsible for forced repatriations of North Koreans.

Question. If confirmed, will you support imposition of sanctions on Chinese officials responsible for the forced repatriation of North Koreans?

Answer. The United States is deeply concerned by credible reports that the PRC has repatriated large numbers of North Koreans, including defectors. Upon return, defectors are reportedly tortured, subjected to forced labor, or executed. The United States has demanded the PRC offer appropriate protection to defectors and allow their transit to a safe third country and will continue to press Beijing to uphold its non-refoulement obligations under the 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, its 1967 Protocol, and the 1984 Convention Against Torture.

Question. Do you believe the United States should apply greater scrutiny on imports from northeast China and other regions where there is a greater likelihood that goods are produced with North Korean forced labor?

Answer. The use of forced labor offends our values and undercuts American businesses and workers. The United States is committed to doing our part to promote accountability for human rights abuses, including forced labor. We urge that businesses undertake appropriate human rights due diligence measures to prevent inclusion of goods containing materials made with forced labor in their supply chains, including in Northeast China. Through the Department of Homeland Security led Forced Labor Enforcement Task Force (FLETF), we also continue to closely scrutinize goods being imported into the United States and apply a rebuttable presumption of forced labor when linked to North Korean labor regardless of the location.

Additionally, the United States encourages allies and partners to take joint action to prevent and/or address forced labor in global supply chains.

Question. Since 2019, and the violent quashing of peaceful protests in Hong Kong, the People's Republic of China, and its puppets in the Hong Kong government, have detained dozens of political prisoners, including Jimmy Lai and Joshua Wong. Until these prisoners are released and afforded the rights guaranteed to them under Hong Kong's basic law, will you, if confirmed, continue to advise the Secretary that Hong Kong does not merit the same status it enjoys under U.S. law as it did in 1997?

Answer. Since 2021, Secretary Blinken has certified three times that Hong Kong does not warrant treatment in the same manner as U.S. laws were applied before July 1, 1997. The PRC continues to take new actions that are inconsistent with the Basic Law and the PRC's international obligation to afford Hong Kong a high degree of autonomy. If confirmed, I would continue to call on the PRC to release individuals unjustly detained in Hong Kong, and to respect the human rights of all individuals in Hong Kong.

Question. It's been almost two years since Russia launched its brutal invasion of Ukraine. I have supported assistance in the past, but the path President Biden has set us on is unsustainable. There isn't a clear end state or objective, and our interests haven't been properly articulated to the American people. That said, if we just abandon them outright, it would send a signal that the U.S. is weak. We need to prioritize our efforts and avoid overstretch around the globe—something that would benefit China, our primary adversary. How do you view the war in Ukraine, and if confirmed, what actions will you take to support Ukraine?

Answer. Our goal is for Ukraine to emerge from this war as a democratic, independent, sovereign, and prosperous nation that can deter and defend itself against future aggression. If Ukraine achieves this objective, it will have won the war. U.S. leadership is indispensable to ensuring a strong response that protects our interests as well as those of our Allies and friends. Friends and foes alike are watching closely and will draw lessons about American power and resolve. A lapse in U.S. support for Ukraine would immediately impact Ukraine's performance on the battlefield, compromise NATO Allied security, affirm for Putin that he can wait out Ukraine's international supporters, and call into question our commitment to a free and fair international system far beyond Europe.

It is important to remember that U.S. troops are not fighting in Ukraine. Ukraine bears the brunt of this fight, and when Russia invaded, Ukraine's started this war with an army that was far weaker than that of Russia. And yet it has demonstrated its bravery, its determination, and the unbreakable spirit of its people on the battlefield time and again. Our strategy in Ukraine is to offset Russia's relative advantages by making Ukraine more capable on the battlefield through a mixture of advanced weaponry, training, and assistance.

If confirmed, I would work with our global coalition of more than 50 Allies and partners to ensure unity in our enduring support for Ukraine and its people as they defend their country against Russia's aggression. Security, economic, and humanitarian support are all critical to this effort. I would also focus on Ukraine's long-term success, supporting and encouraging progress on reforms needed to advance its Euro-Atlantic integration.

Question. How would you balance the Biden Administration's commitment to supporting Ukraine with other pressing needs, such as countering China in the Indo-Pacific?

Answer. As the President said, the United States is a great power and can manage both of these priorities while maintaining our national defense. We have the capacity and an obligation to do so at this inflection point in history. As the National Security Strategy states, the United States has a vital interest in deterring aggression by the PRC, Russia, and other states, which is why our strategy is one of integrated deterrence, with the PRC as our pacing challenge.

Question. In 2013, you founded The Asia Group, a consulting firm that offers to help companies break into markets across Asia, including the People's Republic of China. I have long called attention to the danger posed by firms like this, that often rely on maintaining friendly relations with the Chinese Communist Party as part of their business model. I understand that you left The Asia Group after being appointed to the National Security Council, but because NSC appointments are not Senate-confirmed, The Asia Group's decisions under your tenure have not been publicly scrutinized. Can you summarize for the committee the extent of your role while at The Asia Group, especially your connection to the group's office in Shanghai?

Answer. It was a matter of practice at The Asia Group during my tenure that we had no Chinese clients, did not work with Chinese companies, and had no interactions with the Chinese Communist Party. I left The Asia Group at the end of 2020, and it is my understanding that the company opened a small office in Shanghai in 2023, several years after I had left the firm.

I founded The Asia Group in 2013 after serving as Assistant Secretary of State for East Asia and Pacific Affairs with the express intent to support Americans in their business and commercial endeavors not in the People's Republic of China, but rather in the countries of allied and friendly partners across the Indo-Pacific. My time at the State Department made clear to me that as companies diversified their activities into key markets outside of the People's Republic of China, they required more assistance in understanding the foreign policy, domestic considerations, and regulatory environments in each of these countries. As such, my work centered on advising defense and security firms, advisory groups, academic institutions, accounting firms, insurance companies, and technology firms on engagements in Japan, the Republic of Korea, Taiwan, Australia, India, Singapore, and Indonesia.

Since joining the NSC as the Coordinator for Indo-Pacific Affairs, I recused myself from all activities associated with The Asia Group and the companies I engaged with during my tenure as Chairman and CEO of The Asia Group between 2013-2020. I have provided that list of companies from which I was formally recused to the Committee. I believe my work at The Asia Group with American companies in the markets of our allies and partners is fully consistent with and complimentary to my role in support of allies and partners around China first as Assistant Secretary of State for East Asia and Pacific Affairs and currently as Deputy Assistant to the President and Coordinator for Indo-Pacific Affairs.

Question. While at The Asia Group, did you meet with any senior members of the Chinese Communist Party, and did those contacts continue during your tenure at the National Security Council? If so, who?

Answer. No, to my knowledge I did not meet with any senior members of the Chinese Communist Party while at The Asia Group. In my current capacity as Coordinator for Indo Pacific Affairs at the National Security Council, as part of my duties, I occasionally meet with Chinese Communist Party officials in formal government-to-government settings. These meetings are always fully coordinated within the United States Government and are undertaken to advance issues of American foreign policy.

Question. Does The Asia Group have any ongoing contacts with senior members of the Chinese Communist Party?

Answer. Not to my knowledge, but I would need to refer you to The Asia Group for questions on their contacts. I have been recused from all contacts with any business or commercial matters related to the Asia Group since I left the firm at the end of 2020.

Question. On The Asia Group's website, under a heading touting the firms "results" is a mention of The Asia Group helping a "major U.S. financial company" to secure licensing approvals in China, while another celebrates efforts to secure "Chinese antitrust approval for a major multi-jurisdictional technology M&A transaction." Do you support American companies' participation in the Chinese economy, even if that means the transfer of advanced and sensitive technology that the Chinese could use against us in a future military conflict?

Answer. I have no knowledge of or involvement in the specific business matters referenced in the question as they pertain to a period after I left The Asia Group at the end of 2020. It was a matter of practice at The Asia Group during my tenure that we had no Chinese clients, did not work with Chinese companies, and had no interactions with the Chinese Communist Party. I was formally recused from any matters relating to The Asia Group upon joining the Administration in January 2021.

If confirmed, I will continue to support the Administration's actions to prevent the transfer of advanced and sensitive technology. As demonstrated by the Administration's unprecedented controls on advanced semiconductor chips, the Administration does not support American companies' participation in the transfer of advanced and sensitive technology that could be used for PRC military modernization. I was deeply involved in these decisions of the Administration to restrict certain technology flows to the People's Republic of China that might imperil U.S. national security. If confirmed, I intend to continue to build on these efforts and to support Administration policy at the State Department.

Question. Is the "major multi-jurisdictional technology" referenced on The Asia Group's website one of the critical technologies identified by the Biden Administration as subject to technology transfer restrictions to China?

Answer. I have no knowledge of these commercial interactions undertaken by The Asia Group as they pertain to activities that took place after I left the firm at the end of 2020. It was a matter of practice at The Asia Group during my tenure that we had no Chinese clients, did not work with Chinese companies, and had no interactions with the Chinese Communist Party. I would refer you to The Asia Group for questions on the details of their specific projects, including this project of which I was in no way involved.

Question. Our enemies seem to be strengthening alliances against the United States. Nicolas Maduro is scheduled to meet with Russian President Vladimir Putin this year, and Cuba's Diaz Canel met with the world's biggest supporter of terrorism and financial supporter of Hamas, Iran. Why isn't the Biden administration enforcing our diplomatic tools and reimpose targeted sanctions against these regimes?

Answer. The United States takes seriously malign actors' attempts to expand their activities in Venezuela and Cuba, including those of Russia and Iran. The United States will continue to coordinate with interagency partners and our allies to monitor and counter their activities in the region. I defer to the Treasury Department for any questions regarding U.S. sanctions or other sanctions enforcement questions.

Question. Why don't we expel their ambassadors and diplomats from the U.S.?

Answer. United States policy in Cuba and Venezuela remains focused on the well-being of their peoples. The United States continues to work with the international community to support democracy, the rule of law, and fundamental freedoms in both countries.

The United States will never stop raising our human rights and democracy concerns with the Cuban government and Maduro and his representatives, including by underscoring the importance of accountability for their officials involved in violations and abuses.

Question. In October, the Venezuelan opposition and the Maduro regime signed the Barbados agreement to provide a framework to hold general elections next year. As part of that agreement, the United States has reportedly agreed to lift broad sectoral sanctions on Venezuelan oil and gold, but reserved the right to reimpose those sanctions if, by November 30, 2023, Maduro did not return wrongfully detained American citizens, release Venezuelan political prisoners, and provide a way for Maria Corina Machado, the opposition's presidential nominee, to run in the election. It is now past the deadline, and Maduro has done nothing. Should sanctions be reimposed?

Answer. The Secretary of State welcomed the developments related to the Barbados electoral roadmap agreement, including the announcement of a process to reinstate all candidates and the release of five Venezuelan political prisoners. Nicolas Maduro and his representatives have yet to fully meet the expectations outlined in the Secretary's October 18 statement. I understand the United States will review its sanctions policy and, if adequate progress toward these commitments has not been made, intends to suspend some sanctions relief.

Question. If sanctions should not be re-imposed, then at what point should the U.S. reimpose sanctions?

Answer. It is my understanding the United States will continue to reevaluate its sanctions policy in coordination with Venezuelan democratic actors and international partners in response to positive steps by Maduro and his representatives toward a revitalization of democracy in Venezuela, including efforts to implement the October 17 Barbados Agreement. Likewise, I understand the United States intends to reassess and reimpose sanctions if Maduro and his representatives fail to follow through on its commitments.

Question. Should the U.S. keep in place sanctions imposed using the authorities of the 2014 Venezuelan Defense of Human Rights and Civil Society Act on Venezuelan officials responsible for human rights abuses beyond their expiration at the end of this year?

Answer. I understand it is the intention of the United States to continue to hold accountable those who seek to thwart the will of the Venezuelan people and commit human rights abuses. I understand the United States remains firmly committed to the Venezuelan people and will continue to work with the international community to support the restoration of democracy and the rule of law so that Venezuelans can rebuild their lives and their country.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO HON. KURT CAMPBELL BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question. Can you speak to how our relations with the European Union, its member states and NATO support our policy toward the PRC and the broader Indo-Pacific region? For example, can you speak to your coordination with EU President von der Leyen ahead of her visit to Beijing this week?

Answer. We are coordinating with our partners in Europe on the Indo-Pacific in unprecedented ways. The United States works closely with the EU, NATO, and bilaterally with member states and Allies to support our China and Indo-Pacific policies, including through the U.S.-EU China Dialogue, the U.S.-EU Consultations on the Indo-Pacific, the U.S.-EU Trade and Technology Council, and the meaningful PRC-focused policy work at NATO that informed discussions at last summer's Vilnius NATO Summit and will continue to drive forward work at the upcoming Washington NATO Summit. During the October 20 U.S.-EU Summit and in regular interactions with EU President von der Leyen, the United States and EU affirmed support for a free, open, and prosperous Indo-Pacific, and expressed shared interests in warning the PRC against providing lethal aid for Russia's war against Ukraine and opposing any unilateral attempts to change the status quo in the Taiwan Strait. Likewise, with NATO we are stepping up cooperation with our Indo-Pacific partners, including on cyber defense, emerging and disruptive technologies, resilience, and countering disinformation.

Question. If confirmed, can I receive your commitment to prioritize proactive engagement with European Union partners, especially on the Western Balkans?

Answer. I am committed to continuing the Administration's proactive engagement with the EU and its member states on our many shared priorities, including in the Western Balkans. Completing the European integration of the region will strengthen Europe as our partner and Ally in facing the full range of challenges to transatlantic security and prosperity. This requires our continued support for real reforms by Western Balkan aspirants tied to clear conditionality as part of their accession processes.

Question. It is the policy of the United States to prioritize the engagement of women in all matters of conflict prevention, mitigation and peace building. We now have a clear example of the risks of not including women in these processes, as the Taliban takeover of Afghanistan has demonstrated. If confirmed, how would you ensure that our Women, Peace and Security policies are incorporated into the U.S. response to conflict resolution and peace negotiations in a country like Sudan?

Answer. I understand that, though Women, Peace, and Security is a globally important agenda, it is far from reality in practice. While women were on the forefront of protests that led to the overthrow of dictatorship in Sudan, political processes to date have largely excluded women. If confirmed, I will work with the Office of Global Women's Issues, and others across the Department, to implement the U.S. Strategy and National Action Plan on Women, Peace, and Security; and advocate for women's meaningful participation to achieve a sustainable democratic transition in Sudan.

Question. I have long supported robust funding to the international family planning account and was pleased to secure long overdue increases for bilateral international family planning funding UNFPA accounts in the FY 24 Appropriations bill. It is one of the best investments we can make in global development. Research indicates that achieving universal access to contraception could result in long-term health and economic benefits worth $120 for each dollar spent on family planning. If confirmed, can I receive your commitment to continue to advocate for robust international family planning funding.

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue to support the U.S. role as the largest bilateral donor of global family planning assistance. The Administration remains committed to investing in client-centered sexual and reproductive health services that improve women's wellbeing, advance health outcomes, and promote gender equality. The United States supports the U.N. Population Fund (UNFPA), which plays a critical role in accelerating progress towards the Sustainable Development Goals related to improving access to sexual and reproductive health services, preventing maternal mortality, and ending gender-based violence.

Question. Can you share the Administration's plans for expected deliverables for the Washington Summit, particularly as it relates to NATO's relations with our Indo-Pacific partners?

Answer. The Administration is actively working to develop a robust set of 2024 Washington Summit deliverables. We look forward to engaging our Allies to finalize these deliverables in time for the Summit. NATO's Indo-Pacific partners are highly capable and share the Alliance's core values. We seek to further deepen the NATO-Indo-Pacific partner relationship by, among other things, inviting their leaders to the Summit, as we did at the Madrid and Vilnius Summits. Doing so would strengthen the linkages between Euro-Atlantic and Indo-Pacific democracies and further our shared understanding of the global threats and challenges we face.

Question. This week, President Erdogan commented that Congress should move forward on F-16's before Turkey ratifies Sweden's accession protocols. What does this tell about our bilateral relationship with Turkey if we cannot take them for their word? What are the next steps in the U.S.-Turkey relationship if Turkey does not ratify Sweden's accession protocols by the end of the year?

Answer. President Erdogan sent the measure to ratify the accession protocol for Sweden to the Turkish Parliament on October 27, and Turkey is moving forward on the approval of Sweden joining NATO. The Secretary has raised Sweden's accession with the Turkish Foreign Minister in every meeting over the past few months. We expect the Turks to stay faithful to the commitment President Erdogan made to President Biden in supporting Sweden's accession. If I am confirmed, Sweden's NATO accession will be a top priority if it has not been completed, and I will urge Turkey to finalize the accession protocol immediately. President Biden has long been clear he supports modernizing Turkey's F-16 fleet and believes it is in the best strategic interest of the United States and NATO.
